FIXING THE MINIMUM HEIGHT REQUIREMENT FOR COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE PHILIPPINE ARMY

[November 29, 1936]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I wish to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 1584, entitled “An Act to amend subsection(a) of section 22 of Commonwealth Act No. 1, known as the National Defense Act.” The proposed bill would fix the minimum height requirement for the commissioned officers of the Army at five feet, and this height is too low as compared with the average height of Filipinos today. The height of commissioned officers in the Army may be very well covered by interior regulation instead of by legislation.

Very respectfully,

[November 29, 1936]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have vetoed Bill No. 2198 of the National Assembly, entitled “Ley que reforma el articulo trece del Titulo Diez de la Ley Numero Dos mil sietecientos once, conocida por Codigo Administrativo Revisado, insertando un nuevo articulo entre los articulos dos mil quinientos quince y dos mil quinientos dieciseism y que se denominara articulo dos mil quinientos quince-A,” on the ground that it discriminates against fermented liquors manufactured in the United States. The National Assembly has just passed a tariff bill giving further protection to local manufactured fermented liquors. We are trying to secure from the United States better trade relations and it does not seem to me that it will be helpful for us to discriminate against American goods or articles.

Message of President Quezon on date of General Elections for Provincial and Municipal Officials, August 28, 1937

MESSAGE
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
DATE OF GENERAL ELECTIONS FOR PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS

[August 28, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have called you to this special session for the purpose of complying with a requirement of an existing law which you approved in the last session, in reference to provincial and municipal elections. In the said law you provided that the next general elections for provincial and municipal officials should be held in 1938 without specifying the date or even the probable month when, in your discretion, the elections should be held. It is proper to assume that it was not entirely out of your plans that the elections may be held early in 1938. Since under the Election Law in force, not less than 100 days, and perhaps more, will be required to comply with the requisites established by law for the holding of general elections, I deem it my duty to convene the National Assembly to this special session, and at this time so as to permit you to call the general elections on the first of January, 1938, or any day thereafter.

While the Constitution gives full discretion to the Chief Executive as to the time he will give from the day of the proclamation calling a special session to the day of the convening of the National Assembly, prudence dictates that as a rule, sufficient time should be allowed so as to enable every member of the National Assembly to be present at the opening of the special session. With better and quicker means of communications now existing in the Philippines, including air, not more than ten days for this purpose is necessary. It is evident that in this particular case I have convened the National Assembly to this special session on very short notice. But I have done it, first because the members of the National Assembly present in Manila who constitute more than two-thirds of the whole body and the provincial governors also present in the city have joined in the request that I call this special session without reference to said rule, and second, because I felt that under the circumstances, the rule may well be overlooked in the interest of the public. In any event, the few members of the National Assembly still in the provinces will have time to attend the sessions when the discussion of the measure takes place on the floor of the Assembly as there will always be some time used in the consideration of said measure by the corresponding committee.

I hope the National Assembly will also take advantage of this special session for the canvassing of the returns of the plebiscite on women's suffrage.

Respectfully,

ON

EMERGENCY APPROPRIATIONS FOR NEW SCHOOLS AND CLASSES

[August 30, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the need for an emergency appropriation with which to open new schools and classes under the Bureau of Education in order that those children of elementary school age who were refused admission in the schools last June because of lack of teachers and equipment may be properly accommodated.

I was informed that all classes that were in operation last year had been adequately provided for but that new classes had to be organized to take care of the increase in the school population. The Department of Public Instruction submitted a request for P1,000,000 and in a radiogram dated June 28th I authorized the said Department to obligate the sum requested for the organization of additional classes after the Honorable, the Vice-President, had advised me that in a conference with members of the National Assembly and other officials concerned all agreed that it was very necessary to organize new classes.

In view of the facts above set forth, I earnestly urge upon the National Assembly the immediate consideration and approval of an Act appropriating the sum of P1,000,000 for the extension of elementary instruction.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Repeal of Probation Law, September 1, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly on Repeal of Probation Law

[Released on September 1, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I hereby recommend that Act No. 4221 establishing probation for persons convicted of certain crimes by the courts of the Philippines be repealed.

The probation system is one of the fruits of the progress that has been achieved in the field of penology in recent years. It has proved to be not only humanitarian, but also an efficacious method of reclaiming offenders whose previous conduct gives reasonable expectation that they may become useful and worthy members of the community after they have been placed for some time under the supervision of the proper authorities. Every enlightened community should be guided in dealing with violators of the law, not by any desire to punish the offender in a spirit of revenge, but with a view to the protection of society and for the correction of the offender himself and the improvement of his own ways and outlook of life. In other words, I believe that the objective of criminal laws should be not only to impose respect for laws on the part of the citizen for fear of the consequences to his life or personal freedom, if for no other reason, but also to make a useful and law-abiding man out of one who was once a harmful member of the community.

The Philippines must have the probation system established here sometime; but the paramount consideration that should be borne in mind whenever a new governmental institution is to be inaugurated is whether, in practice, more good than evil is to be accomplished. In the establishment of the probation system we must see to it that the principle of equal administration of justice is maintained in all its purity and integrity—a principle that is the basic foundation of organized and civilized humanity. Unless we can administer the probation system fairly, equitably and intelligently throughout the Commonwealth, the probation system will not only fail to produce the benefits that are expected from it, but it will, moreover, do actual and serious harm. During the time that has elapsed since the enactment of Act No. 4221, experience has amply demonstrated that our probation law is very defective and has violated the basic principles above enumerated. And we cannot remedy the defects of the law by merely proceeding to amend it piecemeal, but through its immediate repeal and taking of the steps necessary to substitute for it a better law drawn in the light of the experience which we have acquired and in accordance with the characteristics of our people and the prevailing conditions in our community.

The law as it stands is discriminatory and unjust. It discriminates against citizens of the Philippines residing in the different provinces. But under the Act, the enforcement of the Probation Law is made to depend upon the willingness or ability of the provincial governments to appropriate the funds necessary for the payment of the salaries of the probation officers. No province in the Philippines has, up to this time, appropriated the necessary money for the salary of a probation officer, with the result that in no province are the benefits of probation available to convicts within the purview of the law. Only in the City of Manila may convicts, when so adjudged by the court, claim the right to have the benefits of probation applied to them. And this, not because the government of the City of Manila has appropriated the needed funds for this purpose, but because the National Government has created a probation office in Manila and is defraying the expenses of the probation officers here.

The failure, if not the refusal, of the provincial governments to appropriate funds for the salaries of probation officers in their respective provinces is a clear indication that public sentiment in the Philippines is not in favor of the system. In fact, there are persons who entertain serious doubts as to its necessity and who even believe that the system is contrary to the best interests of the administration of justice.

It may also be that the provincial governments do not have sufficient funds to maintain this new service. In any case, it is evident that the only way by which the probation system may be established and maintained with the beneficial results to be expected therefrom is for the National Government to shoulder the whole burden of the cost of the system throughout the Commonwealth. Unless the National Assembly is willing to vote the funds necessary for this purpose, in the face of the new responsibilities involved in preparing the country for complete national independence, the discrimination now existing in favor of the residents of the City of Manila and against the rest of the inhabitants of this county will continue indefinitely. Under no circumstances should this state of affairs be allowed to remain or continue. The most pernicious result of the present system is that it may give the impression that the government is favoring the rich as against the poor, not because the courts are more lenient to the rich but simply because such as those who may commit violations of the law and who would be entitled to the probation system might be residents of the City of Manila where a large portion of the rich population of the Islands live and where alone a probation court and probation officers exist. And this would certainly give the impression amongst the uninformed that the government discriminates in favor of the rich as against the poor.

It appears to me that bearing in mind all the circumstances, it would be undoubtedly in the interest of the administration of justice to have Act No. 4221 immediately repealed. After all, notwithstanding the repeal of said Act. The Chief Executive may, as facts and circumstances warrant, accord a convict the benefits of probation.

In the interim, I recommend that the National Assembly creates committee to study and draft a bill that will establish a probation system applicable to the entire Philippines and free from the defects I have mentioned.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Appropriation for Construction of Elementary School Buildings, September 3, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly on Appropriation for Construction of Elementary School Buildings

[Released on September 3, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Agreeably with the Constitutional provision that the Government shall provide at least-free public primary instruction, it is the aim of the present administration to adopt such measures as may be necessary to accommodate in time public schools, eventually all children of primary school age. One of the First requisites in the opening of new classes or the organization of new schools is the availability of adequate classrooms in which instruction may be efficiently imparted.

In view of the fact that most of the municipalities are not now in a financial condition to appropriate the funds needed for a program of school building construction, and since it is imperative that additional facilities for primary school children be provided as soon as possible, I have the honor to recommend that the National Assembly appropriate the sum of P5,000,000 as aid to the various municipalities for the construction of elementary school buildings. Funds for this purpose may be properly appropriated from the proceeds derived in the United States from the processing tax on coconut oil (Philippine Coconut Oil Trust Fund), accruing to the Philippine Treasury.

For the purpose of paragraph (2), section 12 of Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of any bill presented regarding this matter.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Expropriation proceeding for acquisition of large haciendas, September 3, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly on Expropriation proceeding for acquisition of large haciendas

[Released on September 3, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

One of the most important problems facing the government of the Commonwealth is the agrarian question which has been the root of past and present serious troubles in our country during the last fifty years or more. It is of general knowledge that one of the most potent factors in the uprising of our people against Spain was the ownership of large haciendas by the religious orders.

God has made land for the habitation and maintenance of men, not for its exploitation and control by a few for their own profit in disregard of the public wealth. The power of eminent domain which is vested in every state is only a recognition of the principle above enunciated for it derives from the fact that the state represents the nation as a whole or the men, women and children composing it. Various methods have been employed to reclaim the land from the big landlords and place it in the hands of the people,—those two would cultivate it. Then a class, family, or group has monopolized vast domains and the people thereby converted into mere serfs, history is replete with instances when in their wrath the people have revolted and by force deprived the landlords of their possessions. The Philippines is not the first country which has faced the land problem caused by the ownership of big estates. France during the French Revolution, Mexico upon the dawn-fall of the Diaz Regime, and Russia under the leadership of Lenin, to mention only a few cases, are witnesses to the human tragedy arising out of big landed ownership that has covered the pages of human progress with tears and blood, ruin and destruction.

We in the Philippines are not confronted with any such situation as has confronted the countries I have mentioned and others where the agrarian problem existed or exists. But there is enough here of the seed that may grow someday to menacing proportions so that we cannot be oblivious of, or close our eyes to, the disturbing situation confronting us. The platform upon which the executive and legislative officials of this Government have been elected contains a specific pledge that we shall solve this problem. I, myself, after my inauguration as Chief Executive, repeatedly assured the people in the name of the Coalition that this pledge shall be fulfilled. We have not been able to take efficacious steps so far towards the solution of the land problems for lack of the one essential—means funds—with which to acquire these big estates. From the proceeds of the oil tax in the United States (Philippine Coconut Oil Trust Fund) accruing to the Philippine Treasury, we can properly appropriate the necessary funds to solve this problem and it is our duty to do so forthwith.

It should be borne in mind, however, that we shall not have done all that is incumbent upon the Government to do by the mere acquisition of the big estates from their present owners and their subsequent sale to the tenants or actual occupants of the land. We may be doing nothing more than giving it a temporary solution, without assurance that the evil will not recur in the course of time, unless we make sure that the land so sold to these tenants and occupants will remain their hands or in those of their family and children. In order to insure this, a very complex problem presents itself for careful study and consideration. It will require time and the use of very competent men to devise a plan whereby; (a) the Government will not lose money in this transaction; (b) the people will not be heavily burdened by the acquisition of the land; (c) the land will be properly cultivated and remain in the hands of the new owners; and (d) that the execution of such a plan will be carried out efficiently and expeditiously. I, therefore, recommend:

1. That the National Assembly appropriate seven million pesos to be spent for the acquisition of the estates which, in the opinion of the Chief Executive, should be acquired in the public interest, and that the Chief Executive be empowered to enter into negotiations or order expropriation proceedings for the acquisition of these lands for their resale to the tenants or occupants;

2. That the Chief Executive be authorized to designate any existing department, bureau, office or instrumentality of the Government or to create out of the funds thus appropriated, a new office or agency to take charge of the administration of the lands so acquired and their resale to the people, such office or agency so designated or created to be granted all the authority necessary to accomplish the object of the law; and

3. That the Chief Executive report to the rational assembly from time to time the progress that has been made in this enterprise and the results accomplished.

It is necessary at this time that greater latitude be granted the Executive Department with regards to its powers in the prosecution of this undertaking to a successful conclusion, for we have not had time to devise plans upon which to base an appropriation in detail for submission to the National Assembly, and if we were to wait for the preparation of this plan, precious time will be lost.

For the purposes of paragraph (2), section 12 of Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of any bill presented regarding the matters treated therein.

Message of President Quezon on Heavy Penalty for Jueteng, September 3, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Heavy Penalty for Jueteng

[Released on September 3, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I deem it not only of great importance, but also of urgent necessity that an Act be immediately passed penalizing the game that is known in our country as “jueteng” with heavy imprisonment.

Gambling is doubtless one of the weaknesses of human nature that should be dealt with by governments with sound discretion; but “jueteng” is not gambling. It is merely an organized fraud—a fraud of such shocking proportions that it has become the greatest scandal in our community life. The worst victims of this criminal racketeering business are the poor. Its existence is of common knowledge, but it has been impossible to eradicate it because the penalty is either a small fine or a few days’ imprisonment.

For the purposes of paragraph (2), section 12 of Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the proposed measure.

Respectfully,

APPROPRIATION FOR EXTENSION OF ELEMENTARY

[September 3, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my message dated August 30, 1937, I invited your attention to the need for an emergency appropriation with which to open new schools and classes so as to accommodate those children of elementary school age who were refused admission in the schools last June, and for this purpose, I urged that an Act be approved appropriating the sum of P1,000,000 for the extension of elementary instruction. Since then, additional requests have been received for the organization of new classes. Upon further study of the situation, the Vice-President and Secretary of Public Instruction believes that an additional amount of P200,000 might be needed, and I, therefore, recommend that the original amount requested be increased to P1,200,000.

For the purposes of paragraph (2), section 12 of Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of this measure.

Message of President Quezon on the Creation of Office for Allotments of Philippine Sugar Quota, September 7, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On the creation of Office for allotments of Philippine Sugar Quota

[Released on September 7, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

On September 1, 1937, the President of the United States signed House of Representatives Bill No. 7667 of the United States Congress, now known as the Sugar Act of 1937. Section 205 (g) of the Act reads as follows:

“The Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall make allotments of any quota established for it pursuant to the provisions of this Act on the basis specified in section 6 (d) of Public Law Numbered 127, approved March 24, 1934.”

In view of the foregoing provision of the Sugar Act of 1937, the power heretofore exercised by the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands in connection with the allocation of the sugar quota for export to the United States now devolves upon the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines.

I, therefore, urge the enactment of the necessary legislation to authorize the Chief Executive to designate any existing department, bureau, office or instrumentality of the Government or to create a new office or agency to assume the responsibility and discharge the functions which the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States have seen fit to entrust into our hands. I, likewise, urge the appropriation of P200,000 to cover the necessary expenses incident to the proper functioning of the office or agency to be thus created or designated.

In due time, these matters will be submitted in greater detail to the National Assembly.

For the purposes of paragraph 2, section 12, Article VI of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of legislation on the matter referred to.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Full Payment of Pensions to Retired Officials and Employees, September 9, 1937

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

FULL PAYMENT OF PENSIONS TO RETIRED OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES

[September 9, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In your last regular session and upon the recommendation of the Chief Executive, you enacted Commonwealth Acts Nos. 187, 188 and 189, doing away with the pension systems in force in the Philippines prior to the inauguration of the Commonwealth, for officials and employees of the Bureau of Education, the Philippine Constabulary and the Philippine Health Service, respectively. The enactment of the above-mentioned Acts was imperatively demanded by the fact that the pension systems, as established through the creation in each case of a fund constituted by contributions in equal amount made by the beneficiaries of the funds on the one hand and the Government on the other, had proved to be in bankruptcy in the total amount of P89,000,000 in 1936, according to the official report of the actuaries of the Government of the United States and those of the Philippine Government, who had studied the financial status of the pension funds.

Considering the number of people affected by the different existing legislation at the time granting pensions to the officials and employees of the Bureau of Education, the Philippine Constabulary and the Philippine Health Service, it required of every member of the National Assembly an unusual moral courage and a very high sense of public duty to face the opposition which later developed against the abolition of the said pension systems. Indeed, it was, in my opinion, the first test and from the standpoint of its political effect, a crucial one, that the present members of the National Assembly had gone through where they had to choose between the demands of organized groups on the one hand, as against the interests of the nation at large on the other. The country is proud that the members of the National Assembly came out honorably from this test with their patriotism and sense of duty well established.

Considering the very precarious situation of the National Treasury at the time, the Government had, in certain cases, done all that it could do, and in others more than it had the duty to do, in its desire to render justice to the officials and employees involved. In the case of the teachers still in the service, they were given all the contributions that they had paid, plus interest at the rate of four per centum, compounded annually, together with the contribution which was promised by the Government. In each one of these cases, the Government was not obligated by law to return the money which was contributed by it and at most it was morally obligated to return the amount paid by the employees without interest. In the case of those who had complied with all the requirements of the law and who had actually been receiving their pensions, the Government was compelled to reduce the pension rates. It is with respect to these pensioners that, in my opinion, the Government has fallen short of what the pensioners had the right to expect from it, but there was at the time no alternative offered to the National Assembly since the revenues of the Government did not permit the payment of the old pensions in their entirety.

By an Act of the United States Congress enacted in consonance with an established policy consistently followed ever since the implantation of American sovereignty in the Philippines, of reverting to the Philippine Treasury the taxes collected in the United States on articles and goods imported from the Philippines, we have now in the general funds more than sufficient money to correct the injustice that has been committed against the said pensioners. It should be a rule of conduct equally followed by individuals as well as by nations, that whenever an injustice has been clone, full and immediate reparation should be undertaken. I, therefore, recommend that the National Assembly authorize a continuing appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to pay in full the amount of the pensions which, prior to November 1, 1936, had been paid to every and all retired officials, and employees and/or their beneficiaries, of the different pension systems then established in the Philippines.

For the purposes of paragraph (2), section 12. Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the proposed measure.

VETOING BILL NO. 2417 REVOKING THE PROBATION LAW

[September 13, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am constrained to veto Bill No. 2417, entitled “Ley derogando la Ley Número Cuatro mil doscientos veintiuno” because I entertain doubts as to whether the words—

read in conjunction with the subsequent provision of the bill will not be construed by the courts as already conferring the benefits of Act No. 4221 upon those who have applied for the benefits of said Act.

The repeal of the probation law has been recommended by me in a special message at the recent special session of the National Assembly. It was apparent from my message that I sought from the National Assembly the repeal of the law for cases that might come before the courts after the law has been repealed, and the need for such repeal was clearly demonstrated by the fact that it conferred in effect privileges to convicts by the courts of first instance of Manila which it did not confer to convicts sentenced by the courts of the provinces. It was beyond my intention and no reasonable person could possibly suspect the contrary, to ask of the National Assembly to deprive people who have already been convicted and who have applied for the benefits of the probation law, of any right or privilege that they may have had under the law prior to its repeal. Indeed, I am of the opinion that if the National Assembly were merely to repeal Act No. 4221 without any provision safeguarding the rights of those who are already enjoying the benefits of the probation law, or the rights that those who have already applied for the benefits of the probation law may have under that law should the courts determine that they had some rights, such repeal would not affect those rights as it is a fundamental and well-recognized principle amongst civilized governments that penal laws can have no retroactive effect. The repeal of the probation law, therefore, cannot possibly have invalidated the rights of any petitioner whose petition to have the benefits of the probation law applied to him was already before the courts if otherwise he was entitled to such benefits.

On the other hand, I cannot under any circumstance allow the conversion into law of any measure that might be interpreted as expressly granting a right or a privilege to a litigant when his petition for concession of such right or privilege is pending before the courts. This would be tantamount to an interference with the free acts of the courts on a case where they have already acquired jurisdiction. It would be a most dangerous precedent too, for it would permit the granting through legislative enactment of rights and privileges which under existing law are already being submitted to the courts for adjudication.

Much, therefore, as I wish to have stricken out from the statute books of the Commonwealth a law which I consider unfair and, very likely, unconstitutional, I prefer to have action on this subject deferred until the coming regular sessions of the National Assembly rather than take the risk of approving a bill which I fear may do more than what I have asked the National Assembly to do and what I believe the immense majority of the members of the National Assembly, at least, if not all, had no intention to do.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Vetoing Bill No. 2432, October 7, 1937

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
VETOING BILL No. 2432—APPROPRIATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ELEMENTARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS

[October 7, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2432 entitled “An Act appropriating the sum of five million pesos for elementary school buildings.”

Acting upon Resolution No. 73, adopted by the National Assembly on August 31, 1937, I sent to you my message dated September 3, 1937, recommending that the amount of five million pesos be appropriated from the proceeds derived in the United States from the processing tax on coconut oil accruing to the Philippine Treasury, as aid to the various municipalities for the construction of elementary school buildings. In view of the lack of time then to investigate the needs of each and every municipality, it was deemed advisable to appropriate the amount of five million pesos in lump sum, the same to be distributed by the Secretary of Public Instruction with the approval of the President of the Philippines. The idea was for the executive department of the Government to determine in each instance the propriety of allotting sums for the construction of elementary school buildings as the need of each municipality may arise.

The National Assembly decided, however, to approve this bill itemizing the different school projects in places that fall within the respective districts of each assemblyman. As the Assembly likewise lacked the material time to determine the needs of each municipality, the result was the approval of a bill which suffers from many fundamental defects, namely:

- (a) The bill appropriates a maximum amount of P5,000,000, but the total of the items as specified amounts to only P4,847,000, or a difference of P153,000. It is true that the bill provides that “in the provinces or districts where the projects are not itemized, the allotments thereof shall be subject to the approval of the President of the Philippines,” but this provision cannot be held applicable to the difference of P153,000 as the provinces or districts for which it is intended are not specified in the bill;
- (b) No amounts are provided in the bill for the provinces of Cotabato, Marinduque and Oriental Misamis; and
- (c) Items are provided for barrios or places in which there are at present no schools or which are very close to other schools or where no school sites are at present available.

It is with reluctance that I vetoed this bill because I know that most of the municipalities are not in a financial condition to appropriate the funds needed for a program of school building construction and considering that it is the aim of this administration to accommodate in the public schools eventually all children of school age, conformably with the constitutional provision on this matter. The National Assembly will, however, meet in its regular session within a few days, and will, therefore, have the opportunity to pass legislation that may be free from the defects pointed out above, after proper consultation with the necessary authorities regarding the needs of each municipality.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Manuel L. Quezon, Third State of the Nation Address, October 18, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Improvement of Philippine Conditions, Philippine Independence and Relations with American High Commissioner

[Delivered at the Opening of the Second Session of the National Assembly, in the Assembly Hall, Legislative Building, Manila on October 18, 1937]

Mr. Speaker, Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

At no time in ancient or contemporary history has Almighty God showered His blessings upon our beloved country as generously as He has done during this year that is about to close. In a spirit of humility and thankfulness to Him, I come to report to you that the finances of the Government are sounder than they have ever been, that our foreign and internal trade has increased, that more school houses and roads have been built and opened to the people, that public health is in good condition, and that peace and order prevail in every province, city, municipality, and barrio of the Archipelago.

In this year too, as the highest representative of our people, I have taken a step that is of the greatest moment to the Fatherland. In my recent trip abroad I proposed to the President of the United States that he recommend to the Congress the granting of complete independence to the Philippines either on the 30th of December 1938, or the 4th of July, 1939.

I feel certain that in making this petition I have expressed the views of the immense majority of our people and that it is better for us to be independent now, that is to say, as soon as the necessary steps could be taken for the orderly process of erecting an independent Republic, rather than in 1946.

I can see no valid reason why, if the Philippines can be given independence in 1946, she may not have it in 1938 or 1939. In the short span of seven years the Filipino people can hardly do anything that would substantially change their present situation. Any obstacle which would vitally affect the chances of a successful and lasting independent nationhood in 1939 cannot be overcome by 1946.

So, if we want independence at any cost and are ready to take all the consequences –the dangers as well as the advantages of independent national existence- let us have it no later than 1939. If, however, we are fearful of the possible threats that complete independence may offer to our national security, and we would rather remain under the protecting wing of the United States, then let us leave the final determination of our future to come coming generations and not deceive ourselves with the groundless hope that by 1946 we shall have become politically and economically beyond any serious difficulty.

We cannot be hesitating indefinitely. The best interest, indeed the very life, of the nation is at stake. If it is our resolve to be an independent nation, this is the time, for every year lost is to our evident disadvantage.

Our duty –the duty of the Executive and Legislative branches of the government- is plain. Under the Independence Act and the Constitution, the Government of the Commonwealth has been established to prepare the country for complete independence. Our people alone, by their own choice and direction, can command us to take a different course.

Since the news of my proposal to have the transition period shortened was published, voices in opposition to it have been heard both in public and in private. Let me say in all earnestness to those Filipinos who believe in good faith that the security, liberty, prosperity, and peace of our common country lie in some kind of political partnership with the United States rather than in complete independence, that they should say so frankly and come out courageously in the open with an alternative plan, instead of merely adopting dilatory tactics in the belief that when the fourth of July, 1946, shall have arrived, some unforeseen event will prevent the establishment of the Philippine Republic. They have nothing to fear: there is here freedom of thought and of speech, and one may be as much a patriot advocating some other political status for the Philippines as favoring complete independence so long as in advocating he is inspired not by selfish motives but by what he honestly believes is for the commonweal. As long as the essentials of freedom are not sacrificed –and they must not be sacrificed under any consideration- the formula for securing and enjoying it may well be debated upon.

It is true that from the point of view of a foreigner who does not intend to remain in the Philippines after independence shall have been granted and who is contemplating to liquidate his interests in this country, the remaining seven years may, perhaps, give him the opportunity to withdraw his investments. But, is this a sufficient reason to postpone the grant of independence if, on the other hand, it would be to the best permanent interests of the Filipino people to accelerate its grant? Is the future well-being of a whole nation to be sacrificed for the benefit of a few foreigners? Do these foreigners have any right to a special consideration?

From the very first day of America's occupation of the Philippines, she disclaimed any intention to permanently hold these Islands. Neither did she, in thus announcing to the whole world her intentions, ever give any promise either directly or by implication that she would not withdraw her sovereignty from her newly-occupied territory at a moment's notice. Therefore, foreigners who had investments in the Philippines when the United States took possession of the Islands, as well as those who came thereafter, knew full well that they were not placing themselves under the protection of the American flag except for as long a time only, and no longer, as the Government of the United States decided to retain the Philippines.

With more reason should these foreigners have known that the days of American sovereignty were numbered when, in 1916, the Jones Law was enacted, for it was solemnly and clearly declared in that law that the Philippines would be granted her independence as soon as a stable government could be established in this country. Since the question of the stability of a government is a matter of opinion, and in the case of the Government of the Philippines, the Congress alone has the right to determine the question, that pronouncement in the Jones Law was tantamount to a formal notice to all concerned that the United States might, at any time, leave the Islands to their own fate.

It is true that when the Independence Act was approved by the Congress in 1934, it was specifically provided therein that complete independence would be granted ten years following the inauguration of the Government of the Commonwealth; but the reports of the respective Committees and the speeches delivered upon the floor of both Houses of the Congress clearly show this was not a commitment addressed to foreigners having investments in the Philippines, but only to the Filipino people who, in the opinion of the Congress, might be seriously injured economically if their trade relations with the United States were abruptly terminated. If the Filipino people themselves are willing to have the date for the granting of independence advanced, there is nothing, expressed or implied, in the Independence Law that denies them the right to ask the Congress to shorten the transition period.

My main reason for asking that the independence of the Philippines be granted not later than the 4th of July, 1939, is that I am sincerely of the opinion that it will be to our best interests to secure independence during and under the administration of President Roosevelt. I know the President, his progressive and liberal ideas, his very deep sense of justice, and his friendship for and good will towards the Filipino people. I have no doubt that under his leadership we will receive from the Government of the United States the fairest treatment that we may ever expect to receive under the leadership of his successors. And if the Philippines were to become independent not later than the fourth of July, 1939, President Roosevelt would still have more than one full year to extend his helping hand to the new Philippine Republic in the early stages of its dealings as an independent nation both with the United States and the rest of the world. We could, indeed, find no better sponsor than President Roosevelt to usher the Philippines into the family of free nations.

Moreover, the experience of the last two years has shown that, although the avowed purpose of the ten-year transition period is to stabilize the trade relations between the United States and the Philippines, as provided in the Independence Act, so as to give the Filipino people a basis for making readjustments in their national economy preparatory to the change that complete independence would bring with it, there were tendencies in Congress to disregard the terms and conditions governing said trade relations even against the will of the Filipino people.

In proposing to President Roosevelt that he recommend to the Congress the shortening of the period for the grant of independence, I also asked that the present trade relations between the United States and the Philippines be continued for at least ten years after independence. If this were done and made a part of a treaty between the Government of the United States and the Philippine Republic the trade relations between the two countries would have been placed on a stable basis during the life of the treaty.

I know that there are people who believe that these trade relations only benefit the Philippines at the expense of the American people. As far as I am concerned, I would never ask from the United States anything that we could not reciprocate in kind. If you advocate the temporary continuance of the present trade relations between America and the Philippines it is because I am convinced that these trade relations are mutually beneficial to both countries.

There is another vital reason why the date for the granting of independence should be advanced. The present political set-up is untenable in that while America retains her sovereign authority over the Philippines, she, at the same time, has placed in the hands of the Filipino people the responsibility for laying down the foundations and erecting the structure of the Philippine Republic. The continuation of her sovereignty over the Philippines imposes upon America obligations she cannot shirk, and, correspondingly, it gives her rights that are incompatible with the free exercise of our judgment as to the best means that we should adopt to prepare ourselves for an independent national existence. Conflicts of views, and perhaps of interests, may arise during the coming next eight years that may create misunderstanding and ill-feelings between the American and Filipino peoples and mar the unprecedented record of perfect cooperation and goodwill between two dissimilar races which Fate has thrown together temporarily. As long as America was the sovereign authority and reserved for herself and exercised full power over, and assumed exclusive responsibility for, the Government of the Philippines, there was no occasion for conflict. Her word was then final in all matters of public policy, and our duty was merely to cooperate with her, as we did cooperate under her authority and direction.

Upon the establishment of the Government of the Commonwealth, however, the situation has changed materially. By an Act of Congress, we were given power to create our own government, controlled and managed by us, under a Constitution of our own making. It was the plain purpose of the Congressional enactment that the Filipino people, who were to become automatically independent in 1946, would, during the Commonwealth period, take such steps, as in their opinion would best ensure the stability and success of the Philippine Republic. Yet, the powers granted to the Government of the Commonwealth in the most important and essential functions of government, such as those affecting tariff, currency, finance, immigration, or those which in any way might involve the international obligations of the United States, etc., were subject to the ultimate approval of, or revocation by, the President of the United States.

It must be recognized, on the one hand, that America cannot, in fairness to herself, concede more governmental powers to the Commonwealth than she has granted without endangering her own interest and peace, nor on the other hand, can the Filipino people assume responsibility for their due preparation for independence with only such limited powers as have been vested in the Commonwealth Government. In this predicament, it were better for America and the Philippines to be independent of each other so that each may be free to act in the furtherance of her own national objectives and interests.

We have been fortunate indeed that so far the representatives of the President of the United States in the Philippines have been men of the highest character and integrity, of broad statesmanship, and of a clear vision of the task entrusted to them. You all know former High Commissioner Frank Murphy. His relations with us, not only as High Commissioner but also as Governor-General, have been very close and most cordial. In both capacities he has rendered permanent service to our people. In my last trip to America he has proven to me that his interest in our liberty and well-being is abiding.

The present United States High Commissioner has been but a few months in our midst. Some of his early acts were misrepresented or misunderstood. For a time there were some misgivings on the part of our people as to his attitude towards them and this Government. But nothing can dispel misunderstandings quicker than personal contact.

It is my pleasure and my duty to report to you –and what I am going to say is no mere gesture of official courtesy, but an honest and straight talk- that I could wish for no better United States High Commissioner in the Philippines than His Excellency, Paul V. McNutt. He measures up to his exalted position, both as an official and as a man. Indeed, it is a very difficult choice to make between Mr. McNutt, the man, and His Excellency, the High Commissioner.

Since my return, we have had some difficult problems to settle and I had occasion to appraise the true measure of him who now represents the President of the United States in the Philippines. He deserves our respect and affection. The best spirit of mutual cooperation characterizes our official association, and we have also become good friends. I feel confident that in serving his government and his country, High Commissioner McNutt will be of invaluable help to the Filipino people.

Happy and fruitful as our association with the American High Commissioner has been, I must state in all candor that these two short years of the life of the Commonwealth have already revealed some signs of the possibility of a serious conflict between the High Commissioner and the President of the Philippines in the performance of their respective duties even if each were desirous of avoiding such conflict. Perhaps there will always be found a way to arrive at some reasonable compromise as long as President Roosevelt is at the head of the American Government, and if his representative in our country were of the caliber of the two High Commissioners we have had until now; especially if the President of the Philippines understood American psychology and realized America's difficult situation during this twilight period of our nationhood. But who can foretell what will happen if another President should be in the White House, or a less sympathetic man should represent the President of the United States in the Philippines, or a Filipino President should be one entirely foreign to American ways or one-sided in his views of American-Filipino relations? The only sure remedy to this dangerous situation is to terminate it with the least possible delay.

No better evidence could have been given by President Roosevelt of his deep concern for the future welfare of our people than by the appointment of the Joint Preparatory Committee which is now sitting in conference in our country.

The following statement given out jointly by Mr. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, as Chairman of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, and myself on March 18, 1937, gives a complete idea of the reason for, and the object of, the creation of this Committee:

“Arrangements are being made for the appointment shortly of a joint preparatory committee of American and Philippine experts. The committee is to study trade relations between the United States and the Philippines and to recommend a program for the adjustment of Philippine national economy. This announcement followed conferences between President Quezon of the Philippine Commonwealth and the Inter-Departmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, which is acting on behalf of President Roosevelt in the preliminary discussions. Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre is Chairman of this Committee.

“Inasmuch as the Independence Act provides that complete political independence of the Philippines shall become effective on July 4, 1946, and inasmuch as President Quezon has suggested that the date of independence might be advanced to 1938 or 1939, it was agreed that the joint committee of experts would be expected in making its recommendations to consider the bearing which an advancement in the date of independence would have on facilitating or retarding the execution of a program of economic adjustment in the Philippines. It was further agreed that the preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines are to be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent with affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust their national economy. Thereafter, it is contemplated that trade relations between the two countries will be regulated in accordance with a reciprocal trade agreement on a non-preferential basis.”

The members of the Joint Committee appointed by the Inter-Departmental Committee with the approval of President Roosevelt and by me are the following:

His Excellency, the United States Ambassador to Turkey, Hon. John Van A. MacMurray, Chairman of the Committee.

American Group		Philippine Group
Joseph E. Jacobs	Vice Chairman of the Committee and Chairman of the American Group. Mr. Jacobs is Chief of the Office of Philippine Affairs, Department of State.	Jose Y. M. Y. Philipp
Louis Domeratzky	Chief, Division of Regional Information, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.	Conrad
Lynn R. Edminster	Chief Economic Analyst, Division of Trade Agreements, Department of State.	Joaquin
Col. Donald C. McDonald	Assistant to the Chief, Bureau of Insular Affairs, War Department.	Quintin
Carl Robbins	Chief, Sugar Section, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Department of Agriculture.	Jose E.
Frank A. Waring	Senior Economist, United States Tariff Commission.	Manuel

Ben Dorfman of the United States Tariff Commission and Benito Razon, Economic Adviser to the President, were later on appointed to the Committee as alternates.

This Committee held hearings in Washington, San Francisco, and Manila; and it also visited most of the provinces of the Philippines to secure first-hand information that would be valuable to the members of the Committee in making their report and final recommendation on the task entrusted to them.

After this Committee shall have submitted its report, it is my purpose to reiterate my petition that the granting of complete independence to the Philippines be advanced either to the 30th of December, 1938, or to the 4th of July, 1939, unless the National Assembly, during its present session, should express a contrary opinion.

Social Justice

Let me now turn your attention to our most immediate economic and social problems. The Philippines has undoubtedly made great strides both in the field of politics and of economics during the last three decades. Politically, we have reached the point where we are –having an almost entirely autonomous government and the assurance of complete independence. Economically, we have become an important factor in American commerce; our foreign and domestic trade has multiplied –in a word, the national wealth has greatly increased. We have accomplished, too, considerable progress in sanitation, in education, in the construction of roads and all kinds of communications, and we have acquired the modern conveniences of life. But the main beneficiaries of this most remarkable progress are the rich and the middle class. The rich can live in extravagant luxury. Some of their offspring grow up in an atmosphere of ease, with an outlook on life which gives paramount importance to society affairs, vanities, trivialities and material possessions, devoid of discipline, love for work or human sympathy. The middle class have attained a higher standard of living as compared with that prevailing during the Spanish regime. The comforts of present-day civilization are within their reach and they are enjoying them. Their sons and daughters are better-fed, better clothed, better educated –thousands upon thousands of them are now receiving the benefits of higher instruction.

Sad to tell, but it is none the less true, the same cannot be said of our laboring population. The men and women who till the soil or work in the factories are hardly better off now than they were during the Spanish regime. Of course, wages are higher than in any other Oriental country, with the possible exception of Japan. But it should be remembered that money could buy more in those Spanish days than it can now; and furthermore in the relationship between employer and employee in the days of old there was a consideration of higher value to the employee than the monetary compensation itself. Of yore employers and employees lived in personal contact and association resembling that which exists amongst members of the same family so that ties of affection bound them together much more than material considerations. Now this no longer obtains for their relationship is almost as impersonal and detached as that existing between employers and employees in highly industrialized countries. Again, our ancestors, because of their greater ignorance, knew no better and were resigned to their hard life, believing that it was a part of the world order as decreed by Divine Will, so that the unfortunate sufferer may meet with a greater reward in Heaven.

Now the Filipino workingman, however illiterate, refuses to believe that the Creator of the Universe could have ordained that some of His creatures should live in luxury and plenty, while others, in destitution and misery. The Filipino laborer now knows that the Father of mankind loves him as much as every other human being, and, therefore, that the world has not been made for the benefit of a few, but for the happiness of all.

Still more: The Filipino workingman has heard, if he is not able to read, of the equality before the law of the poor and the rich. He has heard of democracy, liberty, and justice, since every candidate for an elective office discourses on these topics, painting to him in glowing terms the meaning of these words.

And yet, what does he actually see? How do these doctrines that he has heard propounded from the platforms affect his everyday life? His hopes have been raised, his vision has been broadened, and his outlook has been painted in bright colors. But thirty-five years of American regime has brought him only disappointments and, sometimes, despair.

Has the progress then made by the Philippines benefited our poorer population? The poor still has to drink the same polluted water that his ancestors drank for ages. Malaria, dysentery, and tuberculosis still threaten him and his family at every turn. His children cannot all go to school, or if they do, they cannot even finish the whole primary instruction for one reason or another.

Roads from his barrio or his little farm to the town there are none. Only trails are within his reach –trails that have been formed by the daily pressure of his bare feet and not because they have been constructed. As he works from sunrise to sundown, his employer gets richer while he remains poor. He is the easy prey of the heartless usurer because usury is still rampant everywhere despite legislative enactments intended to suppress it.

That is, concisely speaking, the lot of the common man in our midst, after America's long endeavor to give to all fair opportunity in the pursuit of happiness and the enjoyment of life.

It was, of course, impossible for American administrators to see and reach the lowest strata of our population. But now that the reins of government are in our hands in so far as our own domestic affairs are concerned, what excuse, what reasonable justification can there be in allowing such a social and economic order to continue?

It is high time that all the branches of this Government cooperate with one another, and with them the whole community and every good-hearted man and woman, so that at last in this dear land of ours social justice –real justice- in the relations of man to man, may reign supreme.

Our people are patient and law-abiding. They love peace. They have not lost their faith either in the executive, the legislative, or the judicial branch of the Government. As the Government is now in the hands of their own countrymen, they have become hopeful and are placing the realization of their dream for a better day in our clearer understanding of their lot, our better knowledge of conditions prevailing in the country, and in what should be the natural craving of our hearts to serve them with all the power at our command –they who are flesh of our flesh and blood of our blood.

The promotion of social justice by the State is a clear and categorical mandate of our Constitution. Our platform, the platform upon which you and I have been elected, imposes upon us the high duty of enacting measures that will improve the living conditions of the laborer and of carrying these measures into effect. We must see that laws are enacted which will not permit the exploitation of the employee by his employer and which will leave no loopholes that may be used to defeat the ends of justice. We must rely for the security of this new nation, not so much upon the might of brute force, but upon the undivided loyalty of every citizen to the Government –a loyalty founded upon individual consciousness that this Government is his, and that it exists only for his protection, for his liberty, and for his happiness.

Both the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor are ready to help you in the preparation of the measures that are required to fill the gap that may be found in our existing legislation, for the purpose of correcting prevailing social evils and of carrying into effect the provisions of the Constitution as well as the commitments in our platform.

The Proceeds of the Excise Tax on Oil

Fortunately for us a new source of income has come to our hands that will facilitate the carrying out of our program of social justice and economic readjustment. From the proceeds of the excise tax on oil there has been accumulated up to the end of June, 1937, the sum of P96,507,227.30 in the Federal Treasury, the transfer of which amount to the Treasury of the Philippines I had secured before I left America on my last trip. This sum is now available for appropriation, the understanding with the Treasury Department of the United States being that out of that fund, P10,000,000 will be available upon thirty days' notice and the balance upon ninety days' notice.

The final decision as to how this fund shall be spent is, of course, yours. But in the exercise of my constitutional prerogative I shall take the liberty of making some suggestions regarding the purposes for which this money should be spent.

The first thing that we must bear in mind is that this fund does not constitute an ordinary income of the Government upon which we may depend for recurring obligations. When independence shall have been granted, this source of our income will cease. Were we to defray from this fund services that we cannot maintain once this income is terminated, we would have thrown away the money thus spent. We must, therefore, limit the use of this fund for national objectives, for purposes where the greater good may be derived by the Filipino people.

Concretely, I recommend that this fund be devoted to the following purposes:

1. To improve sanitary conditions of centers of population by constructing water systems or artesian wells.
2. For combating malaria where there is assurance that it can be done at a reasonable expense.
3. For the prevention of tuberculosis and the establishment of more sanitoriums, as it is well known that the white plague is the worst scourge afflicting our race.
4. For the building of new leprosariums which will permit lepers in the early stage of the disease to be treated where they may be easily reached by their families, thus making their isolation less tragic.
5. For extending free dispensary service to the poor not only in centers of population but also in outlying barrios and communities.
6. For building public schools in every barrio where there is a sufficient number of children justifying the opening of the school.

In this connection, I desire to state that it was with great reluctance that I vetoed the bill passed in your last sessions appropriating funds for school buildings. A subcommittee of the Committee on Public Instruction came to see me to secure my approval to a measure that would appropriate P5,000,000 for school buildings even before approving the regular budget of the Government. The Department of Public Instruction is now ready to furnish you with all the necessary information.

The Constitution imposes upon the Government of the Philippines the duty to give every boy and girl of school age the opportunity to receive primary instruction. As soon as there are sufficient school buildings to accommodate all the school-age population of the Philippines and permanent means for supporting the schools have been created, there should be implanted here, in my opinion, compulsory universal primary instruction. In the meantime we should make it compulsory for every boy and girl who is now in our public schools, and those who may be admitted next year and thereafter to remain in school during the period required for the entire primary instruction. Means should be immediately provided to carry this policy into effect.

One of the discoveries which we have made since the establishment of the Government of the Commonwealth is that, despite the large number of children that have gone through our public schools, as shown in the reports of the Bureau of Education, the literacy of the Islands has not increased proportionally, and the knowledge of those rudimentary subjects which the citizen of a democracy should have, has not been acquired by a population corresponding to the number of children that appear to have entered the public schools. The reason for this is simple. A large proportion of the boys and girls who have been admitted to the schools have not remained long enough to acquire any kind of useful knowledge.

7. For opening national highways and helping in the construction of provincial and even barrio roads whenever the respective provinces and municipalities pledge themselves to maintain the roads thus constructed, and in the case of barrio roads, where the volume of traffic on said roads also justifies their construction.

8. For the construction of office buildings for the National Government so as to reduce, if not eliminate, the continuous expense in rents.

9. For the purchase of large landed estates and their resale in small lots to the actual occupants thereof.

We are committed to the policy of acquiring the haciendas which, in the opinion of the Government, should be subdivided in small lots and resold to the tenants actually working on said lots. In a message to the National Assembly in its first regular session, I stated that we were not in a position to redeem this pledge, not only because we had no funds with which to purchase these estates, but also because I feared that we would only be transferring the trouble faced by the owners of these estates to the Government itself. Since then we have come into this fund accruing to the Commonwealth from the processing tax on oil, and I deem it proper and wise to use a part of it for the acquisition of these haciendas. In order that the Government may accomplish its objective more completely this time than when it brought the Friar lands, I have appointed a committee to study the whole question in its varied aspects with instructions to submit its recommendations not later than November 15, 1937. As soon as the committee submits its report, I shall refer the same to the National Assembly for such action as you may deem proper and expedient in the light of the recommendations therein contained.

10. For the development of water power, the reforestation of denuded areas, the colonization and development of Mindanao; and

11. For the financing of a long range program of economic adjustments necessary to prepare the country for the new situation attending the grant of our independence, including the establishment of new industries which at the same time will give work to the unemployed.

It is expected that the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs will include in its report a well considered program of economic adjustments to supplement its recommendation on future American-Philippine trade relations. As soon as this report has been received by me it will be immediately submitted to you for your consideration.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly, before closing, allow me to emphasize the need to of giving the common man in the Philippines the benefits that the citizenry of every progressive democracy is entitled to receive. I am sure that every one of you will give to this noble task the best that is in him. An opportunity has been offered us that no past or coming generation has had or will ever have –that of creating a nation where there will be no privileged class, where poverty will be unknown, where every citizen will be duly equipped with the knowledge that will enable him to perform his duties and to exercise his rights properly and conscientiously, and where every man, woman, and child his fireside will be thankful to God for living in this beautiful and blessed land.

Message of President Quezon on improvement of Philippine conditions, Philippine Independence, and Relations with American High Commissioner, October 18, 1937

Message
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On improvement of Philippine conditions, Philippine Independence, and Relations with American High Commissioner

[Delivered in the Assembly Hall, Legislative Building, October 18, 1937]

Mr. Speaker, Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

At no time in ancient or contemporary history has Almighty God showered His blessings upon our beloved country as generously as He has done during this year that is about to close. In a spirit of humility and thankfulness to Him, I come to report to you that the finances of the Government are sounder than they have ever been, that our foreign and internal trade has increased, that more school houses and roads have been built and opened to the people, that public health is in good condition, and that peace and order prevail in every province, city, municipality, and barrio of the Archipelago.

In this year too, as the highest representative of our people, I have taken a step that is of the greatest moment to the Fatherland. In my recent trip abroad I proposed to the President of the United States that he recommend to the Congress the granting of complete independence to the Philippines on either the 30th of December, 1938, or the 4th of July, 1939.

I feel certain that in making this petition I have expressed the views of the immense majority of our people and that it is better for us to be independent now, that is to say, as soon as the necessary steps could be taken for the orderly processes of erecting an independent Republic, rather than in 1946.

I can see no valid reason why, if the Philippines can be given independence in 1946, she may not have it in 1938 or 1939. In the short span of seven years the Filipino people can hardly do anything that would substantially change their present situation. Any obstacle which would vitally affect the chances of a successful and lasting independent nationhood in 1939 cannot be overcome by 1946.

So, if we want independence at any cost and are ready to take all the consequences—the dangers as well as the advantages of independent national existence—let us have it not later than 1939. If, however, we are fearful of the possible threats that complete independence may offer to our national security, and we would rather remain under the protecting wing of the United States, then let us leave the final determination of our future to coming generations and not deceive ourselves with the groundless hope that by 1946 we shall have become politically and economically beyond any serious difficulty.

We cannot be hesitating indefinitely. The best interest, indeed the very life, of the nation is at stake. If it is our resolve to be an independent nation, this is the time, for every year lost is to our evident disadvantage.

Our duty—the duty of the Executive and Legislative branches of the government—is plain. Under the Independence Act and the Constitution, the Government of the Commonwealth has been established to prepare the country for complete independence. Our people alone, by their own choice and direction, can command us to take a different course.

Since the news of my proposal to have the transition period shortened was published, voices in opposition to it have been heard both in public and in private. Let me say in all earnestness to those Filipinos who believe in good faith that the security, liberty, prosperity, and peace of our common country lie in some kind of political partnership with the United States rather than in complete independence, that they should say so frankly and come out courageously in the open with an alternative plan, instead of merely adopting dilatory tactics in the belief that when the fourth of July, 1946, shall have arrived, some unforeseen event will prevent the establishment of the Philippine Republic. They have nothing to fear: there is here freedom of thought and of speech, and one may be as much a patriot advocating some other political status for the Philippines as favoring complete independence so long as in so advocating he is inspired not by selfish motives but by what he honestly believes is for the commonweal. As long as the essentials of freedom are not sacrificed,—and they must not be sacrificed under any consideration,—the formula for securing and enjoying it may well be debated upon.

It is true that from the point of view of a foreigner who does not intend to remain in the Philippines after independence shall have been granted and who is contemplating to liquidate his interests in this country, the remaining seven years may, perhaps, give him the opportunity to withdraw his investments. But, is this a sufficient reason to postpone the grant of independence if, on the other hand, it would be to the best permanent interests of the Filipino people to accelerate its grant? Is the future well-being of a whole nation to be sacrificed for the benefit of a few foreigners? Do these foreigners have any right to a special consideration?

From the very first day of America's occupation of the Philippines, she disclaimed any intention to permanently hold these Islands. Neither did she, in thus announcing to the world her intentions, ever give any promise either directly or by implication that she would not withdraw her sovereignty from her newly-occupied territory at a moment's notice. Therefore, foreigners who had investments in the Philippines when the United States took possession of the Islands, as well as those who came thereafter, knew full well that they were not placing themselves under the protection of the American flag except for as long a time only, and no longer, as the Government of the United States decided to retain the Philippines.

With more reason should these foreigners have known that the days of American sovereignty were numbered when, in 1916, the Jones Law was enacted, for it was solemnly and clearly declared in that law that the Philippines would be granted her independence as soon as a stable government could be established in this country. Since the question of the stability of a government is a matter of opinion, and in the case of the Government of the Philippines, the Congress alone has the right to determine that question, that pronouncement in the Jones Law was tantamount to a formal notice to all concerned that the United States might, at any time, leave the Islands to their own fate.

It is true that when the Independence Act was approved by the Congress in 1934, it was specifically provided therein that complete independence would be granted ten years following the inauguration of the Government of the Commonwealth; but the reports of the respective Committees and the speeches delivered upon the floor of both Houses of the Congress clearly show that this was not a commitment addressed to foreigners having investments in the Philippines, but only to the Filipino people who, in the opinion of the Congress, might be seriously injured economically if their trade relations with the United States were abruptly terminated. If the Filipino people themselves are willing to have the date for the granting of independence advanced, there is nothing, expressed or implied, in the Independence Law that denies them the right to ask the Congress to shorten the transition period.

My main reason for asking that the independence of the Philippines be granted not later than the 4th of July, 1939, is that I am sincerely of the opinion that it will be to our best interests to secure independence during and under the administration of President Roosevelt. I know the President, his progressive and liberal ideas, his very deep sense of justice, and his friendship for and good will towards the Filipino people. I have no doubt that under his leadership we will receive from the Government of the United States the fairest treatment that we may ever expect to receive under the leadership of his successors. And if the Philippines were to become independent not later than the fourth of July, 1939, President Roosevelt would still have more than one full year to extend his helping hand to the new Philippine Republic in the early stages of its dealings as an independent nation both with the United States and the rest of the world. We could, indeed, find no better sponsor than President Roosevelt to usher the Philippines into the family of free nations.

Moreover, the experience of the last two years has shown that, although the avowed purpose of the ten-year transition period is to stabilize the trade relations between the United States and the Philippines, as provided in the Independence Act, so as to give the Filipino people a basis for making readjustments in their national economy preparatory to the change that complete independence would bring with it, there were tendencies in Congress to disregard the terms and conditions governing said trade relations even against the will of the Filipino people.

In proposing to President Roosevelt that he recommend to the Congress the shortening of the period for the grant of independence, I also asked that the present trade relations between the United States and the Philippines be continued for at least ten years after independence. If this were done and made a part of a treaty between the Government of the United States and the Philippine Republic the trade relations between the two countries would have been placed on a stable basis during the life of the treaty.

I know that there are people who believe that these trade relations only benefit the Philippines at the expense of the American people. As far as I am concerned, I would never ask from the United States anything that we could not reciprocate in kind. If I advocate the temporary continuance of the present trade relations between America and the Philippines it is because I am convinced that these trade relations are mutually beneficial to both countries.

There is another vital reason why the date for the granting of independence should be advanced. The present political set-up is untenable in that while America retains her sovereign authority over the Philippines, she, at the same time, has placed in the hands of the Filipino people the responsibility for laying down the foundation and erecting the structure of the Philippine Republic. The continuance of her sovereignty over the Philippines imposes upon America obligations that she cannot shirk, and, correspondingly, it gives her rights that are incompatible with the free exercise of our judgment as to the best means that we should adopt to prepare ourselves for an independent national existence. Conflicts of views, and perhaps of interests, may arise during the coming next eight years that may create misunderstanding and ill-feelings between the American and Filipino peoples and mar the unprecedented record of perfect cooperation and goodwill between two dissimilar races which Fate has thrown together temporarily. As long as America was the sovereign authority and reserved for herself and exercised full power over, and assumed exclusive responsibility for, the Government of the Philippines, there was no occasion for conflict. Her word was then final on all matters of public policy, and our duty was merely to cooperate with her, as we did cooperate under her authority and direction.

Upon the establishment of the Government of the Commonwealth, however, the situation has changed materially. By an Act of the Congress, we were given power to create our own government, controlled and managed by us, under a Constitution of our own making. It was the plain purpose of the Congressional enactment that the Filipino people, who were to become automatically independent in 1946, would, during the Commonwealth period, take such steps, as in their opinion would best insure the stability and success of the Philippine Republic. Yet, the powers granted to the Government of the Commonwealth in the most important and essential functions of government, such as those affecting tariff, currency, finance, immigration, or those which in any way might involve the international obligations of the United States, etc., were subject to the ultimate approval of, or revocation by, the President of the United States.

It must be recognized, on the one hand, that America cannot, in fairness to herself, concede more governmental powers to the Commonwealth than she has granted without endangering her own interest and peace, nor, on the other hand, can the Filipino people assume responsibility for their due preparation for independence with only such limited powers as have been vested in the Commonwealth Government. In this predicament, it were better for America and the Philippines to be independent of each other so that each may be free to act in the furtherance of her own national objectives and interests.

We have been fortunate indeed that so far the representatives of the President of the United States in the Philippines have been men of the highest character and integrity, of broad statesmanship, and of a clear vision of the task entrusted to them. You all know former High Commissioner Frank Murphy. His relations with us, not only as High Commissioner but also as Governor-General, have been very close and most cordial. In both capacities he has rendered permanent service to our people. In my last trip to America he has proven to me that his interest in our liberty and well-being is abiding.

The present United States High Commissioner has been but a few months in our midst. Some of his early acts were misrepresented or misunderstood. For a time there were some misgivings on the part of our people as to his attitude towards them and this Government. But nothing can dispel misunderstandings quicker than personal contact.

It is my pleasure and my duty to report to you,—and what I am going to say is no mere gesture of official courtesy, but an honest and straight talk—that I could wish for no better United States High Commissioner in the Philippines than His Excellency, Paul V. McNutt. He measures up to his exalted position, both as an official and as a man. Indeed, it is a very difficult choice to make between Mr. McNutt, the man, and His Excellency, the High Commissioner.

Since my return, we have had some difficult problems to settle and I had occasion to appraise the true measure of him who now represents the President of the United States in the Philippines. He deserves our respect and affection. The best spirit of mutual cooperation characterizes our official association, and we have also become good friends. I feel confident that in serving his government and his country, High Commissioner McNutt will be of invaluable help to the Filipino people.

Happy and fruitful as our association with the American High Commissioners has been, I must state in all candor that these two short years of the life of the Commonwealth have already revealed some signs of the possibility of a serious conflict between the High Commissioner and the President of the Philippines in the performance of their respective duties even if each were desirous of avoiding such conflict. Perhaps there will always be found a way to arrive at some reasonable compromise as long as President Roosevelt is at the head of the American Government, and if his representative in our country were of the calibre of the two High Commissioners we have had until now; especially if the President of the Philippines understood American psychology and realized America's difficult situation during this twilight period of our nationhood. But who can foretell what will happen if another President should be in the White House, or a less sympathetic man should represent the President of the United States in the Philippines, or a Filipino President should be one entirely foreign to American ways or one-sided in his views of American-Filipino relations? The only sure remedy to this dangerous situation is to terminate it with the least possible delay.

THE JOINT PREPARATORY COMMITTEE

No better evidence could have been given by President Roosevelt of his deep concern for the future welfare of our people than by the appointment of the Joint Preparatory Committee which is now sitting in conference in our country.

The following statement given out jointly by Mr. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, as Chairman of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, and myself on March 18, 1937, gives a complete idea of the reason for, and the object of, the creation of this Committee:

“Arrangements are being made for the appointment shortly of a joint preparatory committee of American and Philippine experts. The committee is to study trade relations between the United States and the Philippines and to recommend a program for the adjustment of Philippine national economy. This announcement followed conferences between President Quezon of the Philippine Commonwealth and the Inter-Departmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, which is acting on behalf of President Roosevelt in the preliminary discussions. Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre is Chairman of this Committee.

“Inasmuch as the Independence Act provides that complete political independence of the Philippines shall become effective on July 4, 1946, and inasmuch as President Quezon has suggested that the date of independence might be advanced to 1938 or 1939, it was agreed that the joint committee of experts would be expected in making its recommendations to consider the bearing which an advancement in the date of independence would have on facilitating or retarding the execution of a program of economic adjustment in the Philippines. It was further agreed that preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines are to be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent with affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust their national economy.

Thereafter, it is contemplated that trade relations between the two countries will be regulated in accordance with a reciprocal trade agreement on a non-preferential basis.”

The members of the Joint Committee appointed by the Inter-Departmental Committee with the approval of President Roosevelt and by me are the following:

His Excellency, the United States Ambassador to Turkey, Hon. John Van A. MacMurray, Chairman of the Committee.

AMERICAN GROUP	PHILIPPINE GROUP
JOSEPH E. JACOBS Vice Chairman of the Committee and Chairman of the American Group. Mr. Jacobs is Chief of the Office of Philippine Affairs, Department of State.	JOSE YULO Vice Chairman of the Committee and Chairman of the Philippine Group. Mr. Yulo is Secretary of Justice of the Philippine Commonwealth.
LOUIS DOMERATZKY Chief, Division of Regional Information, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Depart- ment of Commerce.	CONRADO BENITEZ Dean, College of Business Administi Philippines.
LYNN R. EDMINSTER Chief Economic Analyst, Division of Trade Agreements, Department of State.	JOAQUIN M. ELIZALDE Member of the National Economic Council.
COL. DONALD C. MCDONALD Assistant to the Chief, Bureau of Insular Affairs, War Department.	QUINTIN PAREDES Resident Commissioner for the Philippines.
CARL ROBBINS Chief, Sugar Section, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Department of Agriculture.	JOSE E. ROMERO Floor Leader, Majority Party in the National Assembly.
FRANK A. WARING Senior Economist, United States Tariff Commission.	MANUEL ROXAS Floor Leader, Minority Party in the National Assembly.

Ben Dorfman of the United States Tariff Commission and Benito Razon, Economic Adviser to the President, were later on appointed to the Committee as alternates.

This Committee held hearings in Washington, San Francisco, and Manila; and it also visited most of the provinces of the Philippines to secure first-hand information that would be valuable to the members of the Committee in making their report and final recommendation on the task entrusted to them.

After this Committee shall have submitted its report, it is my purpose to reiterate my petition that the granting of complete independence to the Philippines be advanced either to the 30th of December, 1938, or to the 4th of July, 1939, unless the National Assembly, during its present session, should express a contrary opinion.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

Let me now turn your attention to our most immediate economic and social problems. The Philippines has undoubtedly made great strides both in the field of politics and of economics during the last three decades. Politically, we have reached the point where we are—having an almost entirely autonomous government and the assurance of complete independence. Economically, we have become an important factor in American commerce; our foreign and domestic trade has multiplied—in a word, the national wealth has greatly increased. We have accomplished, too, considerable progress in sanitation, in education, in the construction of roads and all kinds of communications, and we have acquired the modern conveniences of life. But the main beneficiaries of this most remarkable progress are the rich and the middle class. The rich can live in extravagant luxury. Some of their offspring grow up in an atmosphere of ease, with an outlook on life which gives paramount importance to society affairs, vanities, trivialities and material possessions, devoid of discipline, love for work or human sympathy. The middle class have attained a higher standard of living as compared with that prevailing during the Spanish regime. The comforts of present-day civilization are within their reach and they are enjoying them. Their sons and daughters are better fed, better clothed, better educated,—thousands upon thousands of them are now receiving the benefits of higher instruction.

Sad to tell, but it is none the less true, the same cannot be said of our laboring population. The men and women who till the soil or work in the factories are hardly better off now than they were during the Spanish régime. Of course, wages have increased as compared with those paid when we were under the sovereignty of Spain; and these wages are higher than in any other Oriental country, with the possible exception of Japan. But it should be remembered that money could buy more in those Spanish days than it can now; and furthermore in the relationship between employer and employee in the days of old there was a consideration of higher value to the employee than the monetary compensation itself. Of yore employers and employees lived in personal contact and association resembling that which exists amongst members of the same family so that ties of affection bound them together much more than material considerations. Now this no longer obtains for their relationship is almost as impersonal and detached as that existing between employers and employees in highly industrialized countries. Again, our ancestors, because of their greater ignorance, knew no better and were resigned to their hard life, believing that it was a part of the world order as decreed by Divine Will, so that the unfortunate sufferer may meet with a greater reward in Heaven.

Now the Filipino workingman, however illiterate, refuses to believe that the Creator of the Universe could have ordained that some of His creatures should live in luxury and plenty, while others, in destitution and misery. The Filipino laborer now knows that the Father of mankind loves him as much as every other human being, and, therefore, that the world has not been made for the benefit of a few, but for the happiness of all.

Still more: The Filipino workingman has heard, if he is not able to read, of the equality before the law of the poor and the rich. He has heard of democracy, liberty, and justice, since every candidate for an elective office discourses on these topics, painting to him in glowing terms the meaning of those words.

And yet, what does he actually see? How do these doctrines that he has heard propounded from the platforms affect his everyday life? His hopes have been raised, his vision has been broadened, and his outlook has been painted in bright colors. But thirty-five years of American regime has brought him only disappointments and, sometimes, despair.

Has the progress then made by the Philippines benefited our poorer population? The poor still has to drink the same polluted water that his ancestors drank for ages. Malaria, dysentery, and tuberculosis still threaten him and his family at every turn. His children cannot all go to school, or if they do, they cannot even finish the whole primary instruction for one reason or another.

Roads from his barrio or his little farm to the town there are none. Only trails are within his reach—trails that have been formed by the daily pressure of his bare feet and not because they have been constructed. As he works from sunrise to sundown, his employer gets richer while he remains poor. He is the easy prey of the heartless usurer because usury is still rampant everywhere despite legislative enactments intended to suppress it.

That is, concisely speaking, the lot of the common man in our midst, after America's long endeavor to give to all fair opportunity in the pursuit of happiness and the enjoyment of life.

It was, of course, impossible for American administrators to see and reach the lowest strata of our population. But now that the reins of government are in our hands in so far as our own domestic affairs are concerned, what excuse, what reasonable justification can there be in allowing such a social and economic order to continue?

It is high time that all the branches of this Government coöperate with one another, and with them the whole community and every good-hearted man and woman, so that at last in this dear land of ours social justice—real justice—in the relations of man to man, may reign supreme.

Our people are patient and law-abiding. They love peace. They have not lost their faith either in the executive, the legislative or the judicial branch of the Government. As the Government is now in the hands of their own countrymen, they have become hopeful and are placing the realization of their dream for a better day in our clearer understanding of their lot, our better knowledge of conditions prevailing in the country, and in what should be the natural craving of our hearts to serve them with all the power at our command—they who are flesh of our flesh and blood of our blood.

The promotion of social justice by the State is a clear and categorical mandate of our Constitution. Our platform, the platform upon which you and I have been elected, imposes upon us the high duty of enacting measures that will improve the living conditions of the laborer and of carrying these measures into effect. We must see that laws are enacted which will not permit the exploitation of the employee by his employer and which will leave no loopholes that may be used to defeat the ends of justice. We must rely for the security of this new nation, not so much upon the might of brutal force, but upon the undivided loyalty of every citizen to the Government—a loyalty founded upon individual consciousness that this Government is his, and that it exists only for his protection, for his liberty, and for his happiness.

Both the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor are ready to help you in the preparation of the measures that are required to fill the gap that may be found in our existing legislation, for the purpose of correcting prevailing social evils and of carrying into effect the provisions of the Constitution as well as the commitments in our platform.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE EXCISE TAX ON OIL

Fortunately for us a new source of income has come to our hands that will facilitate the carrying out of our program of social justice and economic readjustment. From the proceeds of the excise tax on oil there has been accumulated up to the end of June, 1937, the sum of P95,507,227.30 in the Federal Treasury, the transfer of which amount to the Treasury of the Philippines I had secured before I left America on my last trip. This sum is now available for appropriation, the understanding with the Treasury Department of the United States being that out of that fund P10,000,000 will be available upon thirty days' notice and the balance upon ninety days' notice.

The final decision as to how this fund shall be spent is, of course, yours. But in the exercise of my constitutional prerogative I shall take the liberty of making some suggestions regarding the purposes for which this money should be spent.

The first thing that we must bear in mind is that this fund does not constitute an ordinary income of the Government upon which we may depend for recurring obligations. When independence shall have been granted, this source of our income will cease. Were we to defray from this fund services that we cannot maintain once this income is terminated, we would have thrown away the money thus spent. We must, therefore, limit the use of this fund for what might be termed capital investments or for self-supporting enterprises. Above all we should use this fund for national objectives, for purposes where the greatest good may be derived by the Filipino people.

Concretely, I recommend that this fund be devoted to the following purposes:

1. To improve the sanitary condition of centers of population by constructing water systems or artesian wells.
2. For combating malaria where there is assurance that it can be done at a reasonable expense.
3. For the prevention of tuberculosis and the establishment of more sanatoriums, as it is well known that the white plague is the worst scourge afflicting our race.
4. For the building of new leprosariums which will permit lepers in the early stage of their disease to be treated where they may be easily reached by their families, thus making their isolation less tragic.
5. For extending free dispensary service to the poor not only in centers of population but also in outlying barrios and communities.
6. For building public schools in every barrio where there is a sufficient number of children justifying the opening of the school.

In this connection, I desire to state that it was with great reluctance that I vetoed the bill passed in your last sessions appropriating funds for school buildings. A subcommittee of the Committee on Public Instruction came to see me to secure my approval to a measure that would appropriate P5,000,000 from the excise tax on oil for school buildings, and without hesitation I gave them my consent, with the understanding, however, that the appropriation would be made in a lump sum, so as to place upon the Department of Public Instruction the responsibility for constructing these schools. I feared then that, due to the short time at the disposal of the National Assembly to consider an itemized appropriation, the bill might be defective in some way, and hence my suggestion that the appropriation be made in a lump sum. The Committee on Public Works of the National Assembly did not recommend to the National Assembly a bill in line with this suggestion, and upon the advice of my constitutional counselors I reluctantly vetoed the bill. I have no hesitancy in saying that the consideration which induced me to finally veto the said bill was the fact that the National Assembly was soon convening in its regular session, and the interest of public instruction could not be prejudiced by waiting for the regular session of the Assembly when it will then have all the necessary time and information to enact a law appropriating this amount. If you so desire, you may pass a bill appropriating the same amount of P5,000,000 for school buildings even before approving the regular budget of the Government. The Department of Public Instruction is now ready to furnish you with all the necessary information.

The Constitution imposes upon the Government of the Philippines the duty to give every boy and girl of school age the opportunity to receive primary instruction. As soon as there are sufficient school buildings to accommodate all the school-age population of the Philippines and permanent means for supporting the schools have been created, there should be implanted here, in my opinion, compulsory universal primary instruction. In the meantime, we should make it compulsory for every boy and girl who is now in our public schools, and those who may be admitted next year and thereafter to remain in school during the period required for the entire primary instruction. Means should be immediately provided to carry this policy into effect.

One of the discoveries which we have made since the establishment of the Government of the Commonwealth is that, despite the large number of children that have gone through our public schools, as shown in the reports of the Bureau of Education, the literacy of the Islands has not increased proportionately, and the knowledge of those rudimentary subjects which the citizen of a democracy should have, has not been acquired by a population corresponding to the number of children that appear to have entered the public schools. The reason for this is simple. A large proportion of the boys and girls who have been admitted to the schools have not remained long enough to acquire any kind of useful knowledge.

7. For opening national highways and helping in the construction of provincial and even barrio roads whenever the respective provinces and municipalities pledge themselves to maintain the roads thus constructed, and in the case of barrio roads, where the volume of traffic on said roads also justifies their construction.

8. For the construction of office buildings for the National Government so as to reduce, if not eliminate, the continuous expense in rents.

For the purchase of large landed estates and their resale in small lots to the actual occupants thereof.

We are committed to the policy of acquiring the haciendas which, in the opinion of the Government, should be subdivided in small lots and resold to the tenants actually working on said lots. In a message to the National Assembly in its first regular session, I stated that we were not in a position to redeem this pledge, not only because we had no funds with which to purchase these estates, but also because I feared that we would only be transferring the trouble faced by the owners of these estates to the Government itself. Since then we have come into this fund accruing to the Commonwealth from the processing tax on oil, and I deem it proper and wise to use a part of it for the acquisition of these haciendas. In order that the Government may accomplish its objective more completely this time than when it bought the Friar lands, I have appointed a committee to study the whole question in its varied aspects with instructions to submit its recommendations not later than November 15, 1937. As soon as the committee submits its report, I shall refer the same to the National Assembly for such action as you may deem proper and expedient in the light of the recommendations therein contained.

10. For the development of water power, the reforestation of denuded areas, the colonization and development of Mindanao; and

11. For the financing of a long range program of economic adjustments necessary to prepare the country for the new situation attending the grant of our independence, including the establishment of new industries which at the same time will give work to the unemployed.

It is expected that the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs will include in its report a well considered program of economic adjustments to supplement its recommendation on future American-Philippine trade relations. As soon as this report has been received by me it will be immediately submitted to you for your consideration.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly, before closing, allow me to emphasize the need of giving the common man in the Philippines the benefits that the citizen of every progressive democracy is entitled to receive. I am sure that every one of you will give to this noble task the best that is in him. An opportunity has been offered us that no past or coming generation has had or will ever have—that of creating a nation where there will be no privileged class, where poverty will be unknown, where every citizen will be duly equipped with the knowledge that will enable him to perform his duties and to exercise his rights properly and conscientiously, and where every man, woman, and child by his fireside will be thankful to God for living in this beautiful and blessed land.

[Delivered on October 28, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to transmit herewith the report submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce, pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of Commonwealth Act No. 110, showing a detailed information as to the manner the amount appropriated in the said Act has been spent, as well as the results thereby accomplished.

Respectfully,

Speech of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on the National Budget for 1938, October 30, 1937

Message
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On the National Budget for 1938

[Released on October 30, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration, the National Budget for the fiscal year 1938. This budget contains the estimated ordinary income for the general fund based upon the existing revenue laws of the Philippines, and the estimated expenses for both the ordinary operation of the Government of the Commonwealth and the extraordinary expenditures and investments, exclusive of those for construction of public works.

The total estimated regular income accruing to the general fund for 1938 derived from revenues levied and collected in the Philippines is P80,445,700. The total income that is estimated to accrue this year, 1937, to the Philippine Treasury from taxes levied and collected by the National Government is P87,797,400. To this amount must be added P108,834,490.04, derived from the proceeds of the excise tax on coconut oil, which has been collected up to September 30, 1937, plus P7,500,000, that is estimated to be collected until the end of this year. Therefore, the aggregate income estimated to accrue to the Philippine Treasury for 1937 is P204,131,890, the highest mark ever reached in the whole financial history of the Government of the Philippines.

The extraordinary increase in the estimated income derived from local revenues for 1937, which is based upon collections already made up to August 31st of this year, is largely due to the favorable effect on this year's revenue collections of the unusual boom in the trading in mining stocks and securities that prevailed during 1936, as well as to the greater efficiency in the collection of taxes since the inauguration of the Government of the Commonwealth. The reduction in the estimated income for 1938 is due mainly to the return to normalcy of the trading in mining stocks and securities and a marked decline in the importation of dutiable Chinese goods, caused by the Sino-Japanese conflict. However, this estimated income for next year is still considered conservative.

Chargeable against the estimated regular income derived from local revenues for 1938, the budget proposes expenditures for the ordinary operating expenses of the National Government for the same fiscal year, reaching the total amount of P76,296,207.22, which is P9,585,426.03 greater than that for 1937. This increase is due principally to the intensification and needed expansion of the different public services; the establishment of new services authorized by various laws that you have enacted; and the restoration of the rates of salaries received by officers and employees in 1932. However, as you can see from the figures above stated, the estimated regular income for 1938 will not only be sufficient to cover the estimated ordinary expenses, but will leave a reasonable amount of surplus besides.

It will be noted that the budget, in addition to the appropriations for the ordinary expenditures of the Government, proposes various items of extraordinary expenditures, which are non-recurring in nature, in the aggregate of P2,689,347, of which P1,551,599 is chargeable against the accumulated current surplus of the general fund proper and the rest, amounting to P1, 137,748 is proposed to be taken from the proceeds of the coconut oil excise tax.

You will note from the "Comparative Financial Statement" of the budget that, although the income from the coconut oil excise tax is made a part of the general fund, because, under the law, it may be appropriated for general purposes, I am, nevertheless, segregating it from the general fund proper, in order that the appropriations to be made therefrom may be properly and readily distinguished from others, and so that its condition may be clearly seen at all times.

I wish to invite your attention to the provision of the Act of Congress, which authorizes the collection of the coconut oil excise tax for the benefit of the Philippine Treasury, that "if at any time the Philippine Government provides by any law for any subsidy to be paid to the producers of copra, coconut oil, or allied products, no further payments to the Philippine Treasury shall be made under this subsection." This means that not only the proceeds of the said excise tax, but even the funds derived from the local revenues of this Government, cannot be used for aiding the coconut industry as long as we continue receiving the benefits of the coconut oil excise tax. Needless to state, it is of the utmost importance that the Government of the Commonwealth, at all times and in every case, should comply with its obligations with the Government of the United States, as it must show always its honesty and good faith whenever it enters into an agreement with another government, or any private entity, whether a corporation or an individual.

I also wish to reiterate here what I stated in my annual message to you that the funds derived from the coconut oil excise tax should not be appropriated for ordinary operating expenses of the Government, which are continuing or recurring in nature, but their expenditure should be confined to the construction of such public improvements, as waterworks, hospitals, leprosaria, sanatoria, and treatment stations for those who are afflicted with tuberculosis, schoolhouses and roads, and to such other special purposes as would help to improve the health and ameliorate the social condition of the masses of our population; extend the facilities of public elementary instruction; and promote the economic development of the country. Such expenditures, however, should be made only after adequate provision has been made for the proper maintenance of the new services and improvements to be established, not merely for one year, but for all the years to come, in the case of services of permanent nature, or until the objectives are accomplished in the case of other projects. We must not lose sight of the fact that for every schoolhouse erected, the expenses for the salary of the teacher, and for the purchase of books and other equipment will have to be provided; and that for every kilometer of road constructed, an average of P760 yearly is necessary for its maintenance. The same thing is true in the case of the other services. I shall submit to you in due time concrete plans for the use of the proceeds of the coconut oil excise tax.

Since 1933, the salaries of the officers and employees of the National Government have been subjected to the 10 per cent and 15 per cent reductions prescribed by the annual Appropriation Acts. As may be recalled, the said reductions were effected as a measure of economy to solve the financial difficulty which confronted the Government as a result of the economic depression that prevailed in 1932 and subsequent years. That emergency has already passed and the present condition of the finances of the Government is such that it can now afford to restore the salary rates, which, because of the increased cost of necessities, the officers and employees affected justly deserve. In the restoration of the former salary rates, however, care has been taken not to apply it to positions, the degree of importance of which does not warrant the payment of salaries higher than what the incumbents thereof are now receiving. Likewise, the proposed restoration of the former rates of salaries is not being extended to officers and employees, who, although affected by the salary reductions of 1933, are receiving salaries that are less than those authorized for their present positions, but equal to, or more than, the salaries they received prior to the reductions, for having since been assigned to higher positions.

The need for giving salaries to capable and efficient officers and employees of the Government, which are commensurate with the importance of their positions and the degree of responsibility that they hold, is obvious. The Government is the biggest, as well as the most complicated and difficult, business enterprise in any country. It must meet with efficient service the needs and requirements of the people who are supporting it. Strict honesty and integrity are required of its employees. There is no doubt that the Government, to accomplish its purpose, must, above all, obtain and retain the services of qualified, efficient, and honest public servants. This, of course, can only be done by giving them adequate compensation. In determining what rates of compensation are adequate for the employees of the Philippine Government, we should not overlook the fact that, although we are in the Orient, our national economy is influenced principally by the economic conditions obtaining in the United States. The prices of our major export products and of the great part of the goods we import follow those prevailing in that country. Our monetary system is tied to the U. S. dollar and any fluctuation in the value of the dollar affects our peso. Under such conditions, the government employees, like other people of their class and standing, are forced to adopt a standard of living that is moulded by exotic conditions and influences.

In view of the reasons above stated, I am recommending in the Budget for 1938, in addition to the restoration of the former salary rates, increases in the salaries of officers and employees, the nature and importance of whose positions demand such increases to give them adequate compensation. You will note that, in the case of the Chiefs of technical bureaus, like the Solicitor-General, the Directors of the Bureaus of Public Works and Mines, the Insular Collectors of Customs and Internal Revenue, and the Insular Treasurer, I am recommending the payment of extra compensations to their incumbents in addition to the salaries regularly fixed for their respective positions. The salaries of experts and specialists, such as the Consulting Architect of the Bureau of Public Works, the Pathologist of the Bureau of Health, and others have been given due consideration.

I am also recommending that the Commissioner of the Budget be given the rank and compensation of a Secretary of Department. The Budget Office has charge, not only of the preparation of the Budget, but also of the supervision of the enforcement of the annual General Appropriation Act and other Acts that authorize the expenditure of the public funds, including the control and supervision of requisitions and orders for supplies, materials, furniture, and equipment, with a view to avoiding waste and extravagance. It also exercises control and supervision over the accounting services for all the bureaus and offices of the National Government. It serves as a clearing house for data and information that are necessary for the proper coordination of the financial and administrative policies of the Government. It proposes changes in the organization of the Government or any of its branches, as well as ways and means for their efficient and economical functioning, all of which require that the Head of the Office be kept continually and intimately informed of, and consulted as to, the major policies of the Government. In other words, under the present setup, the Commissioner of the Budget is the President's "eyes and ears" in the administration of the public funds, and, in the performance of his delicate task, he deals directly with the various Heads of Departments. The work of the Budget Office, since its creation last year, has so grown in importance and magnitude that I believe the elevation of its Head to the category of a Secretary of Department is fully justified and will serve greatly to facilitate the performance of his duties.

In line with the recommendation I made in my budget message last year, I have eliminated from this Budget the standing appropriation of P250,000 for the Belo Fund under Act No. 3431, and, in its place, I am recommending appropriations for salaries of technical and expert personnel in the Office of the Chief Executive, in some Executive Departments, and in the University of the Philippines, the need for whose services may arise from time to time. The necessary investigations, preparation of plans and execution of the varied and important projects which the administration is undertaking, will doubtless necessitate henceforth the services of expert and technical men in the different branches of the Government more than ever before. It is hoped that you will repeal Act No. 3431, otherwise known as the Belo Law.

Knowing as I do your desire to repeal the Probation Law, Act No. 4221, as demonstrated by the bill to that effect which you passed at your last special session, but which, much to my regret, I had to veto due to certain objectionable features thereof, the appropriations that heretofore have been granted to the Probation Office and the Parole Office are intended solely for the operation and maintenance of the latter, in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 4103, the Indeterminate Sentence Law. Accordingly, the position of Chief of the Probation Office has been abolished and that of its Assistant Chief converted into that of Executive Officer of the Indeterminate Sentence Board.

Consistent with the budgetary policy I enunciated last year to make the annual budget the complete financial program of the Government that it should be, more special funds, which, heretofore, were not embodied in the annual budgets, are included in the Budget for the next year.

The Budget, which I am herewith submitting, is accompanied by a proposed bill prescribing the form of the Budget and the data and information that it should contain, the enactment of which will fulfill the provision contained in the last sentence of paragraph (1) of section 9 of Article VI of the Constitution. The said proposed bill also contains general provisions which would regulate the expenditure of appropriations authorized, not only by the annual General Appropriation Acts, but also by other laws. Heretofore, some of these provisions have been reenacted every year as parts of the annual General Appropriation Acts, while others are embodied in Act No. 2935 and in the Administrative Code. In view of the provision of paragraph (2) of section 9 of Article VI of the Constitution, which limits the application of a provision in the General Appropriation Act to the item or items of appropriation to which it must refer in the same Appropriation Act, I do not believe it advisable to continue the practice of enacting general provisions of permanent nature in the annual General Appropriation Act, because it creates a situation wherein the expenditure of an appropriation, authorized in a General Appropriation Act, is made under conditions different from those under which another appropriation for a similar purpose, but authorized by a different law, is expended, the latter expenditure being governed by a provision either of Act No. 2935 or of the Administrative Code. In order, therefore, to establish a uniform practice that all branches of the National Government shall follow in the expenditure of the public funds of all kinds, regardless as to whether the corresponding appropriation is authorized by a General Appropriation Act or by any other law, I recommend that the general provisions that should govern the execution of the General Appropriation Acts for 1938 and subsequent years be enacted in a separate law.

The fiscal year 1936 closed with a current surplus of P47,907,668.89 in the general fund. The total income this year, exclusive of the proceeds of the excise tax on coconut oil collected in the United States, is expected to reach P87,797,400 while the total ordinary expenditures for the year is estimated at about P66,700,000. There will, therefore, result at the end of this year an excess of regular income over ordinary expenditures of about P21,090,000 which, added to the current surplus at the end of last year, should give a total accumulated current surplus of about P68,990,000 in the general fund proper at the end of the current year. However, as can be seen in the "Comparative Financial Statement" of the Budget, the large outlay for extraordinary purposes which you have authorized, amounting to P46,133,887.49, has considerably reduced the current surplus of the general fund proper, so that, by the end of the current year, it may fall to as low as P22,860,000. To preserve the stability of the Government's finances, therefore, I am replenishing the current surplus of the general fund proper by transferring thereto from the proceeds of the coconut oil excise tax the sum of P26,840,000 which is the total of the extraordinary appropriations that have been authorized from the general fund proper for the following extraordinary purposes:

Subscription of stock of the National Development Company, Act No. 2849	P10,000,000.00
Subscription of stock of the Manila Railroad Company, Act No. 3116	1,000,000.00
For the acquisition of land and construction of buildings for laborers, Act No. 4184	250,000.00
Loan to the Manila Railroad Company, Commonwealth Act No. 4	9,990,000.00
For the purchase of homesites in large landed estates, Commonwealth Act No. 20	1,000,000.00
For the reforestation and afforestation of watersheds, denuded areas and cogon or open lands, Commonwealth Act No. 119	250,000.00
For organizing the National Power Corporation, Commonwealth Act No. 120	250,000.00
Revolving Fund for the construction of waterworks, Commonwealth Act No. 125	2,000,000.00
For stabilizing the prices of buntal fibers, Commonwealth Act No. 147	500,000.00
For the survey and subdivision of public agricultural lands, Commonwealth Act No. 166	P100,000.00
For a new Census, Commonwealth Act No. 170	1,500,000.00
Total	P26,840,000.00

After the transfer of the above stated amount from the proceeds of the coconut oil excise tax, there remains in this fund a surplus of P89,494,490.04, which, together with the estimated current surplus of P49,700,000 in the general fund proper at the end of the current year, will give a total accumulated current surplus of P139,190,000 in the Consolidated General Fund at the end of this year.

The Government is a "going concern" the services of which must continue for an indefinite period of time. Hence, it must have at all times surplus funds enough to maintain confidence in its financial integrity to form the basis for the national credit, and to meet inevitable emergencies arising from public disasters and calamities which happen to all nations in the course of time. For these reasons, it is my opinion that, for the present, the Government of the Commonwealth should maintain a current surplus in its general fund proper of about P50,000,000.

In conclusion, I wish to state that the existence of substantial surplus funds in the Philippine Treasury should not give ground for liberal appropriations and for laxity in expenditures, except for those which are absolutely necessary to meet urgent public needs. On the contrary, I cannot overemphasize the necessity of not only keeping intact whatever surplus reserves we now have, but also of adding thereto any excess collections that may be realized over the necessary expenditures, in order that the Government may be well prepared financially to meet whatever adverse conditions may arise in the future.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Abolition of Cedula Tax, November 1, 1937

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

ABOLITION OF CEDULA TAX

[November 1, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

We are committed by our platform to the revision of our system of taxation so as to make it more equitable and to have it based upon the ability of the taxpayers to pay. Some of our existing revenue laws are very antiquated and highly unfair. It may be said that the burden of taxation in the Philippines rests mainly upon those who can least afford to bear it.

We now have under study and in preparation a plan for the revision of our system of taxation both for the National and local governments. There is, however, one tax so unfair and against which our people have so consistently complained that I do not think it necessary to wait any longer before a definite step is taken for its abolition. I am referring to the cedula tax which I hope will be stricken out from our statute books before the second anniversary of the Government of the Commonwealth.

The cedula tax existed during the Spanish regime; the government of General Aguinaldo did not abolish it altogether but only reduced it; and the Philippine Commission, the majority of whose members were Americans, acting as the sole legislative body for the Islands, imposed the tax at one peso in 1901 and later raised it to its present rate.

In the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention, there were clear indications that said body wanted to abolish the cedula tax by means of a constitutional provision to this effect, but the fear that its abolition might bankrupt the provincial and municipal governments, which are the beneficiaries of this tax, caused the Convention to refrain from abolishing it, going only to the extent of prohibiting the imprisonment of any one for non-payment of the tax. At your first regular session, I did not think it wise to recommend the repeal of the cedula tax law for we were unprepared to cover the loss of revenue that the provinces and municipalities would have suffered thereby. Now, however, we can safely abolish the cedula tax, and do an act of justice to our laboring classes—thus closing also forever a chapter in the history of taxation in our country, that brought no honor to the Government, and caused untold hardships to the majority of our people. When the National Assembly shall have enacted the law abolishing the cedula tax, I shall recommend the appropriation of a sum equal to the amount of revenues that will be lost to the provinces and municipalities from the accumulated surplus of the Consolidated General Fund, to be given to the provincial and municipal governments until a substitute regular source of income that will weigh upon those who can well pay it without undue hardship is found.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Message of President Quezon on appropriation for Public Improvements in Manila, November 12, 1937

Message
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On appropriation for Public Improvements in Manila

[Delivered on November 12, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I beg to recommend that the sum of P1,000,000 be appropriated from the unappropriated Consolidated General Fund for carrying out public improvements in the City of Manila in the discretion of the Secretary of Public Works and Communications. I do not know of any other city of the size and population of Manila that is so lacking in the necessities and conveniences of modern life for the use of the masses. The City Government is not in a position to finance all urgent projects of this nature and we should extend aid for constructing parks and streets and improving sanitary conditions in certain districts. It is expected that the Secretary of Public Works and Communications will consult with the Mayor and the Municipal Board in planning these new improvements.

I desire to inform the National Assembly that, among the projects for public works which we have under consideration for submission to the National Assembly, as soon as the budget is disposed of, appropriations will be recommended for the construction of the North Port District as well as for the construction and improvement of certain streets that constitute the main highways of communication from the City to the suburbs and the provinces.

Early action on this recommendation is respectfully requested.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on changes in appropriations for the University of the Philippines, November 17, 1937

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On changes in appropriations for the University of the Philippines

[Released on November 17, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

After consultation with the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines, I am recommending to you radical changes in the Budget, as submitted by me, affecting the appropriations for the University of the Philippines. The Budget, as submitted, conforms to the policies heretofore adopted by the Government in reference to the expenditure of funds allotted to the University of the Philippines, but in the face of the results so far attained I feel that a radical change has to be made in this respect.

It is evident that to achieve the highest efficiency in the conduct of the affairs of the University, full responsibility and corresponding authority must be lodged in some entity. Dispersment of responsibility and authority makes it impossible to place the blame or credit on anyone if and when blame or credit is to be given. Under the law creating the University, the Board of Regents is intended to be the supreme and final authority for the running of the affairs of that institution. Its powers include the creation of colleges and the determination of the curriculum, subject only to the supervision of the Board of Visitors. This intent of the law creating the University of the Philippines has been materially frustrated by certain restrictions and limitations imposed by the Legislature, and by the manner in which public funds appropriated as contribution to the University have been provided. I will not say that the shortcomings of the University of the Philippines, which are obvious, are entirely due, or even mainly due, to these limitations and restrictions, but they have been contributory factors of no mean importance. It is my impression that the Board of Regents, in the face of these restrictions and limitations, all along has felt relieved, to a large extent, of its responsibility for running this institution of learning. I have felt so deeply that the University is not what it should be, and believing it the fault of the Board of Regents, I thought of renovating the appointed Members of the Board. But when I looked over the list of the names constituting the present Board, both appointive and elective, I saw that it would be impossible to improve upon its membership. It is for this reason that I decided to have consultation with the Board of Regents and to seek their advice as to the means to be adopted to improve the situation prevailing in the University and place it in a position to justify its continued existence.

I have no doubt that I am expressing not only my views, but yours as well, when I say that the first and immediate duty of the State is to provide universal primary instruction to girls and boys of school age, and that until such duty shall have been performed fully, the Government subjects itself to the criticism of affording opportunities for higher instruction to people who can afford to pay for their own education while denying primary instruction to hundreds of thousands of the daughters and sons of the poor.

In America, there is no university supported by the Federal Government. There are several state governments that support state universities, but I know of no case where such institutions of higher learning exist supported by the Government where thousands of children do not have the opportunity to acquire primary instruction. In Europe, there are ancient universities created and supported by the national governments, but it will be recalled that these universities were created at a time when democracy was absolutely unknown in Europe.

If there had been no state university upon the inauguration of the Commonwealth, I would have resisted any attempt to create such an institution, supported mainly by the Government, until every girl and boy of school age had an opportunity to receive primary education. But the University of the Philippines is here; the Government has already invested millions and millions for its buildings and its maintenance, and we are confronted with a fact and not a theory. It would be the height of folly to close that institution now; yet, unless the University can justify its existence by actually rendering a service to the country that private universities cannot render at present, I would favor the abolition of the University. To my mind this service can only be one, and that is to set a high standard for our private universities and colleges and to turn out well trained material that will be outstanding leaders in each field of activity where technical knowledge is required. I have many times stated my position on this matter, namely, I am not interested in seeing thousands upon thousands of graduates from the University of the Philippines whose knowledge, acquired in this institution, cannot even serve as a basis for the hope that, through their own efforts, they may become in time proficient in their chosen professions. I would rather see only a few graduates every year from the University of the Philippines but who have left the University with the character and knowledge that will fit them, by dint of their own efforts, to become leaders of their respective callings.

To accomplish the objects aforementioned, there are certain definite steps which have to be taken:

a. To repeal that portion of Act No. 2672 (Vol. 12, pages 130-131, Public Laws) and of Act No. 2787 in so far as they establish a scale of salaries for the officials, employees, professors, and instructors of the University of the Philippines.

b. The restrictions and limitations prescribed in the Budget as submitted by me in the expenditure of funds allotted to the University of the Philippines should all be eliminated, thereby granting to the Board of Regents of that institution full discretion in the disposition of said funds.

The University of the Philippines has become an integral part of our system of education as the Commonwealth has inherited the system of public instruction from its predecessors. In the Budget for next year, I have recommended a total appropriation of P1,587,947 for the University, which amount is P472,572 more than was voted by the National Assembly for the present year. I have been actuated by strong reasons in making this recommendation.

The University of the Philippines is intended to be our highest seat of learning. It is called upon to set the highest standards in the most important professions. It is to be the mold of the Filipino mind and the great laboratory for the study of the grave social problems which are the preoccupation of our age. It is to produce men of character and wisdom trained in the arts and the sciences, who are to assume leadership in those political and social activities which are vital to the State. As I have pointed out above, unless the University of the Philippines is able to accomplish these aims, it may as well be abolished. The expenditures of the people's money for its maintenance cannot be justified if its academic standards are not to rise higher than those of private universities supported exclusively from tuition fees. In the past few years, the University of the Philippines has been hampered by the reduction of the government appropriation for its support. The sound and promising condition of the treasury justifies a more generous appropriation for this institution.

At this particular time, the country looks up to the University of the Philippines for the technological leadership which it needs in our efforts toward economic development upon the most efficient and scientific bases. Of the essentials in economic progress, we have in abundance natural resources, raw materials, labor, and capital. What the country lacks now and lacks badly are scientific men who are not only informed of the technological advancement achieved in other countries, but are also able to apply this technology to the promotion and development of our own industries, and are capable of contributing to the improvement of scientific knowledge in the world. This is particularly needed in agriculture, chemistry, economics, medicine, and engineering. So far has science conquered nature that today economic supremacy is largely dependent upon technological proficiency. The scale of wages and living standards in different nations are in a large part likewise dependent upon it. We cannot hope to build up a strong and stable economic structure in the Philippines without the assistance of such technical men.

We cannot wait for the training of these men in our country without retarding our economic progress. The Government, therefore, has adopted the policy of bringing in experts that we need from time to time. But this is a temporary arrangement. We must look forward to the training of our own citizens in this field. The spreading of technological knowledge among our own people will promote invention and the growth of industries which otherwise would be neglected. Besides, we need men who in the application of their knowledge will be inspired by the patriotic urge to promote the peculiar interests of our own country. I believe the University of the Philippines should have every means necessary to enable it to fill this need in our economy.

It is my understanding with the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines, that if my recommendations are approved by the National Assembly, men who have already proven their proficiency in special lines are to be sent abroad for advanced training, study, and investigation. These scholarships are to be undertaken not merely for the purpose of acquiring academic degrees, but particularly to attain definite experience and first hand knowledge in important specific subjects and social problems. In this manner, within a few years, the University will be able to secure the necessary staff to bring its faculty to the level now required by the best universities of the world.

In the meantime, the University will bring to the Philippines the best trained men in the various lines of study to improve its faculty. Under the present laws, these men can be enlisted only if they accept a salary not exceeding P9,000 per year. I have been informed, and my personal knowledge is to the same effect, that university professors of recognized standing cannot be contracted to come to the Philippines for such a salary. For this reason, I recommend the elimination of the limitation proposed in the Budget as to the salary of professors under contract, thereby allowing the Board of Regents discretion in fixing such salary in each case as the circumstances may require.

I also recommend that the item of P125,000 which appears in the Budget for the restoration of salaries, be added to the general fund constituting the aid to the University without binding it exclusively to that purpose. I believe it is proper that this fund be placed at the discretion of the Board of Regents to be used by them in such manner as in their opinion may be most conducive to the welfare of the University. This fund, I am persuaded, could be more properly spent in stimulating original investigation and research and in increasing the salaries of deserving members of the faculty,—of those who devote their time to advanced studies and who show a desire to make their work in the University their life-endavor,—rather than to restore automatically and for all the higher salaries received by them in the past regardless of their degree of efficiency or demonstrated loyalty to the best interests of the University.

I believe that it is most unwise to maintain a uniform standard of salaries for the members of the faculty of the University of the Philippines. Universities of recognized standing in the United States and other countries do not adhere to definite salary schedules. In each case, the governing body determines the policy to be pursued and the salary to be given a professor. The same rule is necessary for the University of the Philippines, if we want to build up a strong faculty that will make of the University not only an institution of the highest academic prestige, but one which will render the utmost service to the nation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Changes in the Budget for 1938, November 19, 1937

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON CHANGES IN THE BUDGET FOR 1938

[November 19, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In connection with the National Budget for the fiscal year 1938, which I submitted for your consideration with my budget message of October 30, 1937, I hereby make the following changes or amendments to the said Budget with the request that they be taken into consideration in the preparation of the Appropriation Act for 1938:

1. Increase of P1,400 of item II-4, Illumination and power service, (page 60 of the Budget for 1938), in order that the National Library may have sufficient funds for the expected increased consumption of electric fluid during the year 1938.
2. The Office of the Vice-President of the Philippines shall be separated from the Office of the President of the Philippines and placed after the appropriation for the Office of the President and before the appropriation for the Department of the Interior.
3. To give the General Auditing Office an independent status as contemplated in the Constitution of the Philippines, all the items of appropriation for the General Auditing Office, including sundry expenses and the purchase of furniture and equipment including one auto jitney, shall be segregated from the appropriation for the Office of the President and placed on an independent office after the appropriation for the Department of Labor and before the appropriation for the University of the Philippines.
4. Amendment of the following items for the Philippine Sugar Administration (A-(6), page 117 of the Budget for 1938):

51.	Twenty-four sugar checkers, at P720 per annum each
63.	One clerk
66.	Two messengers at P480 per annum each

so as to read as follows:

51.	Twenty-three sugar checkers, at P720 per annum each
51(a).	One telephone operator
63.	One multigraph operator

66.	One messenger
66(a).	One watchman

This amendment will not increase the amount originally requested.

5. Amendment of the title of item C-IV-7, special appropriations for the Department of Finance, appearing on page 252 of the Budget for 1938, so that the said title shall read as follows:

7. For the necessary expenses of a special agent in foreign countries.

instead of

7. For the necessary expenses of a special agent in China.

This amendment will allow the sending of the special agent to any other foreign country where his services may be needed.

6. Restoration of the 15 per cent reductions in the salaries of two employees payable from the Rice and Corn Fund so that they shall be paid at the rate of P2,400 per annum instead of P2,040 per annum each (Item C-IV-2(c), page 269 of the Budget for 1938).

7. Increase in the salary of one Public Service Commissioner from ¥10,600 to P11,000 (Item D-4)-1, page 312, of the Budget for 1938).

8. Modification of Item B-(5)-95, on page 320 of the Budget for 1938, so that it shall read as follows:

Subsistence of the Director and Assistant Director, at P960 per annum each, accountable monthly notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary.

and revival of paragraph 3 on page 836 of the Budget for 1938 (Budget Bill) which was intended to be eliminated. These changes are necessary to authorize the commutation of subsistence of the Director and the Assistant Director of Prisons.

9. Provision of a position of Register of Deeds for the Province of Occidental Misamis with a salary of P1,800 per annum by amending item D-(6)-11 (page 322 of the Budget for 1938) so as to read as follows:

11.	Nine registers of deeds, at P1,800 per annum each

10. Increase in the salary of one Commissioner from P10,000 to P11,000 per annum (Item D-(7)-1, page 330, of the Budget for 1938).

11. Increase in the salary of one Judge from P10,000 to P11,000 per annum (Item D-(8)-1, page 333, of the Budget for 1938).

12. Increase of P43,360.00 in item F-II-2, freight, express and delivery service for the Department of Public Works and Communications (page 537 of the Budget for 1938). This is necessary to provide for the discontinuance in 1938 of the 10 per cent reduction in the contract of the Bureau of Posts with the Manila Railroad Company, the increase in the new rates enforced by the said company, and the extension of its service to Ragay, Camarines Sur.

13. Increases in the following items of the appropriation for sundry expenses and purchase of furniture and equipment of the Department of Public Works and Communications to provide for the expenses incident to the commissioning of the C. G. s.s. "Pathfinder":

F-II-2.	Freight, express and delivery service (page 537 of the Budget for 1938)
F-II-6.	Consumption of supplies and materials (page 538 of the Budget for 1938)
F-II-9.	Maintenance and repair of equipment (page 539 of the Budget for 1938)
Total increase

FURNITURE AND EQUIPMENT

F-III-1.	For the purchase and manufacture of furniture and equipment (page 541 of the Budget for 1938)

14. Increase of P2,000 in the item for traveling expenses of personnel for the Office of Adult Education under the Department of Public Instruction. This change will increase the total amount proposed for traveling expenses of personnel of the Department of Public Instruction to P290,600 (Item G-II-1, page 687 of the Budget" for 1938).

15. Increase of P59,126 in item G-II-6, consumption of supplies and materials, for the Department of Public Instruction, page 688 of the Budget for 1938, in order to provide allowances for clothing of the inmates of Culion Leper Colony and other leprosy treatment stations.

16. Increase of P18,000 in item G-II-8, contributions and gratuities, for the Department of Public Instruction, page 689 of the Budget for 1938, in order to provide adequate gratuities for lepers in the Culion Leper Colony and other leprosy treatment stations.

17. Increase of P332,000 in item G-IV-5, page 700 of the Budget for 1938, so that the total of the said item shall become P11,345,500 instead of P11,013,500 only, and insertion of the words "including the purchase of textbooks not to exceed P557,000" between the words "seven" and "to" in the sixth line of the said item. Likewise, the words "including the purchase of necessary textbooks" should be inserted between the words "classes" and "to" in the fourth line of item 6 on page 701 of the Budget for 1938. These changes are desired in order to provide the Bureau of Education with the amount necessary for the purchase of textbooks that may be needed for the year 1938.

18. Provision of the following special appropriations for the Bureau of Education under the Department of Public Instruction, to be placed following item G-IV-13, page 706 of the Budget for 1938:

13-a.	Aid in connection with the Annual National Interscholastic Meet
13-b.	Aid to regional athletic associations

These aids are desired in order to provide the Bureau of Education with the necessary funds for the National Interscholastic Meet and the various regional athletic meets.

19. Amendment of the following items for the Court of Appeals (Superior Courts (2), page 812 of the Budget for 1938):

1.	One Presiding Judge
2.	Ten Appellate Judges, at P11,000 per annum each
4.	One Clerk of Court
5.	One Deputy Clerk

6.	One Reporter

so as to read as follows:

1.	One Presiding Judge
2.	Ten Appellate Judges, at P12,000 per annum each
4.	One Clerk of Court
5.	One Deputy Clerk
6.	One Reporter

20. Amendment of the provision of paragraph 4 of Section 7 of the Budget Bill, appearing on page 830 of the Budget for 1938, by inserting the following additional clause between the words “donation” and “no” in line 32; “and in the case of officers and employees receiving higher rates at the time of the approval of this Act,” so that the limitation of salaries to not more than P12 per day or P300 per month of employees payable from lump sum appropriations may not apply to those who are actually receiving more than the said rates.

21. Restoration of the rates of salary appearing in the 1937 Appropriation Act which were reduced in the Budget to convert their irregular monthly rates into multiples of 10, such reductions having been made whenever the positions are vacant or the incumbents thereof receive salaries that are much lower than the authorized rates for the current year. This will represent an increase of P28,174.90.

22. The foregoing changes and amendments have been decided only after the Budget had been submitted. They are necessary in order to maintain the different public services in as efficient a manner as possible. They will increase the total appropriations for the ordinary operating expenses of the National Government proposed in the Budget for 1938 to P76,889,028.12 and will reduce the estimated unappropriated excess of the estimated regular income over the estimated ordinary expenditures to P3,556,671.88.

The Commissioner of the Budget has been authorized to appear before the Committee on Appropriations and to assist in effecting the changes indicated above.

Respectfully,

I cannot approve this bill because under its provisions, the owner of an animal cruelly treated who should have the ultimate responsibility for such occurrence would likely escape criminal liability therefor.

VETOING BILL No. 1018—SALE OF UNGRADED EYEGLASSES AND SPECTACLES

[December 18, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am returning Bill No. 1018 of the National Assembly, entitled “An Act to amend section eight hundred and seventeen of the Administrative Code” without my signature.

Throughout the Philippines, many persons are actually engaged in the sale, as merchandise, of ready-made ungraded eyeglasses and spectacles, which does not constitute the practice of the profession of optometrist or optician. The bill above referred to would prohibit the sale of ready-made eyeglasses and spectacles in the City of Manila and in the other chartered cities and in places within the radius of five kilometers from the office, establishment or clinic of a duly registered optometrist and (or) optician, except by a duly registered optometrist and (or) optician, even where no use is made by the seller of the trial case or of practical and objective mechanical devices for the determination of the state of refraction and the accommodation of the vision.

I believe that the sale by any person of ready-made ungraded eyeglasses or spectacles, where no use is made of the trial case or of practical and objective mechanical devices for the determination of the state of refraction and the accommodation of the vision, does not affect public health. The use of ungraded eyeglasses and spectacles, ordinarily to protect the eye from the sun or dust, is clearly not injurious to health. Therefore, the attached bill would seem to serve no useful public end.

Furthermore, the bill, if enacted into law, would deny the equal protection of the laws, in that, while it absolutely prohibits the sale in the City of Manila and in the other chartered cities of such ungraded eyeglasses and spectacles, except by optometrists and opticians, irrespective of whether or not there is an office, establishment or clinic of a duly registered optometrist and (or) optician within the radius of five kilometers from such cities, it permits the sale of such eyeglasses and spectacles in other parts of the Philippines beyond the radius of five kilometers from the office, establishment or clinic of a duly registered optometrist and (or) optician. There seems to be no reasonable basis for the discrimination against persons now engaged in the sale of eyeglasses and spectacles in the City of Manila and in the other chartered cities or against the inhabitants of the aforesaid cities. It has been held that a statute is void as denying the equal protection of the laws, where, without any reasonable ground of discrimination, it places limitations or restrictions on the right to engage in a particular business or occupation in one portion of the state, but not in other portions.

Finally, the bill does not provide a reasonable period within which persons who are not duly registered optometrists and opticians and who are actually selling ready-made eyeglasses and spectacles under the law now in force might liquidate their business.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am disapproving Bill No. 1286, entitled “An Act providing for the establishment of a Philippine National Hall of Fame,” with regret.

While I am in hearty accord with the National Assembly as regards the ultimate purposes of the bill, I have serious doubts as to the adequacy of the means adopted for properly carrying out such a worthy project. Besides, I have very serious objection to the provision of section 2 wherein the authority granted to the President of the Philippines to select and designate any suitable building, portion of a building, or hall belonging to the Philippine Government as the Philippine National Hall of Fame is made subject to the approval of the Speaker of the National Assembly and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The National Assembly had the choice of either designating in the act itself any public building or part thereof to be used as the Philippine National Hall of Fame, or authorizing any executive official of the Government, including the President, to make such designation or to create a committee for this purpose, but I do not wish to establish the precedent of subjecting any act of the President of the Philippines to the approval of any other official of this Government, except as required by the Constitution.

VETOING BILL NO. 1601—FIXING SALARIES OF ELECTIVE CITY COUNCILORS IN BAGUIO

[December 18, 1937]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 1601, entitled “An Act to amend subsection (d) of section twenty-five hundred and fifty and section twenty-five hundred and fifty-two of the Revised Administrative Code.”

Under the law now in force, the salary of the elective members of the city council is fixed by the council itself and included in the yearly budget for the City, which is subject to the approval of the proper Department Head. (Section 2553 (a) of the Revised Administrative Code.) At present, the current salary of the councilors is P720 each per annum, thus requiring a total outlay of P2,160 for the three members. The minimum salary provided in the bill is P1,440 per annum for each councilor, or a total of P8,640 per annum for the four elective and two appointive members of the council. This means an immediate increase in the expenses of the City of P6,480 per annum which has to be met with every year without regard to the financial condition of the City. Rigidity is, therefore, substituted for the flexibility allowed by section 2553 (a) of the Revised Administrative Code, for under said section the city council, with the approval of the Department Head, may increase or reduce any salary fixed for any fiscal year taking into account the finances of the City.

In this connection it should also be taken into consideration that the position of members of city councils, like that of members of provincial or municipal boards, does not, by its very nature, require the exclusive attention of the incumbents and therefore does not prevent the latter from engaging in their respective professions, occupations or callings. Under the fixed yearly salary plan as proposed in this bill, a member of the city council may continue to receive his salary without performing his duties by absenting himself from the sessions of the council. It is in view of these considerations that a uniform policy has been followed in basing the compensation of members of provincial boards, municipal councils and of city councils on the number of sessions attended. The only exception at present is the City of Baguio, and this is because the present law permits the city council to fix the compensation of its own members, subject to the approval of the Department Head. There can be no question that it would be an improvement in the Charter of the City of Baguio if the compensation of members of the city council were fixed by law on the basis of per diems for sessions actually attended by them, as such members will then have to render actual service in order that they may receive the compensation provided by law.

Manuel L. Quezon, Fourth State of the Nation Address, January 24, 1938

of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On the Revision of the System of Taxation

[Delivered at the Opening of the Third Session in the Assembly Hall, Legislative Building, Manila on January 24, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The state of the nation remains practically the same as reported in my annual message to your Honorable Body at the beginning of your last regular session on the 16th of October, 1937.

We are earnestly concerned with social justice. Without a strict application of social justice to all elements of the community, general satisfaction of the people with their government is impossible to achieve. Here, in the just and equitable solution of social problems, is the real test of the sufficiency of democracy to meet present-day conditions of society.

Social justice involves many and varied questions, such as taxation, wages, land ownership, insurance against accidents and old age, etc.

I desire to direct your attention at this time to one subject only—taxation—which we are solemnly committed to revise in order to place the burden upon those who should and can best carry it.

Taxation is imposed in the interest of the nation: to keep peace and maintain order; to repel invasion; to prove the living conditions of the people; to educate them; to promote agriculture, industry and trade.

The power to tax may also be used to prevent the accumulation of vast wealth in a few hands. This is not to deny the right of property of the individual, but it is to affirm that this right may be limited by the State when social well-being demands it. The root of the worldwide discontent among peoples, which gave birth to communism in Russia and which has been at the bottom of every revolution of the last forty years, has been the utter disregard by governments of the social purpose of property. Selfish interests have been allowed to dictate government policies affecting social and economic life.

In the past, taxation has not been concerned with principles of justice and rarely has it been concerned with bettering the people. Rather it has sought only to produce revenues and to place the burdens on the backs of those least able to remonstrate. It has done this by taxes on consumption, on sales, on licenses to engage in business, trade or profession, and by excessive charges on services which should be rendered by the Government and for which only a sufficient charge should be made to cover the cost. Those who rule have not paid their share. They have exempted the wealth they owned and the incomes they enjoyed almost wholly from taxation. This has been true throughout the world. It has been true of the Philippines as well.

Our tax system, unlike our political system, is still a heritage of earlier centuries, out of harmony with those principles which should guide progressive nations today. The Filipino people have one of the most progressive constitutions in the world. That Constitution is built not only on the principle of political equality but also on the added principle of social justice.

It remains for us to parallel our achievement in the realm of political science by a similar achievement in the realm of economic and social justice.

The present system of taxation in the Philippines is a source of the greatest injustice from which our people suffer. It may properly be said that our burdens of taxation rest most heavily upon the masses, and very lightly upon the rich. Bearing in mind the income of the rich as compared to the earnings of the labouring class, it is a fact that the richer the taxpayer the less he contributes proportionately to the maintenance of the Government. The picture of the distribution of taxes in the Philippines is this: The wage earner and the small farmer as a class carry most of the burden, then comes the middle class, and lastly the upper class. This wealthy upper class constitutes a very small percentage of our population.

In your last session you have done away with the one direct tax which was imposed upon the poor in the same amount as upon the rich—the cedula tax. But even after the elimination of this odious tax which accrued exclusively to the provincial and municipal governments, it is still true that as far as the National Government is concerned, its income comes mostly from customs duties, the tax is ultimately paid by the consumer, and in the case of internal revenue taxes, with very few exceptions, the bulk of the tax is also paid by the consumer. Needless to say, if most of these taxes are paid by the consumer, it is the great mass of the people who are carrying the burden.

The extent to which the Commonwealth is supported by the great mass of the people through taxes on consumption is not generally realized. Taxes on consumption are of necessity taken almost entirely from the poor. These taxes are added to costs as are all other elements of the cost. Thus, in 1936 the total revenue of the National Government, including the customs, amounted to approximately P85,000,000. Of this sum less than P5,000,000 came from direct taxes on incomes while the total taxes paid by inheritances and wealth amounted to less than P1,000,000. Deducting incidental revenues and other earnings, there remained P52,500,000 in the form of indirect consumption taxes on the things the people used, and for the most part had to use. They were in the form of customs taxes, excise taxes, license taxes, sales taxes, and similar charges.

The revenues of the provinces and municipalities, excluding contributions from the National Government, amounted to P46,000,000. Except for such taxes on real estate as are ultimately borne by the owners of the real estate, the great bulk of these taxes were consumption taxes or charges on the living costs of the people.

In other words, approximately P100,000,000 have been taken from fifteen million people not according to their ability to pay but according to their need to exist. This burden is equivalent to possibly P40 per family. And this burden is borne by millions of our people whose total family income is between P100 and P200 a year. There is no escape from the fact that the Commonwealth is supported in large part by those who are already on a low margin of subsistence.

In forty years' time we have taken from these classes a sum which approximates the accumulated wealth of the entire Philippines, agricultural as well as industrial. Within the past generation these consumption taxes have rebuilt the Commonwealth. They gave us our docks and harbours, our streets and highways, our schools and public buildings. The taxes from the poor have in fact made possible the Commonwealth which we now enjoy. It is their contributions that have given us security. They have paid for our courts of justice. They have preserved our health. They are maintaining our military establishments. They have made the Philippines a safe and comfortable place in which to dwell. It is the centavos of the millions that have created the conditions which have made our industries possible. Almost alone the masses have built the Commonwealth by their sacrifices. This has been going on for more than three hundred years. It is a system which we inherited from Old Europe, in which a few enjoyed all the privileges while the people did the work and also paid for the support of the state.

It is not social justice alone, it is ordinary justice that demands correction of this age-long injustice.

While in the case of the customs duties, we are not free at this time to introduce radical or even any important change in our laws, we are not placed in the same position with reference to the internal-revenue taxes. We must proceed at once to reduce and, whenever possible, to eliminate altogether, every internal-revenue tax which is passed on ultimately to the consumer, such for instance as the sales tax. The sales tax is not paid by the merchant but by the public who buys the articles for its consumption. The merchants, in paying the sales tax of 11 per cent for every sale that they make, no matter how many times, are only acting as collectors for the Government, and the real person who pays the tax is the last purchaser, the consumer. The sales tax, moreover, is not only unjust to the poor;

it also is injurious to the healthy growth of business. There are historian-economists who attribute the ruin of Spanish industries in the sixteenth century to the sales tax. In the United States, the Federal Government imposes no sales tax, and only a certain number of States impose it. But regardless of how other governments secure their revenues, it remains true nevertheless that the sales tax is unfair to the poor and harmful to the business. I, therefore, recommend the amendment of the sales tax law so as to eliminate completely the sales tax on every article that is of prime necessity and leave it only for luxuries, in which case, the tax should be materially increased. However, in no case should the sales tax be cumulative, but rather it should be paid only once at the source.

Another advantage to the Government in the amendment of the sales tax law as suggested is that there can be no evasion of the payment of the tax as in the past. Nor will there be any need for a large number of internal-revenue collectors and inspectors who, in the performance of their duties, are unavoidably causing annoyance and irritation especially among the small merchants. Many small merchants, insufficiently trained to handle complicated accounts, waste time and energy in keeping their sales books in order. I am sure that the relief which thousands and thousands of small merchants all over the Philippines will receive from the abolition of the cumulative sales tax and of any tax on articles of prime necessity, will in itself compensate, in terms of satisfaction with their Government, for the loss, if any, that the treasury may suffer. I believe, too, that it is in part due to the difficulties that the average small Filipino merchant finds in keeping his books and paying his books and paying his sales tax that the retail trade is not largely in Filipino hands. It is my hope and belief that the abolition of the sales tax will encourage and facilitate the entry of more Filipinos with little capital into the retail business.

There are other internal-revenue taxes that should be abolished or amended, such for instance as the license fees on the various professions. It is evidently unfair that a new lawyer or a new doctor should be made to pay the same amount of license as those most experienced and accredited in the profession they are paying. If it is the preference to keep this tax, at least there should be an exemption for those who have not been in the profession more than five years. In order that the Government may have a record of these practicing professionals, they may be compelled to pay only what is necessary to defray the cost of keeping that record.

There are still other taxes on our cultural life that should be repealed or very materially reduced. One of these is the tax on radio sets which should not exceed P1 a year, except in the case of expensive sets which are luxuries. The radio should be available to every family. It is a means of political contact with their Government. It is a carrier of news, by which the people may be informed as to what is going on in the world. Through the radio adult education is possible. Through it, music and drama can be disseminated in every barrio. By means of the radio, police administration is made easier, and property and life made more secure. To tax such an instrument by an almost prohibitive charge to the poor is as indefensible as a prohibitive tax on the daily press.

In the case of the market licenses, I recommend that the National Assembly enact a law prohibiting the municipalities from collecting market and slaughterhouse fees in excess of what is necessary to pay for their maintenance and upkeep. If, however, the municipality is still in debt for the construction of its market, it may be permitted, if deemed necessary, to collect higher taxes only until such cost has been fully recovered.

The foregoing recommendations will mean a serious reduction in the income of the Government which we cannot afford to leave uncovered. Fortunately, there are many sources from which we can raise new taxes without causing any injustice to those who will have to pay, for we must see to it that these new taxes are just and fair, that they do not discourage initiative in sound business enterprises. Indeed, my very recommendation that the sales tax and licenses be done away with is in line with our purpose not to allow taxation to retard the proper economic development of the country nor to jeopardize the confidence of business in us.

In your first regular session, you passed an act increasing the rates of our income tax, but the most cursory examination of the income tax paid in the Philippines both by corporations and individuals as compared with the income tax paid in other countries shows that we are practically imposing a nominal income tax. The United States is not the country that imposes the highest income tax, yet as compared with America, the income tax in the Philippines is but a trifle. Following is a comparative statement of the rates of income tax levied in the United States and in the Philippines.

It should be borne in mind that besides the income tax which corporations and individuals in the United States pay to their Federal Government, they still have to pay income tax to their respective States. In the Philippines, however, the income tax is paid only to the National Government.

I advise against raising the income tax in the Philippines to anything near what is being collected in the United States. We are in the formative period of our national economy and we should not discourage the investment of capital. But we must increase the income tax because it is inexcusably low. Moreover, this is the time to adopt the policy of avoiding the accumulation of enormous wealth in a few hands and to force the return of excessive income to the public through the medium of government services supported by these taxes. It is in the case of corporations. Inheritance and income taxes that the Government must bear in mind the need of reverting to the nation large amounts of wealth that may be accumulated in a few hands. From the increase collections accruing to the National Government from the additional income tax that we contemplate imposing, an adequate proportion should be set aside for the provincial and municipal governments.

It is my firm belief that if the recommendations made in this message are carried out by the National Assembly, we shall have gone far in our efforts to lay down the foundations of a nation wherein each citizen will contribute his part in the maintenance of the Government in proportion to his ability or resources. As we reduce the burden that is being unduly placed upon the masses of our people, on the one hand, and give them the wage that they are entitled to earn, on the other, we shall ultimately raise the standard of living as we reduce its cost, and thereby increase the purchasing power of the wage earner.

We are liable to forget the fact that the business of the country does not come from great incomes that a few individuals residing in that country make, but from the earning power of the masses.

I hope that this Honorable Body will enact the laws herein recommended early in this session. We have talked enough of social justice. Even the walls have heard our speeches. We have made a good start. We have raised the wages of all government labourers. We have abolished the cedula tax. But we have not done enough. We have only begun. Now we are fully prepared to act and we must act at once, if our people are to continue placing their confidence for the remedy of the social evils which embitter their life entirely in our hands. The last general elections have proven beyond question that the people have wholeheartedly and enthusiastically approved of our avowed policies. The City of Manila, which, like every large city in the world, is usually in the opposition by large majorities, has voted practically for the whole Nacionalista ticket, the election of two councillors from the opposition being purely a vote for the individual rather than for the party to which each belongs. As for the rest of the country, all the newly elected governors are Nacionalistas; only one or two provincial board members and an occasional mayor belong to the opposition.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly: The time to act is now. Deeds and not words is what our people want. We dare not disappoint them.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Public Works Program, February 1, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly on the Public Works Program

[Released on February 1, 1938]

PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

The construction of local roads is necessary for the social and economic welfare of the rural districts, since they will facilitate the marketing of farm products, promote education and afford means of social intercourse with the centers of population.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I beg to submit herewith, for the consideration of your Honorable Body, a public works program (with the usual draft of the bill for public works), for carrying out public improvements over a period of not to exceed four years and including public buildings, artesian wells, drainage works, hospitals, public dispensaries, health resorts, national and local roads, flood control works, portworks, telegraph, cable and radio communication facilities, and other miscellaneous projects. It is contemplated that a total appropriation of P92,271,800 will be invested in this program from the following sources of the National Government:

1.	Excise tax on coconut oil collected in the United States
2.	National revenues collected in the Philippines
3.	Portworks fund
	Total

Accompanying this message is an explanatory note giving detailed information concerning each project.

In recommending this public works program which is without precedent either in its amount or in its scope, I have taken into consideration not only the financial condition of the Government but also the possible effect of such comparatively high expenditures of cash upon the national economy.

We are in a position to meet these proposed obligations on the basis of the most conservative principles of sound government finance. No recurring expenditures are recommended that cannot be provided for from current and ordinary income of the Government. Expenditures for public improvements which will better the health and living conditions of the people and promote the economic development of the country are to be covered from the excise tax collected in the United States. With the exception of local roads, the appropriations requested are based on estimates for completing all projects included in the program. Since sufficient funds are now at the disposal of the National Government for financing this program, all projects included can be completed, if authorized, even if, for some reason, the income from the excise tax should be discontinued.

As you will see, when the budget of receipts and expenditures for 1939 is presented, there will be an estimated current surplus of P3,000,000 at the end of 1939, and also that the accumulated current surplus will hardly be touched in carrying out this proposed program of public improvements.

We must bear in mind in authorizing appropriations that will impose new or future obligations upon the Government that the excise tax collected in the United States will come to an end when independence is granted.

In preparing this program consideration has been given to the possibility that there might be a tendency for a rise in the cost of commodities in making these unusual Government outlays, and for that reason it is planned to spend the large appropriations recommended, not in one or two years, but in not less than three nor more than four. Fortunately, the Government Cement Plant will soon be equipped to produce all the cement that will be required and it is understood that most of the other construction materials can be purchased locally. If there should be an unreasonable increase in the prices of materials that are not produced locally, the Government is in a position to control prices by making direct importations for governmental purposes or by having the National Development Company go into the import business. In any event, I am convinced that the projects recommended should be accomplished now that we have the money to finance them, if the improvement of living conditions and the economic development of the country are not to be further delayed.

You will note that no provision has been made for school buildings. This is because in your last session you appropriated P5,050,000 for that purpose, and it will take the whole year of 1938 to spend that amount.

The Department of Public Instruction is making a thorough study of the expenditures required to provide the municipalities and barrios with additional school buildings to house all the children who seek public education. At the first regular session of the National Assembly in 1939, it is believed that more than P12,000,000 will have to be appropriated for that purpose.

In this connection, I desire to inform you that under the provision of existing law we shall proceed to build the Government Center buildings at Wallace Field as fast as the plans for the same can be prepared. We will soon start to construct the proposed building for the Department of Agriculture and Commerce which is most urgently needed because of the valuable records, particularly those affecting property titles, which should be preserved. Plans are also being prepared for the proposed Capitol building proper.

You will find in this program projects for additional buildings, and other facilities required for national defense purposes. Every centavo spent on these projects will be taken exclusively from the General Fund. The regular program of port improvement and the construction of aids to navigation and landing fields will be financed with the special Port Works Fund, in accordance with Act No. 3592, as amended. The usual period of two years has been allowed for the expenditure of the General and Port Works Funds.

In preparing this program for public works, careful consideration has been given to the numerous requests and recommendations received from the different branches of the Government, including municipal councils, provincial boards and members of the National Assembly, and it is believed that provision has been made for the more important projects, taking into consideration the funds that can be made available at this time. However, I wish to invite your special attention to the proposed appropriations for the improvement of sanitation, for additional hospital facilities, and for the construction of roads.

SANITATION

The furnishing of safe drinking water to those people who are now dependent upon unreliable sources of supply is without doubt the most important measure the Government can undertake at present for improving sanitation and health conditions. However, it has been unnecessary to include an appropriation for the construction of waterworks in this program, as there is now pending in that body a proposed legislation (Bill No. 2766), introduced during your second session, which would increase the Revolving Fund authorized by Commonwealth Act No. 125 by P5,000,000 and liberalize the provisions of that Act so as to facilitate the financing and construction of water supply systems. I recommend that Bill for your favorable consideration. Provision has been made for continuing the program of drilling artesian wells in those localities where it is not economically feasible to construct water supply systems at present.

Improvement of Manila Drainage.—Only about one-third of the City of Manila has been provided with a proper system of drainage and the remaining part is dependent upon sea-level esteros or canals. Most of these esteros are inadequate because of poor alignment and insufficient capacity, thus making it impossible to maintain sanitary conditions in the districts affected. It is proposed that these very unsatisfactory conditions be remedied by straightening, widening and paving those esteros that are necessary for drainage purposes and by filling in those that may be dispensed with. The work will also involve the construction of some new drains, especially in the districts of Sampaloc and Tondo, to provide more direct outlets to the sea, and the improvement of the Pasig River channel in Santa Ana District. This work is not only urgently important for improving sanitation and for abating the mosquito nuisance, but will afford relief to a large number of laborers who are in need of employment. Proper drainage will also enable the city authorities to enforce more effectively the Lowland Filling Act.

HOSPITALS

There are still a number of provinces where the inhabitants do not have ready access to modern hospital facilities, which is a serious handicap in improving general health conditions. Additional buildings are also required in some of the provinces that now have very limited hospital facilities. As you are aware, Act No. 3114, as amended, obligates the provinces to contribute from 30 to 40 per cent of the cost of constructing and equipping provincial hospitals, and since it has been difficult and practically impossible in some cases for many provinces to finance projects under this policy, it is recommended that said Act be further liberalized whereby the contribution of the National Government for construction and equipment will be increased to 75 per cent of the estimated cost of projects. It is believed, however, that the present provisions of law that obligate the National Government to share the cost of maintenance and operation of provincial hospitals for a period not to exceed ten years is reasonable and should not be modified.

Additions to the Philippine General Hospital in Manila are urgently needed to meet the present demands made on that institution. This hospital not only serves the City of Manila, but the adjoining provinces of Central Luzon as well. The National Psychopathic Hospital near Manila should likewise be enlarged in order to provide much needed additional space for accommodating the insane. This institution is now in a crowded condition and is not in a position to admit many deserving cases from the provinces.

ROADS

National Highways.—The greatest opportunity for the further economic advancement of the Philippines lies in the opening up and settlement of rich agricultural lands that are now inaccessible. By far, the largest areas of such lands are located on the Island of Mindanao, where climatic conditions are especially favorable for growing a variety of agricultural products, which should find a ready demand in the world's markets. There are also extensive areas of undeveloped lands on other islands, notably northern Luzon, Mindanao, Samar, Leyte, southern Negros, Palawan, and Panay. The first and most essential requirement for opening up and settling these lands is the construction of roads. A four-year program has been prepared for the construction of these national highways, which calls for a total expenditure of P27,200,000, of which about one-half would be invested in Mindanao. The carrying out of the program in Mindanao will provide a system of primary or trunk roads interconnecting all the provinces of that Island and traversing the best of the undeveloped regions. It will also afford an opportunity for thousands of settlers from less favored localities to become economically independent and will likewise enhance the advancement of the non-Christian inhabitants. It is unnecessary to point out the advantages of such a road system for the maintenance of law and order.

The program for the construction of national highways in localities other than Mindanao has been carefully studied, and it is believed that each project is fully justified by the economic benefits that may be expected. In some cases, these projects will provide much needed interprovincial or intercoastal communication, as well as open up rich undeveloped districts.

Local Roads.—The construction of local roads is necessary for the social and economic welfare of the rural districts, since they will facilitate the marketing of farm products, promote education and afford means of social intercourse with the centers of population.

Heretofore, it has not been possible for the National Government to give much assistance to the local governments in the construction of roads in the rural districts due to insufficient revenues. On the other hand, neither the provinces nor the municipalities have been able to finance the construction of such roads from their meager resources. Thanks to the excise tax collected in the United States, the National Government is now in a position to help the local governments in this matter; but it must be remembered that this source of income of the National Government is temporary in character and that the time will soon come when revenues from this source will come to an end. Therefore, if the construction of these roads in the rural districts is to be of permanent value to the people living in those districts, it is necessary that the National Assembly authorize the provincial governments to provide some means whereby the maintenance of these local roads may be assured. Your attention is invited to the fact that in many provinces the Road and Bridge Fund, including the direct aid received by provinces under the Motor Vehicle and Gasoline Tax Laws, is hardly sufficient to cover the expenses for the maintenance of their existing road systems. Furthermore, the National Government is not in a position to increase the aid now granted for the maintenance of provincial or local roads, since it has assumed full responsibility for the construction, maintenance and improvement of the designated system of national roads.

Concrete Pavements.—The concrete pavements thus far constructed have amply demonstrated their utility and economy through reduced maintenance costs. The construction of such pavements, however, is only justified on those roads subjected to excessively heavy traffic and when the high cost of maintaining the existing macadam, or asphalt surfacing, warrants the necessary initial investment. For these reasons, it is recommended that the sum of P10,000,000 be appropriated for the construction of concrete pavements on those sections of national roads which are excessively expensive to maintain because of traffic conditions. The program prepared for this work contemplates that this appropriation will be expended over a period of four years.

National Roads for Manila.—To facilitate the expansion of the City of Manila, in accordance with approved development plans, to provide more ready access to the suburbs and to permit the acquisition and development of parks contiguous thereto, an appropriation of P1,500,000 is recommended for the construction of a circumferential road around the City of Manila from the south end of the Taft Avenue Extension to the Balintawak Monument, via Welfareville, Camp Murphy, and San Francisco del Monte. As you are aware, the suburbs of Manila are being rapidly subdivided and developed and it is important that the construction of main traffic roads of this nature be undertaken in advance of the inevitable rise in real estate values, in order that rights-of-way and adequate park sites may be acquired at reasonable costs.

Likewise, the widening and improvement of the Manila–San Juan Road, including Aviles and Sta. Mesa Streets, is urgently necessary to relieve traffic congestion and facilitate access to the rapidly growing suburbs east of Manila.

FLOOD CONTROL

The extensive damage to agricultural lands, railroad lines, highways and bridges and numerous other public and private properties by floods in the Agno and Pampanga River Systems has been the subject of much investigation and consideration in the past, but the Government has only been in a position to finance isolated works which have afforded some local relief. While I am informed that the complete control of these large rivers is not economically practicable, it appears that present conditions can be vastly improved by the construction of certain features of the proposed control works, which will protect the towns endangered and greatly minimize crop losses and delays in railway and highway traffic. Estimates prepared by the Bureau of Public Works show that P5,000,000 can be expended to advantage over a four-year period in each of these river systems for the construction of partial control works, and that with the expenditure of these sums effective results may be attained.

Provision has also been made for a large number of proposed minor river and sea protection works that are pending construction.

IMPROVEMENT OF TELEGRAPH, CABLE, AND RADIO COMMUNICATIONS

There is urgent need for improving and modernizing our electrical communication facilities, which will involve the replacement of defective submarine cables and telegraph lines; the replacement of old and obsolete equipment; the establishment of new radio or telegraph stations in various places; and the construction and equipping of more effective radio sending and receiving stations in Manila.

MISCELLANEOUS

Pasig River Bridge.—The necessity of a combination highway and railroad bridge over the lower Pasig River in Manila to improve the port terminal facilities has been realized for many years. This necessity has been recently accentuated by the increasing business of the port and traffic congestion in the business districts. Furthermore, with the transfer of the Arrastre Service to the Manila Railroad Company, full advantage may now be taken of direct rail connections in facilitating the handling of cargo. This project is also intimately connected with the development of the proposed North Port District. It is planned to construct a lift-bridge in order not to interfere with the use of the lower Pasig River by interisland shipping.

Reclamation of North Port District.—The Government has had under consideration projects for the improvement of living conditions in the slums of Manila, especially in the Tondo District, for some years. In 1934, the Philippine Legislature authorized under Act No. 4184 an appropriation of P250,000 for the construction of tenement houses in that district but these funds have remained largely unexpended for the reason that the amount available was insufficient for acquiring an adequate site and constructing a sufficient number of buildings to effectively solve the problems. It is now proposed to set aside an appropriation of P2,500,000 for reclaiming approximately 200 hectares of foreshore land in the North Port District, adjoining the San Nicolas and Tondo Districts and to reserve about one-half of the area for parks and housing purposes. The remaining area, along the new water-front, would be used for industrial or manufacturing purposes. In addition to providing better living conditions for a large number of people, this reclamation project is also the first step in the development of the proposed North Harbor.

Special legislation will be recommended creating a housing commission for administering the area to be reserved for housing purposes and such additional areas as may be acquired for those purposes, and setting aside an appropriation to be used as a revolving fund for financing the construction of suitable houses to eliminate existing slum conditions.

Manila Airport.—The National Assembly, recognizing the importance of having a central airport near Manila for the development of local aviation, and to afford facilities for overseas air service, has already authorized an initial appropriation of P300,000 for its construction. Plans that have been prepared for this project contemplate making provision for accommodating both land and sea planes. The construction of this project involves the reclamation of approximately 120 hectares of foreshore land adjacent to the South Harbor, the building of the necessary runways, the extension of the Dewey Boulevard southward to provide access to the airport and the erection of the necessary terminal facilities. An appropriation of P1,500,000 has been recommended for the construction of the necessary retaining walls and extension of the Boulevard, in order that dredge spoil from the maintenance and improvement of the South Harbor may be utilized for filling purposes.

National Park Roads.—A number of national parks have been reserved, and, in order to make them available for the use and enjoyment of the public, an appropriation is recommended for the construction of the necessary roads and trails and simple conveniences for their development.

Tagaytay Townsite.—It has been clearly demonstrated by observation made by the Weather Bureau and other Government offices that the Tagaytay Ridge offers a very favorable site for the development of a health and recreation center. With this in view, an appropriation is recommended for carrying out initial construction of streets, parks, public utilities, and buildings, including the acquisition of the necessary land that will be required for public purposes. The proposed townsite is far more readily accessible from Manila and other large centers of population in Central Luzon than Baguio, and, for that reason, will afford a large number of people an opportunity to take advantage of its invigorating climate and picturesque location.

It will be noted that out of the total appropriations for public works herein recommended P53,000,000, or more than one-half, will go to the construction of national highways and local roads. I have recommended this very large outlay for the construction of roads because I am convinced that it is one of the best social and economic investments that we can make. These roads will facilitate intercommunication amongst our people, thus fostering national solidarity. It will enable large undeveloped regions of the country to be developed and thus make available the dormant wealth of our national resources. It will convert into reality our dream of populating Mindanao, building new cities there and wresting from the remaining virgin regions riches not now used and enjoyed by our people. In fine, the investment of these P53,000,000 will mean increased prosperity for the Filipino people and the concomitant improvement of living conditions and general well-being. The immediate effect of this program of road building will be to give general employment to the masses of the people, since fully 80 per cent of the cost of roads is for labor.

In view of the desirability of carrying out many of these public works projects as soon as possible, I commend this program to your early and favorable consideration.

Respectfully,

PARTICIPATION IN THE NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR AND THE GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

[February 2, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines has been invited to participate in the New York World's Fair to be held in 1939 in the City of New York to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the inauguration on April 30, 1789, of George Washington as the first President of the United States and the establishment of the Federal Government in the City of New York, the first capital of the Nation, and also in the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held simultaneously in 1939 in the City of San Francisco to portray a Pageant of the Pacific. The first is to feature industry and commerce mainly, while the latter is to feature the arts and culture and social progress in the Pacific countries. These two expositions offer a unique opportunity for the Philippines to educate the world in general, and the American public in particular, regarding our arts and culture, our social, political, and industrial progress, and the development of our natural resources.

Obviously, it will be to our advantage to take part in these expositions as the cities where they will be held are the metropolitan centers of millions of population and the foreign visitors from Europe, South America, Asia, Africa and the Pacific Islands and Commonwealths will no doubt also count millions of people. We can not afford to miss this splendid opportunity to display and portray to the world our country's progress, socially, politically, economically, and culturally. At the same time, our participation in these expositions will strengthen the ties of friendship and good will which bind the Filipino people with the American people.

I, therefore, urge you to enact such legislation as may be necessary to enable the Philippines to participate in the World's Fair in New York City and in the Golden Gate International Exposition in San Francisco, California. It is estimated that two million pesos will be needed to permit the Philippines to put up presentable exhibits at these expositions. I recommend that this amount be appropriated for the purpose, to be taken from such portion of the consolidated general fund in the Philippine Treasury derived from the proceeds of the coconut oil excise tax collected in the United States as may not be otherwise appropriated.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Creation of positions for two Auxiliary Judges in the Court of Industrial Relations, February 4, 1938

MESSAGE

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

CREATION OF POSITIONS FOR TWO AUXILIARY JUDGES IN THE COURT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

[February 4, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In your first regular session, you approved an Act creating a Court of Industrial Relations empowered to fix the minimum wages for laborers and the maximum rental to be paid by tenants and to take cognizance, for purposes of prevention, arbitration, decision, and settlement of any industrial or agricultural dispute causing or likely to cause a strike or lockout, arising from differences between capital and labor or landlord and tenant as regards wages, shares or compensation, hours of labor, or conditions of tenancy or employment. For this purpose, you provided for a Judge to preside over the Court.

The creation of the Court was decided upon in view of the existence of problems affecting the relations between labor and capital or landlord and tenant. The work entrusted to the Court has increased since the approval of the Act not only because of the industrial development of the country and the growing consciousness of the laborers and tenants of their just rights, but also because of the desire of the Government to correct as speedily as possible any reported unfairness in the treatment of labor as a means to carry out the program of social justice now being undertaken by the Administration.

A Court with only one judge presiding is clearly inadequate to meet the problems presented before it. Therefore, I recommend that necessary legislation be enacted to create positions for two auxiliary judges in the Court of Industrial Relations who shall hear cases by designation of the Judge of the Court, providing at the same time the necessary appropriation therefor.

Pursuant to the provisions of article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the bill designed to carry into effect the above objective.

REPORT ON THE LIAN ESTATE AND DISPOSITION OF EXPROPRIATED ESTATES

[February 7, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my message to this body on the opening of its second session, I informed you that the committee which I created to look into the problems regarding the acquisition of big landed estates would make its report on or before November 15, 1937, and I promised to forward same to you. Conformably with this promise, I have the honor to submit to you for your consideration a partial report from the committee—its report on the Lian Estate in the Province of Batangas.

As you will observe from this report, the committee set upon its task in a painstaking and thorough way. I have instructed it to proceed with its investigation of other big estates, because I am informed that conditions existing in the different haciendas are not similar. I am informed for instance, that in some of the estates, the tenants have been led to believe by irresponsible leaders that the lands they are occupying belong to them, in spite of the fact that the Torrens titles therefore are in the name of other persons or corporations; that the Government will take the lands from the registered owners and will turn over the ownership to the present occupants either gratuitously or with a discount of fifty per cent.

I feel that there is need to inform these people of the real situation. Our Constitution requires that estates expropriated for the purpose of distribution in small lots to the people shall be sold at cost. It is feared that if the erroneous conviction of the people in some of these estates is not corrected, they may later on refuse to pay anything to the Government. Although we are committed in a general way to the purchase by the Government of big estates, we should not buy any estate from which financial loss is sure to follow. And the Government will not purchase any estate simply because the tenants thereof have shown a defiant attitude towards any efforts on the part of the authorities concerned to solve the problems involved. People who are prone to take the law into their hands and who have little respect for law and order are not the ones who will always fulfill their contractual obligations.

Before the close of the present session and after I have received further reports from the Landed Estates Survey Committee, I hope to be able to submit for your consideration a more detailed plan for the solution of the problems caused by the ownership of big estates.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on National Budget for 1939 and enactment of a Salary Standardization Law, February 7, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

NATIONAL BUDGET FOR 1939 AND ENACTMENT OF A SALARY STANDARDIZATION LAW

[February 7, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 9, article VI, of the Constitution and of Commonwealth Act No. 246, I have the honor to submit to you herewith the National Budget for the fiscal year 1939.

The total estimated income for 1939 accruing to the general fund proper has been placed at P79,256,900. This amount is P1,188,800 less than the total estimated income of P80,445,700 for the current year, and P16,990,063.12 lower than the total collections realized in 1937, which reached the amount of P96,246,963.12, the highest income for any year ever recorded in the financial history of the Philippine Government. Considering the collections of 1937, this estimate of income for 1939 is conservative, allowance having been made for a possible decrease in the revenue collections from the sales tax on articles of prime necessity, abolition of which has been recommended in my last regular message, and for any adverse effect on our national economy on account of the prevailing unsettled conditions in the Far East and other parts of the world.

In addition to the estimated income above stated, there will accrue to the Philippine Treasury the additional income that is derived from the coconut oil excise tax and the expected revenue from the sugar processing tax to be collected in the United States during the current year. It is estimated that at least a total of P45,000,000 will be received from this source—P30,000,000 from the coconut oil excise tax and P15,000,000 from the sugar processing tax.

The 1939 budget calls for a total appropriation of P79,173,369.40, consisting of P76,403,819.40 for ordinary expenditures chargeable to current ordinary income, and P2,769,550 for extraordinary expenditures, of which P740,000 is to be taken from the accumulated current surplus in the general fund proper, and the remaining P2,029,550 from the coconut oil excise tax fund.

You will note that, with the exception of some items, the need for which is not expected to recur in 1939, the proposed appropriations provided in the accompanying budget are similar to those authorized by the 1938 Appropriation Act. This is due to the fact that only one month of the current year has elapsed and, for obvious reasons, the different departments, bureaus and offices of the Government are not yet in a position to determine what changes in their appropriations they should recommend for the year 1939. I, therefore, intend to submit to you at a later date such modifications of the 1939 Budget as may be found necessary after the different heads of departments and chiefs of bureaus and offices shall have had a reasonable length of time within which to ascertain the needed changes in their respective appropriations.

I am glad to be able to report to you that the condition of the finances of the Commonwealth Government continues to stand on a stable foundation. At the close of the fiscal year 1937, the general fund proper had an unappropriated current surplus of P58,965,108.49. In the budget for 1938, it has been estimated that the excess of ordinary income over ordinary expenditures for this year will reach P3,232,135.88, and that for 1939, as shown in the accompanying budget, will amount to P2,853,080.60.

The coconut oil excise tax fund had an unappropriated current surplus of P86,984,618.58 on December 31, 1937. In my message of February 1, 1938, recommending the appropriation of P92,271,800 for carrying out a four years' public works program, I proposed that P85,573,600 thereof be taken from the coconut oil excise tax fund, P4,423,200 from the general fund proper, and the remaining P2,275,000 from the port works fund.

In the preparation of the annual budgets, a great deal of difficulty is encountered in determining the rates of salaries that should be provided for the different positions in the government service. There being no salary standards fixed by law for the great majority of the positions, salary rates have heretofore been fixed more or less arbitrarily by the heads of departments and chiefs of bureaus and offices concerned. Under this arrangement, what is considered by the head of a department today as a salary rate commensurate with the importance of a position under him may be considered inadequate or excessive by his successor tomorrow. Consequently, when the salary rates now provided for the different positions in the Government are viewed from the standpoint of their relative importance, glaring inequalities immediately come to one's notice. In some cases, employees with comparatively high salaries are doing work of minor importance and with limited responsibility, while in other cases, employees with meager pay are being required to perform important functions of greater responsibility. Furthermore, as there is now no maximum limit of the salary rate that can be provided for any position, many government employees hold the wrong notion that they are entitled to annual salary increases, unmindful of the fact that the salary rates they are receiving may already be equal to, or more than, the maximum rates that are considered commensurate with the importance of the functions they are performing. This anomalous situation can only be remedied by the adoption of a sound salary standardization plan. The Government Survey Board has prepared a plan for the classification of the positions and the standardization of the salaries of the Government personnel, which I consider adequate and satisfactory. I am submitting the said plan to you for your consideration. I earnestly recommend the early enactment in this session of an appropriate salary standardization law.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on additional appropriation for the acquisition of homesite in Haciendas, February 8, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE ACQUISITION OF HOMESITES IN HACIENDAS

[February 8, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

During your first regular session, you enacted Commonwealth Act No. 20, authorizing the President of the Philippines to order the institution of expropriation proceedings or to enter into negotiations for the purpose of acquiring portions of large landed estates used as homesites and reselling them at cost to their bonafide occupants. Since the enactment of this Act, the technical personnel appointed to carry out the provisions thereof have, jointly with the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce, been making investigations into the different haciendas in order to determine which of these haciendas should be purchased for homesite purposes, the area and the approximate cost thereof and other data that are necessary prior to their acquisition.

As a result of the investigations made into these haciendas, the Government has decided to file cases in the proper courts for the expropriation of homesites in the haciendas of Lian in Batangas, San Pedro de Tunasan in Laguna and Dinalupihan in Bataan, after the necessary survey and subdivision thereof have been made. The homesites in these haciendas involve over two thousand heads of families, and it is expected that after the final decision of the court in these cases, the heads of families concerned will be given the opportunity to be the owners of their homes and their residential lots in which they and their forbears have been born and raised.

Other haciendas are being investigated and surveyed with a view to their acquisition for homesites for the tenants residing therein. Upon the filing, however, of a case for the expropriation of an hacienda, the law requires the deposit with the provincial treasurer of a sum equivalent to a reasonable purchase price of the lots, as fixed by the court, in order that the Government may enter immediately upon the land. To cover the deposits representing the approximate purchase prices of the homesites within these haciendas, for which cases in court have already been filed, a good portion of the one million pesos appropriated under Commonwealth Act No. 20 has already been obligated. In view thereof, the Government can not proceed to the filing of other cases in court due to the lack of sufficient funds for the purpose intended by the Homesite Act.

In order to enable the Government to fully carry out the purpose of Commonwealth Act No. 20, which is to enable the tenants in the landed estates to found homes of their own, I recommend that the National Assembly appropriate an additional sum of P2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which amount may be taken from the proceeds of the excise tax on coconut oil accruing to the Philippine Treasury.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Legislation Confirming the International Agreement regarding the Regulation of Production and Marketing of Sugar, February 10, 1938

LEGISLATION CONFIRMING THE INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT REGARDING THE REGULATION OF PRODUCTION AND MARKETING OF SUGAR

[February 10, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to forward to you a copy of the International Agreement Regarding the Regulation of Production and Marketing of Sugar with a protocol concerning transitional measures, signed in London on May 6, 1937. This Agreement was adopted at an international conference of sugar producing and consuming countries, which was called with a view to establishing and maintaining an orderly relationship between the supply of and demand for sugar in the world market. Both the Agreement and the protocol were signed in respect of the Commonwealth of the Philippines by a delegate representing the Commonwealth in the United States delegation.

In transmitting the Agreement to the United States Senate, which consented to its ratification on December 20, 1937, the President of the United States declared that after the action that that body may have taken on the same, action by the local National Assembly will be necessary to implement the commitments made thereunder by the Commonwealth, before he (the President) may be in a position to ratify it. It is, therefore, now incumbent upon our Government, through the National Assembly, to enact the necessary legislation confirming the commitments made by the Philippines under the Agreement.

It is a matter of great practical importance that the National Assembly give consideration to this question at the earliest possible date. You are all aware of the various means undertaken by the Governments of the United States and the Commonwealth of the Philippines to limit, control and allot the quantity of sugar which may be exported to the United States, produced and sold for domestic consumption and held as stocks for reserve. These measures were adopted to restrict and regulate the production of sugar in the Philippines which had reached such a degree of development that the inevitable existence of a huge surplus of unmarketable sugar was once feared, a situation which would have constituted a serious menace to the happiness and well-being of those engaged in the industry.

Confronted with the same problem of overproduction and lack of coördination between supply and demand, the governments of twenty-two sugar producing and consuming countries collaborated together in an international agreement by which the United States and the Commonwealth of the Philippines, through their duly constituted representatives, undertake to limit the access of Philippine sugar to the free markets of the world and to establish certain limitations as to stocks of sugar which may be accumulated in the Philippines. The Agreement is a necessary complement to our existing legislation covering sugar limitation and control.

I, therefore, urge the immediate passage of the required legislation to expedite definite entry of the Agreement into force and to enable the United States and the Commonwealth of the Philippines to cast their votes in the next meeting of the International Sugar Council early this year. For this purpose, I am attaching hereto draft of a resolution which, if approved, will give the Government sufficient authority, in the opinion of the Secretary of Justice, to carry into effect the terms of the Agreement.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on increase of members of the Court of Appeals

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Increase of Members of the Court of Appeals

[Released on February 10, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

At the opening of the regular session of this august body on June 16, 1936, in commenting upon the passage of Commonwealth Act No. 3 creating the Court of Appeals, I had occasion to state that as soon as funds were available for the purpose, I would recommend the creation of another division in the Court of Appeals to sit in one of the southern provinces, and to authorize the various divisions of said Court to sit in any province within their jurisdiction to hear cases pending before it for decision. At that time I was impelled to make that recommendation on account of my desire to make appeals as economical as possible in order to afford an opportunity to our less favored population to seek redress of their grievances in the highest courts of the land. There was not enough time then to observe the results of a normal functioning of the Court as constituted in Commonwealth Act No. 3.

I have now before me a summary of the work of the Court of Appeals during the year 1937, when the Court was functioning with a full membership. It appears that during the year 1937 there were filed with the Court 1,376 cases. During the year the Court, by decision or resolution, disposed of a total of 1,141 cases only, which shows that as presently constituted the Court would be unable to cope with the cases normally filed on appeal every year. If we take into account the fact that beginning with the first day of this year there were already 1,813 cases before the Court remaining undisposed of, which were the remainder of cases filed in 1936 and in 1937, and 179 cases coming from the Supreme Court still left undecided, it becomes evident that unless the number of Judges in the Court of Appeals is increased so that an additional division can function, the Court will find itself with a clogged docket before the end of the year 1938.

In order that the work of the three divisions of the Court may be coördinated and to avoid as much as possible conflicting decisions on cases of similar nature, and in order that the creation of another division may not become unduly expensive, it is believed that for the present the three divisions of the Court should function in the City of Manila, unless it is found that public interest requires that one or more divisions should hold its sessions in some other place.

It is recommended, therefore, that for the time being the membership of the Court should be increased to one presiding judge and fourteen appellate judges so that they may sit in three divisions at the same time in the City of Manila and that the Court be authorized to have any of its divisions hold session in any other part of the Philippines whenever public interest so requires. As it is important that this new division of the Court should function as early as possible during the present year, I can not but urge this honorable body to take prompt action on this recommendation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on prompt payment of salaries and wages,
February 16, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Prompt Payment of Salaries and Wages

[February 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

One of the most unjust, and even cruel, practices of employers that has been called to our attention, is that of not paying their employees and laborers on the date that their salaries or wages are due. This practice compels the employees and laborers to become victims of usurers and, as I am told, some of the employers themselves indirectly loan money to these employees and laborers with interest, while on the other hand they withhold unduly their pay or wage.

I recommend to the National Assembly the immediate enactment of a law that will stop such practice. It will be necessary to impose penalties that will be greater than the profit that this practice has been giving to those firms or individuals who have thus inhumanly exploited their employees and laborers. In this connection, I recommend the reenactment of Act No. 2549, as amended by Act No. 3958, prohibiting, among others, the payment of salaries or wages by means of tokens, chits or objects, there being certain doubts as to the validity of Act No. 3958, since at the date of its approval the former Act, which it purports to amend had already been repealed expressly by the Revised Penal Code.

Pursuant to the provisions of article VI, section 12, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of such law.

LEGISLATION ON ACCEPTANCE OF HONORS CONFERRED UPON MAJOR GENERAL BASILIO J. VALDES AND CAPTAIN CIRIACO CARILLO

[February 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to bring to your attention the fact that Major General Basilio J. Valdes, Deputy Chief of Staff of the Army of the Philippines, has been conferred the order of “Commander du Dragon du l’Annam” by the Government General of French Indo-China and His Majesty the Emperor of Annam, and that Major General Valdes, and Captain Ciriaco Carillo of the Philippine Coast Guard Service have also been conferred the ranks of Officer of the Order of the Belgian Crown and Chevalier of the Order of the Belgian Crown, respectively, by His Majesty the King of the Belgians.

Under an Act of Congress (Private No. 55, 75th Congress), Major General Valdes and Captain Carillo, among certain officers of the United States Army and Navy, have been authorized to accept such medals, orders and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered. As Major General Valdes and Captain Carillo are officials of the Commonwealth Government, it is necessary that authorization be likewise granted by our Government under the provisions of article III, section 1, paragraph 9 of the Constitution of the Philippines, which requires that “no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted, and no person holding any office of profit or trust shall, without the consent of the National Assembly, accept any present, emolument, office or title of any kind whatever from any foreign state.”

In line with the action taken by you in the enactment of Commonwealth Act No. 252 approved during your last session, authorizing the Chief Executive to accept the decoration known as the “Order of the Brilliant Jade,” conferred upon him by the National Government of the Republic of China, I recommend that necessary legislation be enacted authorizing Major General Valdes to accept the orders referred to above, conferred upon him by the Government General of French Indo-China and His Majesty the Emperor of Annam, and by the King of the Belgians, and Captain Carillo to accept the order conferred upon him by the King of the Belgians, and likewise authorizing these officials to wear the decorations corresponding to said orders.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In connection with my message to that body, dated February 18, 1938, in which I recommended the enactment of the necessary legislation authorizing Major General Basilio J. Valdes, Deputy Chief of Staff of the Philippine Army, and Captain Ciriaco Carillo of the Philippine Coast Guard Service to accept such medals, orders or decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered. I have the honor to also bring to your attention the fact that His Majesty the King of Egypt has conferred upon Mr. Felipe Cuaderno, Assistant Director of Posts, a decoration with the corresponding insignia. This decoration was conferred upon Mr. Cuaderno as delegate of the Philippines to the 10th Universal Postal Congress held in Cairo, Egypt, during the period from February 2 to March 20, 1934.

Pursuant to the provisions of article III, section 1, paragraph 9, of the Constitution of the Philippines, and in line with the action taken by you in the enactment of Commonwealth Act No. 252, approved during your last session, authorizing the Chief Executive to accept the decoration known as the "Order of the Brilliant Jade" conferred upon him by the National Government of the Republic of China, I recommend that legislation be also enacted authorizing Mr. Felipe Cuaderno, Assistant Director of Posts, to accept the decoration conferred upon him by His Majesty the King of Egypt and to wear the insignia corresponding to said decoration.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Additional Appropriation for Relief Work, March 3, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF WORK

[March 3, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of Commonwealth Acts Nos. 90 and 239, I issued, on January 11, 1938, Executive Order No. 139, creating a National Relief Administration and consolidating under its sole management the different relief activities of the Government and coordinating them with those being undertaken by private relief institutions. The National Relief Administration took over the activities theretofore performed by the National Relief Board, created under Executive Order No. 61, dated November 3, 1936, as amended, and by the National Unemployment Board, created under Executive Order No. 122, dated October 8, 1937. This new office has been empowered, among others, not only to investigate the extent of the damages caused by typhoons, floods and other public calamities in the different provinces and determine the amounts needed for relief and rehabilitation work, but also to take a census of all the unemployed and indigent persons in the Philippines and ascertain their needs and determine upon ways and means for ameliorating their condition.

I have designated the Commissioner of Health and Welfare to head this new office as National Relief Administrator. The frequency with which different parts of our country are visited by destructive typhoons, floods, fires, and other disasters makes the National Relief Administration a very important instrumentality of the Government in its work of relieving and rehabilitating afflicted communities.

One important function of the National Relief Administration is to serve as a placement agency for providing gainful occupation to thousands of the unemployed, a great number of whom have either been utilized in public works projects or placed on relief work, or recommended for private employment. This service is certainly a concrete, positive, and conclusive proof that the Government has the welfare of the masses at heart.

Commonwealth Acts Nos. 90 and 239 appropriated P1,500,000 and P500,000, respectively, or a total of P2,000,000, for the relief of communities and indigent sufferers from typhoons, floods, and other public calamities. The greater portion of this amount has already been either expended or obligated, leaving a balance of only P203,603. Obviously, this amount is not going to last long considering the requests for aid or relief that are being continuously received from the different provinces.

In view of the fact that great disasters or public calamities, such as typhoons, floods, and fires are liable to occur at any moment in the Philippines and the fact too that wide spread unemployment still exists in this country, I recommend that the National Assembly appropriate an additional amount of one million pesos, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the relief of communities and indigent sufferers from typhoons and other public calamities and also for the succor of persons in distress due to unemployment or otherwise deserving of material aid. Needless to state, the appropriation of the said amount is necessary to further the ends of social justice when we are committed to promote.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Representation of National Assembly in the Council of State, March 8, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SPEAKER OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

REPRESENTATION OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY IN THE COUNCIL OF STATE

[March 8, 1938]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

I am informed that in your caucus tomorrow afternoon, you will discuss, among other things, the question of whether the members of the National Assembly should be represented or not in the Council of State, which I intend to revive shortly. In the first place, I wish to make it clear that I am not inviting representation of the National Assembly to this Council of State through this letter, but I am simply explaining why I am willing to invite a representation of the National Assembly to the Council of State if the members thereof so desire.

The main purpose which animated the creation of the Council of State when it was first established was to give the Legislature a voice in the councils of the Government. This was done originally by an American Governor-General in an effort to give the representatives of the people in the Legislature an opportunity in the deliberations of the Executive affecting important public questions, before a final decision was taken. Were I to create or summon the Council of State without letting the members of the National Assembly know that I shall be glad to have them represented in the Council if they so desire, my administration would be branded as less liberal and less democratic than the administration of the American Governor-General who first created the Council.

The principle of separation of powers, as well as the injunction of the Constitution against any member of the National Assembly accepting any executive position, is not at all involved in this question, for membership in the Council of State does not accord the member thereof any executive power. Nor, because of the appointment of a member of the National Assembly to the Council of State, will the Assembly be bound in any way by the opinion expressed by any member of that body sitting in the Council or even by the decision of the Council of State itself. The National Assembly is an independent branch of the Government, free at all times to act on any question within its province as it deems best. Should there be any doubt in your mind and in the minds of the members of that body as to the wisdom of any member taking a seat in the Council of State, I would consider it my duty not to invite you or any assemblyman to take part in the Council of State.

Sincerely yours,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

[Released on March 10, 1938]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

In view of your statement to me that the members of the National Assembly feel that it would be desirable to include a representation of that body in the Council of State, I take pleasure in informing you that I shall appoint the Speaker and the Floor Leader of the National Assembly as members of the Council of State.

Through the presence of the Speaker and the Floor Leader of the National Assembly in the meetings of the Council of State which will include, from time to time, meetings of the different boards created by Acts of the Legislature, such as the National Economic Council, the Council of National Defense, the National Development Company, etc., the Assembly may be kept informed of what these organizations are doing in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by law. On the other hand, you and the Floor Leader may, from time to time, bring to the information of the Chief Executive views expressed by members of the National Assembly in your conferences which would be of great value to the Executive. This letter may be considered supplementary to my letter of March 8th.

Very cordially yours,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on additional pay for trainees who may serve longer than five and a half months, March 18, 1938

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

ADDITIONAL PAY FOR TRAINEES WHO MAY SERVE LONGER THAN FIVE AND A HALF MONTHS

[March 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The National Defense Act was conceived with the purpose of producing effective national security at minimum cost. No feature of the Act exemplifies this purpose more clearly than that providing a normal period of service of only five and one-half months for trainees. However, it was fully realized from the beginning that an efficient Reserve Force could not be built up exclusively from individuals who had received no more than five and one-half months of military training. For this reason there were included in the plan such auxiliary training features as military courses in the public schools, training through the Junior Reserve, yearly recall of Reserve units for short periods of active duty and, most important of all, the training of noncommissioned officers and specialists through an additional five and one-half months of trainee instruction. On the success of this last feature depends in great degree the success of the whole plan, for without properly trained key men in the enlisted body of the Reserve, the tactical value of these units will be greatly reduced.

When the plan was initiated it was hoped that the Army's needs in eleven-month trainees would be fully satisfied by volunteers, and very early experience encouraged the belief that this hope would be fulfilled. It has developed, however, that trainees are not volunteering for the eleven months service in sufficient number to meet minimum needs, and, under the circumstances, arbitrary assignments have had to be made. Though such assignments, under section 53 of the National Defense Act, are entirely legal, yet since there is involved unequal treatment as among individuals, the charge has been made against the law that, in operation, it is to this extent unfair and undemocratic. All excuse for such allegations must be immediately removed, since the fundamental concept of the defense plan is that it prescribes a practical basis for cooperative popular effort to accomplish a necessary national purpose.

To place service of more than five and one-half months on a voluntary basis, and still to obtain the number of individuals needed, it is obvious that some direct incentive must be provided. To accomplish this purpose it is proposed to pay to every volunteer accepted by the Army for trainee instruction beyond the five and one-half months normal tour, a maximum of P5 additional per month. It is confidently believed that such a measure will meet the full requirements of the situation. It is, therefore, recommended that section 91 of the National Defense Act be immediately amended by including in it language to the following general effect:

“Provided that any trainee who may serve with the colors longer than 51 months, except for those who may be required by regulations to serve additional periods as a result of their own misconduct or unauthorized absences during the course of their normal trainee instruction, shall receive, over and above normal pay and allowances provided for trainees, the sum of P5 for each additional month so served. This proviso shall become effective upon its approval.”

To bring section 92 of the Act in conformity with the above proviso, the first sentence of the section should be deleted. The second sentence should be amended to read as follows:

“Individuals undergoing training in the grade of probationary third lieutenant shall receive pay and allowances as provided in the preceding section for trainees of more than 5 1/2 months service, except that they shall receive such subsistence allowance as the Chief of Staff may prescribe.”

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding measure.

Message of President Quezon on changes in the Administration of the Public School System

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Changes in the Administration of the Public School System

[Released on March 25, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to submit for your consideration a plan involving certain changes in the administration of the public school system. This plan was formulated after a number of conferences with officials of the Department of Public Instruction and of the National Council of Education.

First, I desire to invite your attention to that provision of the Constitution which requires the Government to provide at least free public primary instruction. This provision is clearly a recognition of the importance of education both to the individual and to the State. To make free public primary education a reality, it is planned to provide within the next school year beginning this coming June the facilities necessary to accommodate all children of primary school age who may seek admission in the schools and to enable such children to complete at least the fourth grade.

It is also desired to put into effect not later than the opening of schools in June, 1940, a system of compulsory primary education for all children living within a certain distance from a primary school. A law on compulsory education is deemed absolutely necessary because less than one-half of the children who attend the primary schools reach grade four and experience has shown that with only two or three years of instruction the child is very inadequately trained and retains little of what is taught him in the school. It is true that compulsory education is more than the minimum required by the Constitution but its importance to the welfare of the nation is sufficiently demonstrated by our own experience and that of older and progressive countries.

If primary education is as important as we acknowledge it to be, it seems unwise to continue with the present system whereby responsibility for the maintenance and extension of primary instruction is divided between the National and the municipal governments. In any case, when the municipal governments have been unable or unwilling to provide adequately for primary instruction, the National Government has invariably been called upon to appropriate the funds needed. It is, therefore, proposed to have the National Government assume full responsibility for the support of primary instruction. The main problems of providing salaries of teachers, the cost of buildings and equipment and the textbooks that are now furnished free shall be taken care of by the National Government, but the acquisition of school sites shall continue to be the concern of local governments as is now the case.

The Constitution, in requiring that the Government provide at least free primary instruction, not only safeguards every child's right to free admission to the primary schools but also implies that the child should also be given the opportunity of obtaining free instruction in the higher grades if and when conditions should permit. It should be admitted that four years of primary education can not prepare the individual for more than the most common and ordinary routine activities of his everyday life. For this reason it would be wise to encourage as much as possible the attendance of children in the intermediate grades to enable them to obtain a complete elementary education. And with this end in view it is planned to maintain and to extend the existing intermediate schools to be supported entirely by the municipal governments. The funds derived from the internal-revenue collection, from the land tax and from other minor sources of revenues that now accrue to the regular school fund of the municipality may be used to support the intermediate schools. Since these funds will most likely not be sufficient to take care of any increase in the intermediate grades, I believe it would be wise to give the municipal governments the power to impose a school tax so as to avoid the necessity of requiring pupils in the intermediate grades to pay tuition fees.

With regard to education above the elementary level, I wish to invite your attention to the provision of the Constitution which requires the Government to establish and maintain a complete and adequate system of public education. I have given the question of secondary education a great deal of thought and I am convinced that as a matter of policy, we should at this stage of our development give greater attention and more emphasis to vocational and industrial education.

Besides giving every child a primary and if possible a complete elementary education to train him on how to discharge his duties intelligently and to make proper use of his rights as a citizen, the Government should help the student acquire a secondary education which should round out his training for citizenship and give him proficiency in a vocation which would enable him to support himself and to contribute to the development of his country. Much as we would like to have the Government extend all possible aid to the schools, at least for the present, secondary academic education will have to be supported by those who desire that kind of education. Our financial resources at this time do not permit the Government to support the academic high schools. Accordingly, it is proposed that all academic high schools be supported entirely with tuition fees to be collected from students enrolled in those schools. But in order that poor students who are especially gifted may not be deprived of further education, scholarships should be established by the State.

I believe that the vocational secondary schools and vocational courses in academic high schools should be supported with provincial funds. No tuition fees should be required of students enrolled in vocational schools. To place these schools on a stable basis and to permit adequate planning and a long range program for their development, I recommend that legislation be enacted setting aside a definite percentage of the general funds of the province expressly for the maintenance of vocational instruction and empowering the provincial governments to create new sources of revenue which should accrue to the general fund.

It is also proposed to develop four or five regional agricultural schools of the Munoz type in different parts of the Philippines and a similar number of regional trade and industrial schools of the type and standard of the Philippine School of Arts and Trades but with a greater variety of industrial courses. Some of the agricultural and trade schools already established may be used in developing these regional schools so that the additional expense may be kept at a minimum. These schools will be maintained by the National Government, will be well equipped and adequately staffed, and will serve as models and set the standards for all other agricultural and industrial schools. They should offer more advanced instruction than that given in the provincial schools with a view to training leaders for the different industries.

In view of the importance of teacher training institutions and their very close relation to the efficiency of the elementary schools, it is likewise planned to have all normal schools, as well as the special schools, supported by the National Government.

I believe that the changes in our public school system outlined above will provide adequately for the proper development of the elementary and the secondary schools. The adoption of such changes will give effect to the wise provisions on education embodied in the Constitution and at the same time will give every individual the opportunity to develop fully his abilities to the benefit not only of himself but of the whole country as well. I, therefore, recommend that such legislation as you may deem necessary to carry out these changes be enacted at this session of the National Assembly.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Sinking Fund as guarantee against loss of United States Military Property, March 25, 1938

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
SINKING FUND AS GUARANTEE AGAINST LOSS OF UNITED STATES MILITARY PROPERTY

[March 25, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of enacting a law providing for the establishment of a sinking fund, the purpose of which will be to guarantee the United States against loss of military property loaned to the Philippine Army by that government.

Since the inauguration of the Commonwealth, the United States has constantly maintained a most coöperative attitude in all our efforts to establish an efficient national defense. Aside from all other types of military assistance rendered us, we have been furnished, on a loan basis, some millions of pesos worth of equipment which is now either in use in training establishments, or in storage. The eventual price to be paid for such of these items as may be retained permanently in the Philippines, will be determined, at the proper time by mutual agreement between the two governments. Official confirmation of this understanding is furnished in a letter from the Office of the United States High Commissioner, dated March 10, 1938.

In the meantime the United States Government is, of course, entitled to reasonable assurance against current loss or damage. Such assurance can be furnished most effectively by authorizing the purchase of United States bonds and their deposit with the Bureau of Insular Affairs for the purpose intended. The amounts of such bonds will be, as requested by the Secretary of War, subject to the approval of the President of the Philippines.

This arrangement will provide ample security to the United States War Department and will be entirely fair and just to the Philippines because the amount of the bonds on deposit will at no time exceed the value of the property on loan, while no withdrawals will be authorized except for the purpose stated, and after consultation with this Government.

Pursuant to the provisions of article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on taking over and operation by the Government of Public Utilities or Businesses coupled with a Public Interest, May 14, 1938

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

TAKING OVER AND OPERATION BY THE GOVERNMENT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES OR BUSINESSES COUPLED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST

[May 14, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am submitting for your consideration and early approval a bill, entitled—

“An Act to authorize in certain cases the taking over and operation by the Government of public utilities or businesses coupled with a public interest; to appropriate funds for such purposes; and to prescribe penalties for interfering with the exercise by the Government of its authority under the Act.”

Ordinary labor conflicts affect only the employer and his employees or laborers and the immediate dependents of such parties. These conflicts can be taken care of by the agencies now provided by law for their solution. However, there are some labor conflicts whose effects transcend the immediate participants and cast an influence, more or less appalling, upon a great number of innocent people. When a strike or lockout occurs in a public service or in a business affected with a public interest, the public suffers through no fault of its own. What is more, it is not infrequent that the strikes or lockouts in such businesses become a public problem, affecting, as they do, not only the convenience of a great number of people but also the maintenance of public order, the preservation of public health, and the operation of industries necessary to the national economy. In those cases, there is no doubt that the ordinary processes heretofore provided would be unavailing. The problem becomes serious and calls for immediate solution. The public welfare and the public interest demand that the services offered by those businesses should not be interrupted. The State should not allow any strike or lockout to jeopardize or embarrass the common weal. The service of that same interest, likewise, demands that some expedient be found to the end of preventing the occurrence of strikes in the business while under the control of the Government or to the end of recalling to the service of such business those who prior to the assumption by the Government of the control thereof, have abandoned their work, either individually or collectively, on account of any dispute or disagreement between their employers and themselves.

Therefore, the attached bill is submitted for your consideration. Under it, the Government is authorized to operate such business, for its own account, during the period of the emergency. It is my belief that the provisions contained therein are sufficiently broad to meet the emergency which a strike or lockout in a public service or in a business coupled with a public interest may cause. It contains provisions which will guarantee to labor a just determination and recognition of its claims and to capital, the just compensation to which it is entitled under our Constitution. It contains provisions which will protect the Government against sabotage while it is operating such businesses.

I am aware of the fact that there is no specific provision in the Constitution of the Philippines authorizing the measure now submitted for your consideration and approval. I am, however, guided by the demands of the public interest and by the implications that may be drawn from that provision of the Constitution which authorizes the State, in the interest of national welfare, to establish and operate industries and means of transportation and communication, and upon payment of just compensation, to transfer to public ownership, utilities and other private enterprises to be operated by the Government. (Section 6, Article XII, Constitution of the Philippines.) I am of the opinion that if the State can go to the extent ordained in the foregoing provision of our Constitution, it can do what is proposed to be done in the attached bill, which is much less than that.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 2, section 12, Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the attached measure.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Repeal of Laws fixing salaries of officers, professors, and instructors of the University of the Philippines, April 20, 1938

REPEAL OF LAWS FIXING SALARIES OF OFFICERS, PROFESSORS, AND INSTRUCTORS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE PHILIPPINES

[April 20, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the repeal of all existing laws which fix the salaries of the officers, professors, and instructors of the University of the Philippines. These laws are, among others, Act No. 2787 and Act No. 2672, section 1 (that portion establishing a schedule of salaries for said institution). In my special message to the National Assembly on November 17, 1937, I dwelt on the need of giving the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines full responsibility and corresponding authority in the management of the affairs of the institution. To achieve this, certain restrictions on the freedom of action of the Board of Regents should be removed. One of the most serious of these restrictions is the salary schedule for the State University, fixed by law. The Board of Regents has thus been unable to give the compensation which the needs of the University required, and the salaries for the various instructional ranks, fixed by law, have often not been in accordance with the duties and responsibilities for each rank. Moreover, in the contracting of eminent professors from abroad no limit should be placed on the compensation that may be offered, in order that the services of the very best men may be secured. The power of the Board of Regents to decide upon those matters should, therefore, be expressly recognized.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

APPROPRIATION OF P1,000,000 FOR THE PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF THE PHILIPPINES

[April 20, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

For some years now, due to the limited annual contribution of the Government to the University of the Philippines, the various colleges of the institution, especially those of Agriculture, Engineering, Medicine, and Liberal Arts, have not been able to provide themselves with certain essential and necessary equipment for their scientific laboratories. The acquisition of adequate equipment is absolutely necessary if this institution of higher learning, maintained out of public funds, is to perform its functions satisfactorily.

The Board of Regents of the University, in conference with me and in their last official meeting, has come to the conclusion that a special appropriation is needed to supply the deficiency. I am convinced that such an appropriation is justified. I have the honor to recommend, therefore, that legislation be enacted appropriating the sum of one million pesos (P1,000,000) for the University of the Philippines for the purchase of equipment. This will enable the institution to raise its standard and, consequently, to render the service that the people have the right to expect from this Government's high institution of learning.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding measure.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Heavier Penalties for the theft of Large Cattle, April 20, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON HEAVIER PENALTIES FOR THEFT OF LARGE CATTLE

[April 20, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

One of the long-standing evils which has been afflicting the inhabitants of our rural communities and which, despite the vigorous campaigns for its eradication, still remains unabated, is the theft of large cattle. While many circumstances contribute to make difficult the apprehension of the malefactors, the comparatively light penalty imposed upon them if brought to the court of justice is undoubtedly one of the causes of the persistent and utter disregard of the punitive provisions of our laws on the subject. It is of common knowledge that the perpetrators even organize themselves to make more systematic and effective the commission of the theft or robbery of large cattle, if not as a means of livelihood, in some instances as a new sport, at the expense of a great many of our poor farmers. Considering that large cattle are oftentimes kept not near the residences of the owners but in the fields quite distant there from, and that the present light penalties provided for stealing them make the risk involved in the commission of the crime so relatively little as to tempt the would-be male factors to commit the crime, cattle-rustling has become not only a lucrative activity but also a crime often committed with impunity. And as a rule the victims are the poor families and tenants whose means of livelihood principally depend upon their working animals. I, therefore, recommend that the provisions of the Penal Code be revised in order to impose heavier penalties upon those who prey upon a great mass of our working citizenry.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on transfer of the Northern Luzon Junior College, April 20, 1938

MESSAGE

ON TRANSFER OF THE NORTHERN LUZON JUNIOR COLLEGE

[April 20, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend that the Northern Luzon Junior College be transferred from its present site in Vigan, Ilocos Sur, to the City of Baguio, and to repeal for this purpose Act No. 2956.

Act No. 2956, creating the Northern Luzon Junior College, fixes the site of said college in the Municipality of Vigan, Province of Ilocos Sur. The Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines recommends the transfer of this college to the City of Baguio. Said college, if transferred to Baguio, could be developed into a regular College of Liberal Arts of the University of the Philippines giving both junior and senior college courses. The existence of a regular College of Liberal Arts of the State University in Baguio would have several advantages among which are the following:

1. Classes in Baguio could be given from March to October so that students of both the Baguio College and the Manila College of Liberal Arts could study three semesters a year, the former by transferring to the Manila College during the second semester, and the latter by transferring to the Baguio College during the first semester.
2. Such a college would serve a larger constituency inasmuch as more provinces would have an easy access to the same.
3. The temperate climate of Baguio is more conducive to study.

For the purposes of the provisions of article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Repeal of Section Three of City Lowland Improvement Act, April 20, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

REPEAL OF SECTION THREE OF CITY LOWLAND IMPROVEMENT ACT

[April 20, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of enacting a law to repeal section three of Act Numbered Three thousand three hundred and fifty-two, as amended by section two of Act Numbered Four thousand two hundred and sixty-one, known as the City Lowland Improvement Act, so that the City of Manila may, with or without the consent of the owners, fill the lowlands in the city which are considered a menace to public health.

Act No. 3352 known as the City Lowland Improvement Act was enacted by the former Philippine Legislature so as to facilitate the filling of lowlands in the City of Manila which constitute a nuisance and a menace to the public health, and improve the sanitary conditions in the City. However, section 3 of said Act, as amended by section 2 of Act No. 4261, provides that if the estimated cost of filling any land or ground belonging to private persons exceeds one-half of the assessed value thereof, the City shall not fill the said land or ground without the consent of its owner. I am informed that in actual practice this particular provision of law constitutes an obstacle to the attainment of the objectives of said legislation as the city government of Manila is presently encountering difficulties in filling lowlands belonging to private owners because of their general refusal to give the necessary consent. Thus, in most cases the city government has failed to fill lowlands in the interest of public health. I, therefore, urge you to enact the necessary legislation to repeal section 3 of Act No. 3352, as amended by section 2 of Act No. 4261.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Censorship and Foreign Distribution of Philippine-made movie films, April 26, 1938

CENSORSHIP AND FOREIGN DISTRIBUTION OF PHILIPPINE-MADE MOVIE FILMS

[April 26, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of amending sections 2 (a) and 3 of Act Numbered Thirty-five hundred and eighty-two entitled “An Act to create a Board of Censorship for Moving Pictures and Defining its Functions,” as amended, so as to empower said Board to censor locally made films and prohibit the distribution there of either locally or otherwise, when in its judgment any such film would be prejudicial to the prestige of the Common wealth of the Philippines or its inhabitants.

There are now in the Philippines quite a number of corporations engaged in the production of films spoken or silent. A short time ago one of these corporations took some pictures of the life, past and present, in the southern is lands. Many of the scenes contained in this picture depict or portray conditions which are not only untrue and do not obtain and never existed, but also are harmful and injurious to the prestige and good name of the inhabitants of the Philippines, and I am informed that said film had been given considerable publicity abroad. So far there is no law regulating the distribution abroad of films produced in the Philippines. It is therefore, necessary to enact during this session a law to remedy this lack of legislation.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the annual convention of the Philippine Islands Medical Association, April 26, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the annual convention of the Philippine Islands Medical Association

[Delivered in Zamboanga, April 26, 1938]

PUBLIC HEALTH AND SANITATION

I wish to convey to the members of the Philippine Islands Medical Association now in convention in the City of Zamboanga, my very deep interest in their convention and my sincere hope that, as in the past, their convention would redound to the advancement of medical science in our country. I congratulate the Association in general and its members in particular for the splendid work that they have been doing. I am confident that they will continue their efforts towards making the Philippines a better country to live in.

It is worthwhile repeating to the members of this Association the assurance that the Government is deeply concerned with public health and sanitation. The furnishing of safe drinking water to every community; the liberalization of the provincial hospital law to enable all provinces to establish hospitals and public dispensaries; the expansion of the Philippine General Hospital; and the construction of regional leprosaria, are some of the features of my health program.

The Philippine Islands Medical Association as representative of the medical profession can very well help the Government in its campaign to reduce our general and infant mortality, and to elevate the health and stamina of our people. While it can not be denied that money is of prime importance in the administration of public health, we should not lose sight of the fact that the quality and training of the medical practitioners and of public health officials, as well as their interest in the welfare of others, are of equal, if not of great, importance.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Abolition of the Manila Harbor Board, April 28, 1938

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
ABOLITION OF THE MANILA HARBOR BOARD

[April 28, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the enactment of a law abolishing the Manila Harbor Board which was created by Act No. 3002, as amended by Act No. 3851.

The existence of the said Board is no longer necessary, as the arrastre service in the Port of Manila is now being operated by the Manila Railroad Company, an instrumentality of the Government best adapted to undertake such work. Under this arrangement, the remaining part of the supervisory function of the Board over the Government arrastre plant of the Port of Manila can be undertaken by the Bureau of Customs.

The abolition of the Board will result in the transfer of an amount of about P600,000 representing current cash surplus and reserves of the "Manila Harbor Board Fund" to the General Fund of the National Government, thereby making the same available for appropriation by the National Assembly for the general purposes of the Government. In the estimate of revenues for 1938 shown in the Budget, an amount of P200,000 was estimated as available for transfer from the surplus of the Manila Harbor Board Fund to the General Fund.

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE

ON
PENAL RESTRICTIONS ON THE TRANSFER OF PRIVATE AGRICULTURAL LANDS

[April 28, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have been informed that many transactions of sale and assignment of private agricultural lands are being consummated in utter disregard of the inhibition embodied in section 5 of Article XII of the Constitution which provides that “save in cases of hereditary succession, no private agricultural land shall be transferred or assigned except to individuals, corporations, or associations qualified to acquire or hold lands of the public domain in the Philippines.” This is apparently due to the lack of necessary legislation penalizing acts of violation of this constitutional precept. In other words, this constitutional prohibition is wanting of a sanction which should be in harmony with the policy of conserving our natural resources as enunciated in the Constitution.

I, therefore, recommend the passage of legislation that will penalize acts of assignment and/or transfer of private agricultural lands to persons, corporations or associations not qualified to acquire or hold lands of the public domain.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

ON
REGULATION OF BUSINESS OF WAREHOUSING

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of enacting a law that will regulate the business of warehousing. While there may be a sufficient number of existing laws on the matter, yet these laws have distinct and separate objectives. They either refer to the issuance of warehouse receipts or the warehousing of some specified agricultural products, or simply authorize the establishment, operation, and maintenance of warehouses. There is no general law regulating the business of storing merchandise and agricultural products, although there are rules and regulations governing the same.

The development of agriculture and commerce has attained such a height as to give rise to the immediate need for more warehousing facilities and, consequently, to the demand for an effective government supervision over warehouses to protect the public in general and the businessmen and producers in particular. If merchandise and agricultural products are properly classified, stored, insured against fire, and protected from other hazards, the value and utility of warehouse receipts, as a vehicle of trade will be enhanced. Warehouse receipts, uniform in their terms and conditions, will find ready acceptance to credit and banking institutions and will, in effect, widen the credit range of our merchants and farmers.

I, therefore, urge the enactment of a measure that would in a way consolidate the different objectives sought to be attained in several laws now in force regarding the business of warehousing, to enable the Government to administer effectively and supervise closely warehouses already existing and yet to be established.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on separation of the Constabulary from the Philippine Army, April 30, 1938

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

SEPARATION OF THE CONSTABULARY FROM THE PHILIPPINE ARMY

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Since the establishment of the Commonwealth there has been under constant study the question of organizing a national police which, while assuring the maintenance of law and order, would at the same time, operate so fairly and disinterestedly as to gain and hold universal confidence and respect. At the time of the approval of Commonwealth Act No. 88, it was thought that an organization as contemplated therein would effectively meet the requirements of the situation, but continued investigation and experience have convinced me that the plan visualized in that law is not completely satisfactory.

The chief reason for this belief is that the plan fails to make either a definite use or a final disposition of the old Constabulary organization, but instead establishes another, and in some respects a parallel organism, necessarily to be composed principally of new, inexperienced personnel.

While by implication, the law contemplates the eventual elimination of this duplication of functions by a transfer of Constabulary responsibility to the new agency, practical considerations will make the transitional period long and expensive, while the resulting police machinery will almost certainly be less effective and efficient than could be provided in a simpler fashion.

My proposal is that we separate the Constabulary completely from the military sections of the Army, and employ it to carry out, under the supervision of the President those police functions that devolve upon the central government. Thus while every officer and man in the Constabulary will be identified with the Army, will receive his basic disciplinary training therein, and will be the possessor of those military traditions and customs that place a premium upon personal integrity and hold performance of duty in higher regard than personal gain, the organization as a whole will be definitely separated, theoretically and practically, from the defense forces of the Nation.

Other advantages to this proposal are:

(a) Immediate availability of an organization, in which the personnel is specially trained for the tasks involved. Experimentation in administrative method will be unnecessary.

(b) Political or other type of interference in police affairs will be minimized.

(c) The Army will be relieved of the financial burdens incident to a service with which it has no true governmental connection and which under proper budgetary procedure should, of course, not be charged against military activity. Because of the necessity for carrying this burden at present it was found necessary in the 1938 appropriations to authorize the transfer of the Army's own construction costs to the public works program. This was merely an expedient and if the plan herein proposed is adopted, it will not hereafter be repeated.

(d) The police force will be built up and improved on a foundation of past tradition, experience, and of generally splendid reputation among the people.

(e) The organization will be clean-cut, and will not duplicate any other one in existence, either in expense or in function.

(f) Procurement, promotion, retirement, discipline, and elimination of personnel will require no new laws or regulations, since in all these matters the new organization will be subject to the same legal processes as apply to the military sections of the Army.

(g) Administrative costs will be minimized because the setting up of complete purchasing, supply and many other administrative services will be avoided by utilizing the facilities of the Army.

If this plan is approved by the National Assembly it is my purpose to institute without delay a program of intensive and appropriate training in the rejuvenated, reorganized Constabulary, and in all elements of the nation's police. However, it will be the purpose to leave purely local police affairs in the hands of local officials. Through the Constabulary, as it regains its one time reputation for police efficiency, we shall be able to assist municipalities without antagonizing, to cooperate without patronizing.

Because budgetary estimates pertaining to the Army for the year 1939 have already been submitted and were not formulated in conformity with the plan herein outlined, it is, of course, necessary to make certain revisions therein. Assuming the favorable action of the Assembly on this plan, all estimates for Army construction in 1939 are to be stricken out of the budget for public works. This deduction will be taken care of by an exercise of the authority accorded the President in that proviso of the Army's 1939 Budget which permits the transfer, at quarterly intervals, of amounts as needed from Purposes I and II to other Purposes of the Budget. Hereafter, the yearly estimates will be submitted to the Assembly in detailed form under appropriate items and purposes.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding measure.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on inspection and grading of Philippine Timber and Lumber for export, April 30, 1938

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF PHILIPPINE TIMBER AND LUMBER FOR EXPORT

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The Philippines is exporting timber and lumber to the value of about P2,000,000 annually, but there has been no compulsory inspection and grading of such exported lumber and timber although the Government, when requested by exporters, renders inspection and grading service.

Complaints have been received from foreign importers to the effect that Philippine lumber received by them from some local producers is not graded properly. As a consequence thereof prices have gone down to the detriment of the Philippine lumber industry. At the present time, there is no uniform standard of grading being followed by lumber companies and other manufacturers in the Philippines. While it is true that Philippine lumber is commonly sold abroad under the National Hardwood Grading Rules of the United States, the rules enforced by the different lumber producers in the Philippines are not uniform.

Reports have also been received to the effect that Philippine lumber is being misrepresented in some foreign markets by dealers in competitive woods. This misrepresentation should be counteracted by the Government for the benefit of the Philippine lumber industry and those engaged in the same.

In order to remedy this situation, it is necessary that official standard grades and measurements be adopted to maintain the prestige of Philippine woods abroad, to prevent unfair competition, and protect the interests of our licensees. All lumber and timber shipped abroad should also be graded and inspected by the Government in the same manner as abaca fiber and tobacco consigned for exportation are inspected by the proper entities of the Government.

I, therefore, recommend the enactment of a law requiring the inspection and grading of all timber and lumber for export and authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to accomplish this purpose.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on appropriation for classification, survey, and subdivision of public lands, April 30, 1938

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

APPROPRIATION FOR CLASSIFICATION, SURVEY, AND SUBDIVISION OF PUBLIC LANDS

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The subdivision of public lands along national highways is imperatively necessary for the purpose of providing ready lots for homeseekers whose tendency is to rush to, and settle upon, public lands situated along newly opened roads and highways. The lack of properly subdivided lots to accommodate homeseekers has, in the past, been the cause of serious conflicts arising from the pernicious practice of squatting on, and illegal occupation of, public lands by settlers and homeseekers. I deem it part of a sound national policy to avoid the recurrence of such conflicts in the future.

Of the several national road projects, the construction of which will soon be undertaken by the Government, some will pass through regions which have been fully or partly classified as agricultural lands available for purposes of subdivision.

In order to enable the Government to undertake the classification, survey, and subdivision of all these public lands along with, or even before, the construction of any of the proposed highways, I recommend that the National Assembly appropriate the amount of P2,500,000 for the purpose. Of this amount, P500,000 will be expended for the classification of the areas not yet classified and the remaining P2,000,000, for the survey and subdivision of public lands duly classified. The immediate release of this sum is necessary for the prompt organization of the needed subdivision parties who will undertake the survey and subdivision work. We have adopted the policy of disposing only for settlement properly subdivided public lands, not only to secure equitable distribution thereof among applicants but also to forestall conflicts among settlers. It can readily be seen, therefore, that the immediate carrying out of the land classification, survey, and subdivision project will be a step looking forward to the timely colonization and development of idle public lands, especially in Mindanao and Sulu.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR REFORESTATION AND AFFORESTATION PURPOSES

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

During your first regular session, you enacted Commonwealth Act No. 119 appropriating the amount of P250,000 for the reforestation and afforestation of watersheds, denuded areas, communal forests, national parks, timberlands, and other forest lands in the Philippines.

The Director of Forestry, in his report submitted to you on January 27, 1938, pursuant to the provisions of said Commonwealth Act No. 119, stated that there are only fourteen projects which are now under progress. Of the total amount set aside under this Act, only a little more than one-half is available for expenditure for the ensuing years. I desire to lay emphasis on the importance of continuing and maintaining our projects on reforestation and to carry on side by side with them our activities on flood control. In connection with the work on reforestation, noteworthy results have already been obtained by the Government from the raising of quinine trees in Bukidnon and in providing future supply of pine trees in the mining districts of Baguio. However, the work already accomplished is very little as compared to what still remains to be done, due to lack of sufficient funds for the purpose.

With a view to furthering the accomplishments made by the Government in this regard, I recommend that the National Assembly appropriate an additional amount of P1,000,000 to be spent for the same purpose and in a like manner as provided in Commonwealth Act No. 119. The setting aside of this additional amount will also enable the Government to reclaim submarginal lands by making them productive through the planting of trees for timber and other valuable forest products, for the protection of watersheds, checking soil erosion, regulating floods, thus minimizing the destruction of lives and property, and conserving water supply for irrigation and for other domestic purposes.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

VALUE OF ADDITIONAL LEAVE OF JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT, ETC.

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2492, entitled “An Act to allow the commutation of the money value of the additional leave of the justices of the Supreme Court; the extended leave of the justices of the Court of Appeals and judges of the Courts of First Instance, and teachers; and the accrued leave of other officers and employees of the Philippine government, amending for the purpose section ten of Commonwealth Act Numbered Two hundred and twenty.”

It is estimated that the National Treasury will be drained to the extent of more than two million pesos if the bill in question is converted into law. Considering the needs of the country at this time, it is considered inadvisable to divert from the National Treasury such a big amount of money now. At any rate, the accrued leave already earned by government employees will not be lost to them, as the money value of such accrued leave shall be paid to them upon their separation from the service. Furthermore, the Commissioner of Civil Service has informed me that there are several bureaus and offices which have failed to keep accounts payable for accrued leave properly and the present accrued leave payable funds will not be sufficient to meet the demand for payment in case the proposed bill is approved, and the manner in which this deficit is to be met is entirely unsatisfactory.

VETO OF BILL No. 2338—SECURING TO LAWYERS THE RIGHT TO APPEAR IN JUSTICE OF THE PEACE COURTS

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2338, entitled “An Act to secure to lawyers the right to appear for or to defend any person in the justice of the peace courts.”

I am in sympathy with any measure that would help litigants in courts get the benefit of better counsel. However, this bill would, in effect, eliminate “procuradores judiciales” who under section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be authorized by the Judges of the Courts of First Instance to appear for parties in the justice of the peace courts in certain cases.

Since the services of lawyers are rarely available in some distant or remote places, this bill will work hardship on the people of these localities. Furthermore, according to the Collector of Internal Revenue, the total number of “procuradores judiciales” who paid the privilege tax for the year 1937 is only forty (40) but out of this, twenty (20) surrendered their licenses before the end of the year. It is very evident that the elimination of the said “procuradores judiciales” would not, in an appreciable way, be an act favoring the legal practitioners, in view of their insignificant number.

I cannot, therefore, give my approval to this bill.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on prohibition of use, sale or circulation of postage stamps and envelopes bearing unauthorized surcharges, cachets, or marks, April 30, 1938

Message

His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On prohibition of use, sale or circulation of postage stamps and envelopes bearing unauthorized surcharges, cachets, or marks

[Released on April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that certain individuals, taking advantage of the value placed upon postage stamps and envelopes bearing surcharge and cachet marks, have been placing unauthorized surcharges and cachets or marks commemorating new stamp issues or some historical or special event, upon genuine postage stamps and envelopes. Such practice is obviously designed to enhance the value, for collection purposes, of stamps and envelopes which are then circulated for profit.

Inasmuch as postage stamps and envelopes with such unauthorized marks are of no value for philatelic purposes, the public should be protected from the unscrupulous practice by prohibiting the same.

I, therefore, recommend the enactment of a law which would expressly prohibit the use, sale, or circulation of postage stamps and envelopes bearing unauthorized surcharges, cachets, or marks and which would provide penalties therefor.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon on the amendment of the Philippine Rice Share Tenancy Act

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly on the amendment of the Philippine Rice Share Tenancy Act

[Released on April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend that Act No. 4054, commonly known as the Philippine Rice Share Tenancy Act, which by executive proclamations is now in force in the provinces of Central Luzon, be amended so as to clarify certain ambiguous provisions of the same, thereby making their enforcement easier.

I propose the following changes:

- (1) While under the present law the rice tenancy contract, in the absence of a stipulation, expires after one agricultural year only, this period should be increased to three agricultural years;
- (2) Doubts arising from ambiguous clauses in a tenancy contract should be resolved in favor of the tenant if he is an illiterate. No such provision exists in the present law.
- (3) Any agreement between a landlord and a tenant whereby the latter renounces his right to the exemption of the fifteen per centum of his share in the crops from the landlord's lien should be declared null and void;
- (4) Rent of the land should be included as among those obligations which a landlord can not require his tenant to pay; and
- (5) The tenant should be made self-sufficient by requiring him to have a garden, poultry, and other minor industries in the lot allotted to him by his landlord for his residence.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Legislation authorizing the President of the Philippines to enter into Agreement with the Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Company regarding Foreshore Reclamation Projects, April 30, 1938

LEGISLATION AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES TO ENTER INTO AGREEMENT WITH THE ATLANTIC GULF AND PACIFIC COMPANY REGARDING FORESHORE RECLAMATION PROJECTS

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

By virtue of Act No. 3056, the then Governor-General and the Atlantic Gulf & Pacific Company entered into an agreement, pursuant to which the company should reclaim certain foreshore areas near the mouth of the Pasig River. The total area to be reclaimed was approximately 58,902 square meters, of which the Government was to get 32,509 square meters and the Company 26,333 square meters minus a strip reserved for street purposes. The time within which the work should be done not having been fixed by said Act, the company reclaimed most of the area that should belong to it, but failed to do the work of reclaiming the portion that should pertain to the Government.

During the period that has elapsed since the approval of Act No. 3056, further studies made by the Director of Public Works have shown that a change in the plans and consequently in the agreement would be advisable. This change bears close relation with the proposed North Port district development which involves reclamation of the foreshore area between the mouth of the Pasig River and that of the Vitas Estero, and an entrance to the adjacent basin from the mouth of the Pasig River.

I, therefore, recommend the approval of a law authorizing the President of the Philippines to enter into any agreement or agreements with the Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Company which may be deemed necessary to supplement the original agreement referred to above, and under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by both parties, in order to make the work contemplated conform to the changes that may be recommended by the Director of Public Works and approved by the Secretary of Public Works and Communications.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

REVOLVING FUND FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF TENEMENT HOUSES

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the enactment of a law to convert the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated for the construction of laborers' tenement houses under Act No. 4181, as amended by Commonwealth Act No. 43, together with whatever amount that may hereafter be appropriated or may be realized from the lease or use of said houses, into a revolving fund to be made available for the expenses of construction, acquisition, improvement, repair, upkeep, maintenance, and administration of the same. Approval of such a law is very necessary because at present there is no provision which authorizes the use of the rents to be collected from tenement houses for defraying repair or administration expenses.

REDUCTION OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE AGRICULTURAL FUND

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of amending Commonwealth Act No. 85, so that the minimum contribution that each province, municipality or municipal district is required to set aside as agricultural fund would be reduced from 5 per cent to 3 per cent of its general fund. Provision should also be made to authorize the exemption from this contribution, of any province, municipality or municipal district whenever it is deemed necessary to do so in order not to tie up a portion of the local funds which could well be utilized for other essential activities.

Under Commonwealth Act No. 85, it is made obligatory upon provinces and municipalities to set aside annually 5 per cent of their respective general funds for agricultural purposes. However, it has been observed that many provinces and municipalities are not financially in a position to give the required contribution without curtailing some of their essential activities. Moreover, municipalities whose growth and development do not depend upon agriculture have been compelled to set aside 5 per cent of their general funds to no advantage, while the principal activities of their inhabitants upon which said municipalities largely depend for their maintenance and existence have been unattended to. I, therefore, recommend the enactment of the necessary measure that would remedy this undue discrimination.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have been informed that some unscrupulous persons, firms or corporations have been resorting to acts misrepresentation in disposing of imported eggs by erasing from the shells thereof the word “imported” and representing the same to the purchasers and consumers as of local production, in violation of Act No. 4037. Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Replacement of the Eight-hour Labor Law with another Law, April 30, 1938

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

REPLACEMENT OF THE EIGHT-HOUR LABOR LAW WITH ANOTHER LAW

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend that another law be enacted to replace the existing Eight-Hour Labor Law (Act No. 4123, as amended by Act No. 4242).

Experience has shown that the present Eight-Hour Labor Law has not adequately protected the interests of the workingmen. There is a general clamor for a stricter and wider application of the eight-hour requirement. While the present law applies only to specified classes of laborers, the proposed measure should include all laborers, with the exception of farm laborers, domestic servants and persons in the personal service of another and members of the family of the employer working for him.

Under the present law, it has been observed that whenever a certain employer is required to comply with the eight-hour labor law provision, he retaliates by reducing the rates of compensation of his laborers. This has proved to be a very effective weapon in the hands of the employer to compel his laborers to ask for the increase in their hours of labor, and even if they do not do it, they simply acquiesce in the employer's desire to make them work more than eight hours a day for fear that if they protest their income would be considerably reduced. In order to forestall such move on the part of the employer, I suggest the insertion of a provision which would prohibit reduction of wages due to the application of the eight-hour labor law requirement.

In the proposed measure, I also suggest the insertion of a provision prohibiting the operation or doing of business on Sundays and legal holidays. It is lamentable that even Filipino-owned companies sometimes do not respect holidays set aside for commemorating important historical events or for honoring the memory of national heroes. While the rest of the world is enjoying complete rest, the laborers of some establishments, especially dry goods stores, are busy attending to their respective jobs. The prohibition against working on Sundays and holidays should, however, be made inapplicable to public utilities whose service to the public must necessarily be continuous.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding measure.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the enactment of a law which would require employers to submit information to the Secretary of Labor every two years regarding wages, working hours, and other matters concerning labor conditions in their establishment or place of business. The value of such information is apparent. Until now the Government does not possess complete labor statistics which ought to be consulted before any policy or legislation involving the relationship of capital and labor is adopted. With the limited personnel which the Government can provide for, we can never expect to have complete data or information regarding labor conditions in the Philippines if the employers shall not be required to help in this connection.

ENTERPRISES ON EQUAL FOOTING

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The vessels of the merchant marine are compelled under present laws to carry the Government mail delivered to them by the Bureau of Posts, without compensation. On the other hand, land transportation services are being paid for the carriage of mails. This difference appears to be without foundation, for, aside from being prosperous and realizing large profits, the land transportation enterprises utilize the highways which have been constructed and are being maintained with public funds.

I, therefore, recommend the approval of a law which shall place all transportation enterprises with certificates of public convenience on the same footing whether on land or at sea. Such a law will enable the Government to realize savings of thousands of pesos annually while the carriage and delivery of mail will be more frequent and efficient.

VENUE OF SUITS BY LABORERS FOR CLAIMS IN SMALL AMOUNTS

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the enactment of a law which would allow laborers who have claims in small amounts against their employers to bring action in the justice of the peace courts of the municipalities where they reside. The requirement of the present law that such action be brought in the justice of the peace court of the municipality where the defendant resides, in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary, works an injustice to the claimants who reside in places far from the residence of their employers. Approval, therefore, of a law which would do away with such requirement would be another step looking forward to the protection of the rights of the working classes of our people.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on enlarging the present territorial limits of the City of Baguio, April 30, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
ENLARGING THE PRESENT TERRITORIAL LIMITS OF THE CITY OF BAGUIO

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to submit for your consideration the necessity of enacting a law to enlarge the present territorial limits of the City of Baguio.

The area of the City of Baguio, as now constituted, is too inadequate to permit the laying out of an extensive and systematic development program in keeping with its rapid expansion. Additional territory is necessary to provide for its orderly growth. It is practically the summer capital of the Philippines and its development should not be hindered by lack of room for expansion. For this purpose, I propose that the Chief Executive be authorized by executive order to annex to the City of Baguio adjoining municipal districts within the Mountain Province, and that any action taken by him in this regard be submitted to the National Assembly for its approval at the next regular session.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Prohibiting constructions which offer hazards to Air Navigation, April 30, 1938

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
PROHIBITING CONSTRUCTIONS WHICH OFFER HAZARDS TO AIR NAVIGATION

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In order to encourage the progress of aviation in the country, it is incumbent upon the Government to take all measures tending towards safety in air navigation. We should prohibit any construction which endangers an airplane in flight and diminish those already existing. These requirements are not covered by the Civil Aviation Law, Commonwealth Act No. 168. Whereas the Secretary of Public Works and Communications exercises supervision over the enforcement of the provisions of said Act as well as the rules and regulations issued in conformity thereto, he has no authority at present to prohibit certain constructions which offer hazards to air navigation, such as tall buildings, towers, and poles in the immediate vicinity of national or military airports and landing fields. Such hazards minimize the utility of landing fields and place lives and property in danger.

I, therefore, recommend the enactment of a law expressly prohibiting the construction of buildings, towers, and poles over certain specific heights in the vicinity of national or military airports as well as the establishment of landing fields within a radius of five kilometers from government airports.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding measure.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on licensing radio receiving stations used for commercial purposes, April 30, 1938

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
LICENSING RADIO RECEIVING STATIONS USED FOR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The regulation and control of radio stations and all forms of radio communications in the Philippines are prescribed by Act No. 3846, which embodies the Government policy of authorizing the establishment of a commercial radio communication service only by a legislative franchise. At the time of the approval of this Act, radio receivers for commercial purposes in the Philippines were used in conjunction with transmitting stations which are regulated under its provisions. The use of receiving sets independently of transmitting stations was considered noncommercial in nature, it being then confined to the reception of broadcast programs. However, enterprising companies are now using radio receivers for the reception of press messages from foreign news agencies for local publications, thus entering into competition with the regularly established commercial radio communication companies. This enterprise of using only radio receivers at a station for commercial purposes should also be regulated by the Government and authorized only under a license duly issued for the purpose.

I, therefore recommend the enactment of a law or an amendment to the existing radio law which would require that commercial radio receiving stations should be established and operated under a license issued by the Secretary of Public Works and Communications, with the approval of the President.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on providing adequate protection to Philippine Forest Resources, April 30, 1938

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

PROVIDING ADEQUATE PROTECTION TO PHILIPPINE FOREST RESOURCES

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of amending section 2751 of the Revised Administrative Code, as amended by Act No. 3314, by making it unlawful for any person to willfully enter and occupy any public forest, proclaimed timberland, communal forest, and communal pasture; or to cause any damage to the timber stand and other forest products and forest growth found therein; or to assist, aid or abet any other person so to do; and to graduate the penalties to be imposed for violations committed within the different kinds of public forest. It is believed that through this amendment, the pernicious practice of “kaiñgin making,” which constitutes one of the greatest evils menacing our forest resources will be stopped.

The administration of public forests in this country has, since the enactment of the original law relating to public forest which is more or less similar to the law now in force, undergone certain changes through the segregation from the public forest of the so-called communal forest or communal pasture, timberland, and forest reserve for specific purposes. The Government has spent considerable sums of money for the delimitation, survey, study and investigation, management, or protection of these forest resources. Under the present law, however, any offense committed within these special forests is punished by the same law governing public forests. Taking into consideration the fact that these forests are placed under intensive supervision and management in contrast to the administration of public forest in general, it is felt that in proportion to their importance, a heavier penalty should be imposed for violations committed within said special forests. The effective administration of timberland, communal forest or communal pasture, and forest reserve, will also obviate the necessity on the part of the Government of instituting ejectment proceedings and incurring unnecessary expenses therefor to prevent such occupants from further encroachment or occupation of the forest.

As a means of providing adequate protection to our forest resources and preventing direct or indirect losses to the Government through illegal destruction of our forest, I strongly urge the passage of a law to this effect.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Further Revision of the Election Law, April 30, 1938

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON FURTHER REVISION OF THE ELECTION LAW

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

On the eve of the election of members of your august body, I deem it appropriate to invite your attention to the necessity of further revising our laws affecting the conduct of elections. In your last session you revised the Election Law in an effort to minimize irregularities, frauds and corrupt practices which have affected public confidence in the supervision of elections. However, in the enforcement of the revised law in the elections of December, 1937, certain loopholes and defects were yet observed. The frequent change of the membership in the boards of election inspectors has affected the stability of the functions of said boards and the cumbersome procedure provided for the preparation and actual casting of the ballots has greatly delayed the voting, resulting practically in the deprivation of the exercise of the political privileges of many electors to participate in the election of public officials. A further revision of the Election Law is thus necessary.

I desire particularly to call your attention to the corrupting influence of political pressure and coercion, and the degrading taint of monetary considerations in the election of our public officials. The country must be assured of a fair and honest election of its constitutional representatives. To build up a citizenry imbued with the ideals of democracy, where each constituent is made conscious of his civic duty towards his government, it is of vital importance that the lavish expenditures of private funds in election campaigns be reduced to a minimum. The country has experienced many a time the disgusting spectacle of election contests where, irrespective of personal fitness of the contending candidates, victory had to be given to the candidate most able to spend lavish sums upon his constituents. Such a state of affairs discourages the participation of able citizens not favorably circumstanced in worldly possessions, in the conduct of public affairs through the tenure of elective positions. No reason of poverty should stand between any person and a public office within the gift of the people.

I, therefore, urge you to enact the necessary legislation so as to curb more effectively the commission of frauds and irregularities in the conduct of elections and limit to reasonable proportions the expenditure of funds for all election campaigns.

For the purposes of the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Repeal of the Employers' Liability Act and amendment of the Workmen's Compensation Act, April 30, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

REPEAL OF THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT AND AMEND-MENT OF THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

[April 30, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the enactment of a law to repeal Act No. 1874, commonly known as the Employers' Liability Act, and to amend the provisions of Act No. 3428, known as the Workmen's Compensation Act so as to afford greater protection to laborers who may have suffered from injuries in connection with their employment.

There seems to be no reason why all compensation cases arising from accidents resulting in injury or death of laborers while in the performance of their duties should not be brought under only one Act. Inasmuch as the Workmen's Compensation Act is more elaborate and comprehensive than the Employers' Liability Act, the former is preferable to the latter. The Workmen's Compensation Act should, however, be amended so that small business or industrial enterprises should be required to pay less compensation than that paid by companies having big capital or yielding big income. This distinction should be made to protect a small business or industry from being ruined.

The Workmen's Compensation Act should likewise be amended so that one of the grounds for disallowing compensation should be changed from "notorious negligence" to "any act or omission punishable by law" on the part of the laborer. "Notorious negligence", besides being too broad, is difficult to prove, while "any act or omission punishable by law" is more definite. In fairness, however, to the employer, a laborer who has been injured because he committed an act or failed to do so in violation of law should not be allowed to obtain compensation from his employer.

Provision should also be made to increase the penalty for refusal or negligence of an employer to send to the Bureau of Labor the notice or information required by the Workmen's Compensation Act of all injuries received by their employees in the course of their employment. The reason for this is that a small fine of not more than P25, as now provided by law, does not deter owners of big and powerful companies from concealing labor accidents.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution. I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on transfer of the duties performed by the Bureau of Commerce regarding registration of corporations and associations to the Securities and Exchange Commission, May 10, 1938

TRANSFER OF THE DUTIES PERFORMED BY THE BUREAU OF COMMERCE REGARDING REGISTRATION OF COR-PORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS TO THE SECUR-ITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

[May 10, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Up to now, the duties and functions in connection with the registration of corporations and all other forms of associations have been performed by the Bureau of Commerce. In view of the recent creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission which has control over the sale of securities issued by such corporations and associations, and in the exercise of which power, it has perforce to go into the corporate and financial structure of the issuers of such securities, I believe that in the interest of efficiency and economy, the duties now performed by the Bureau of Commerce in connection with the registration of corporations and associations should be transferred to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I, likewise, suggest that specific authority be vested in the Securities and Exchange Commission to enforce the laws applicable to corporations and associations, as there is no clear and specific provision in any statute vesting this power and authority in any office of the Government.

I have the honor, therefore, to recommend that the necessary legislation be enacted to carry into effect the foregoing purposes.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, Section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the legislation covering the matter above referred to.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Rank and Term of Office of the Philippine Army Chief of Staff, May 10, 1938

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
RANK AND TERM OF OFFICE OF THE PHILIPPINE ARMY CHIEF OF STAFF

[May 10, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The organization of the Army of the Philippines has revealed a deficiency in the National Defense Act, which, in the interest of efficiency and good discipline in the Army, should be supplied. I refer to the absence of provisions governing the rank of the Chief of Staff and his term of office. I believe that the officer detailed as Chief of Staff should be conferred a grade which shall not be conferred upon any other active officer of the organization. While under the provisions of paragraph (d) of section 22 of the National Defense Act, the President of the Philippines is authorized to distribute the officers of the Army of the Philippines among grades as may be determined by him, and, therefore, the foregoing purposes might be accomplished by Executive Order, yet I hesitate to act thereon except upon express legislative authority, as the matter relates to an important Army policy and will affect the present grade of certain officers of the Army.

I have the honor, therefore, to recommend the enactment of necessary legislation to carry into effect the foregoing objectives.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the legislation covering the matter above referred to.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on the amendment of the National Public Works Program, May 10, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On the amendment of the National Public Works Program

[Released on May 10, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my message to you of February first, I explained in detail the policies and factors governing the preparation of the public works program I then submitted for your consideration. Your prompt passage of Commonwealth Act No. 257, appropriating forty per centum of the funds recommended for all of the items in that program has enabled the inauguration of actual work on a large number of the projects and active preparation for carrying out others. It has also permitted time for intensive study of every detail of the draft of the Bill for public works, revealing the desirability of certain amendments, in order that the program may more adequately fulfill requirements. These amendments are set forth in the accompanying draft, and will increase the total appropriation to P96,141,300, derived from the following sources:

(1)	Excise tax on coconut oil collected in the United States
(2)	National revenues collected in the Philippines
(3)	Port works fund
Total

They are, for the most part, self-explanatory, but some of them warrant special attention.

It is proposed that the item of P50,000 under section 1–(B)-a be increased to P345,000 and made available for the construction of the most urgently needed post-telegraph buildings throughout the country, in order that present unsatisfactory housing conditions militating against efficient communication service may be remedied and that expenditures for rental of private property for this purpose may be reduced.

The amendment of paragraph (q) of subsection (c) to enable the Chief Executive to allot the funds for certain items thereof to other National Road projects, if the public interest so requires, is designed to avoid the construction of highways which would compete with the Manila Railroad, and also to permit deviation from tentatively planned routes that are found to be in conflict with the best interests of the localities concerned. We must not forget that we have a very large investment in the railroad and are obligated to ultimately pay for all the Company's outstanding bonds. Until those bonds, at least, are paid off, we must be on the alert to prevent measures that would reduce the Company's income.

To cover such shortage of funds as may occur in the execution of the projects authorized, with the exception of portworks, for which annual appropriations are usually made, it is proposed that an item of P200,000 be added and placed at the disposal of the Chief Executive for that purpose.

The largest single increase of appropriation recommended is that of P1,600,000 for a modern highway bridge to replace the historic Colgante Bridge across the Pasig River at Manila, including the widening and improvement of A. Regidor and El Dorado streets and their extension to Rizal Avenue. Manila traffic conditions must be improved, not only in the interest of business, but as a means of more effective fire-protection and police and other public services. After careful study, it appears that this project will be one of the best measures we can take toward that end.

In order that the Weather Bureau may be able to broadcast storm warnings under any weather conditions, an appropriation of P319,500 is proposed for the construction and equipment of ten special radio stations to be devoted primarily to broadcasting weather reports and similar emergency information.

The item of P230,600 recommended for the establishment of new commercial radio or telegraph stations under the Bureau of Posts should be allotted as the needs of the service dictate and for that reason it is proposed that it be appropriated as a lump sum and distributed with the Chief Executive's approval.

Several items for river control, sea protection and port-works have been included as the data concerning them have now become available.

In view of the representations made concerning the needs of the various districts, there will be no objection to the amendment of paragraph (r) so as to permit the utilization of the sums appropriated therein for aid to the provinces, cities, and municipalities for the construction of other public works as well as local roads. There will also be no objection to the inclusion of an additional item, appropriating not more than P720,000, for provincial and inter-coastal roads, provided that the provinces concerned shall obligate themselves to maintain any such roads as may be authorized before funds for their construction are released. This condition is necessary because the National Government has assumed the burden of maintaining the National Road system and the provinces and municipalities must take care of the rest. We should not build additional public improvements unless they could be maintained. With this end in view, I recommend that your Honorable Body enact legislation authorizing both the provinces and the municipalities to levy additional taxes to cover the cost of upkeep of provincial and municipal roads.

I have deemed it expedient to include provision for an additional section, which would authorize the Chief Executive to designate any National Road, or part thereof, or any bridge or ferry forming a part thereof, as a toll road, bridge or ferry, as the case may be, to secure funds for the upkeep of such National Road. While I do not anticipate that such steps will be necessary immediately, I consider it advisable to have this authority available as a safeguard against destruction of the National Road system in the event that the normal sources of revenue for its maintenance are extraordinarily reduced, for any reason.

It is also believed necessary, consistent with the policy which has been adopted in previous appropriation laws to meet the exigencies of current revenue fluctuations, to insert the usual proviso that all sums appropriated from the General Fund and the Port Works Fund shall be released only after certification by the Secretary of Finance that there are sufficient funds in the Treasury to warrant such action, and, furthermore, to include authority for withholding the release of any item of appropriation in this Bill, wholly or in part, if, in the opinion of the Chief Executive, the public interest so requires.

With the amendments recommended, I consider the public works program I have submitted to you as one of the most vital measures for the social and economic advancement of our country which are possible of enactment at this time, and in that light I commend it to your earnest consideration.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the Public Works Appropriation Bill.

Very respectfully,

MESSAGE
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE

ON PAYMENT OF RETIREMENT GRATUITIES

[May 11, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Act Numbered Twenty-five hundred and eighty-nine, entitled “An Act providing for a gratuity by reason of retirement to officers and employees who have rendered satisfactory service during six continuous years or more, and for other purposes,” contains no provision specifying the source of fund from which gratuities of employees retired thereunder shall be paid, and the general fund of the National Government has been made to shoulder the burden of paying all gratuities that have heretofore been granted, including those of employees of the Metropolitan Water District, the University of the Philippines, and others. Such payments have been a constant and undue drain upon the general fund of the National Government. As a matter of equity and justice, the gratuities of officers and employees retired under said Act should be paid from the respective fund from which their salaries are paid at the time of their retirement. I, therefore, recommend the enactment of a law to accomplish this purpose.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Increase of Judges and Judges-at-Large of First Instance and fixing their compensations, May 11, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

INCREASE OF JUDGES AND JUDGES-AT-LARGE OF FIRST INSTANCE AND FIXING THEIR COMPENSATIONS

[May 11, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am submitting for your consideration and early approval a bill entitled:

“An Act to amend certain sections of Chapter nine, title four, of the Revised Administrative Code, and to insert a new article therein, so as to increase the number of judges and judges-at-large of first instance, to alter the times and places of holding courts in certain districts, and to fix the compensation of judges and judges-at-large of first instance, and appropriating therefor the necessary funds.”

The attached measure (a) provides an additional branch in the Court of First Instance of Pampanga and another in the Court of First Instance of Iloilo, (b) increases the number of judges-at-large from five to twelve, (c) fixes the salary of the judges of first instance in accordance with the scale provided in the current Appropriation Act, and (d) appropriates P88,115 for disbursement between June 1, 1938, and December 31, 1938.

Although the courts of first instance, during the year 1937, disposed of 21,984 cases, which exceeded by 2,339 the number of cases disposed of during the year 1936, the number of cases pending at the end of the year 1937, as compared with that pending at the end of the year 1936, increased by 217 in view of the fact that in 1937 22,201 cases were filed. Inasmuch as it is expected that the number of cases that will be filed during the year 1938 will be equal to, if not more than, that filed during the previous year, it is absolutely necessary that the number of judges be increased not only in order to dispose of the new cases filed but also to bring up to date the dockets of those provinces that are not up to date.

The average number of cases filed in Pampanga during the last two years has been such as to make it impossible for one judge to dispose of this large number of cases as well as the old cases still pending. Hence the need for an additional judge.

Iloilo, like Cebu, has an average increment of over 1,000 new cases every year. The judges in Iloilo are also charged with the duty of hearing cases in Antique, so that, all in all, they must dispose of from 1,100 to 1,200 cases every year. Cebu, with about as many cases to dispose of every year, has three judges. It is, therefore, necessary that Iloilo should also have three judges.

Other provinces had an unusual number of cases accumulated at the end of the year 1937. This condition, however, is only temporary and the increment of new cases filed in those provinces can be taken care of by the judges now sitting there, were it not for the previous congestion of their dockets. To keep up with the cases of those provinces, it is necessary to send there judges-at-large at certain regular intervals. Four provinces—Camarines Sur, Nueva Ecija, Laguna, and Lanao—will require one judge-at-large almost regularly for a year or so, not only to take care of the excess of cases pending therein but also of the cadastral cases that have been accumulating in those provinces. To permit the Department of Justice to have available at least one judge-at-large sitting in each of the nine judicial districts and three judges-at-large in cases of emergency, and in order to expedite the disposition of cadastral cases, it is believed that provision for seven additional judges-at-large should be made.

It is possible that after a number of years and when the dockets of the several courts of first instance have been brought up to date, the number of judges of first instance would be in excess of the requirements of the administration of justice. However, I would like to state that the establishment of collegiate courts of first instance for the trial of cases is now under serious consideration by me, as I sincerely believe that this would be a step forward towards giving our people the best assurance for an impartial and upright administration of justice. In the event that this course is ultimately taken, the judges of first instance that are made available by this bill will be fully needed to carry out our purpose.

Section 9 of Article VIII of the Constitution provides that the judges shall receive “such compensation as may be fixed by law.” Heretofore, the salaries of judges have been provided for only in Appropriation Acts, through lump sum appropriations, with no specific provision fixing the salaries of each of the judges in the several districts. Act No. 3911, which fixed the salaries of judges, has become obsolete on account of the subsequent reorganization of the Judiciary which has changed the districts throughout the Philippines. To give effect to the above-quoted constitutional provision, it is necessary that provision be made fixing the salaries of the judges and judges-at-large of first instance. The attached bill contains this provision, based on the scale of salaries contained in the current Appropriation Act.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 2, section 12, Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the attached measure.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on defects in the Charter creating of ambiguities and defects in the Charter creating the Court of Industrial Relations, May 11, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

CLARIFICATION AND CORRECTION OF AMBIGUITIES AND DEFECTS IN THE CHARTER CREATING THE COURT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

[May 11, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that the Court of Industrial Relations organized under authority of Commonwealth Act Numbered One Hundred and Three, notwithstanding the natural handicaps which all new institutions have to face, has been a very useful instrument in the settlement of disputes between capital and labor in this country and to a certain extent can be credited with having brought about a more frank understanding between employers and employees as to their respective rights. However, there are certain ambiguities and defects in the charter of its creation which, in the interests of all, demand clarification and correction.

The power of the Court to punish for a contempt of its orders or to punish persons guilty of misbehaviour in its presence or so near to the Court as to obstruct its proceedings, must be clarified. While I believe that, under the present law, it is vested with this power, yet, to dispel whatever doubts there might be on the matter, it is best that it be expressly and unequivocally conferred upon it.

Furthermore, the penalty for the contempt punished under section nineteen of the Act, where the offender is a corporation, should fall upon the officers of such corporation and where the offenders are persons belonging to a labor union, such penalty should be borne by the leaders of the union, the persons who have induced the commission of the contempt.

I, likewise, believe that the penalty provided in Commonwealth Act Numbered One Hundred and Three for a violation of the order, award, or decision of the Court is not adequate. To enable the Court to attain the ends for which it has been created, those penalties should be made more severe so as to discourage any person, otherwise inclined to do so, from flouting its orders and decisions. If the violator is a corporation or a person holding a franchise or a certificate from the Government, the violation by him or by it of the orders or awards of the Court should result in the suspension, if not forfeiture, of such franchise or the loss of his or its rights under the certificate issued by the Government. No person who fails or refuses to support the policy of the Constitution in regard to the relations between labor and capital or to abide by the orders of the competent court issued in furtherance of that policy and authorized by a statute approved for the advancement of the public welfare, has the right to continue enjoying special concessions from the State.

There is one further defect in the law above referred to, to which I have the honor to invite your attention. Section 19 of the law provides that no employer may be allowed to engage the services of strike breakers within fifteen days after the declaration of a strike. This provision was presumably enacted by you to render effective the laborers' right to strike. While I am in full accord with the principle which inspired the above provision as I have time and time again declared that laborers and employees have the right to strike, yet, on the other hand, we must consider that there are certain businesses which so affect the public and whose services are so essential to it, that a strike might cause undue hardship upon innocent people and might work a great harm to the common interest. I believe that while retaining the main principle of the above-cited provision, we should except from its operation public services or businesses affected with a public interest.

I have the honor, therefore, to request that the necessary legislation be enacted to carry out the suggestions contained in the foregoing.

Pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the legislation covering the matter above referred to.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on construction of the Tarlac-San Jose Railroad Line and of provincial hotels and resthouses, May 11, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On construction of the Tarlac-San Jose Railroad Line and of provincial hotels and resthouses

[Released on May 11, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend that the provisions of Act No. 3116 be amended, so as to specifically include the Tarlac-San Jose branch line of the Manila Railroad Company as one of the projects, the cost of which is to be financed by subscriptions to the capital stock of this Company by the Government, and also to permit the use of funds authorized under said Act to cover the cost of construction or acquisition of provincial hotels and resthouses to be constructed or acquired by the Manila Railroad Company.

The branch line from Tarlac, the capital of Tarlac Province, to San Jose, Nueva Ecija, a distance of 55 kilometers, has already been completed up to the town of Muñoz, Nueva Ecija, out of the funds of the Manila Railroad Company, and there still remains about 14 kilometers of line to be constructed to reach San Jose, which will be the terminal of this branch. This line traverses a well-populated, fertile region in the Provinces of Tarlac and Nueva Ecija, producing a large tonnage of rice. With the completion of this line, the Company will be enabled to handle the traffic between Manila and the Cagayan Valley by rail up to San Jose and thence by motor transportation over the highway across the Caraballo range into the Provinces of Nueva Vizcaya, Isabela, and Cagayan. The benefits resulting from the improved transportation facilities afforded by this line to the provinces affected can hardly be over-estimated.

With the approval of this proposed measure, it will be feasible for the Manila Railroad Company to obtain reimbursement for the amount of P1,300,000 that it has already spent for the Tarlac-San Jose branch line and to provide ample funds for the construction of various hotels in the provinces now under consideration and for the purchase of the necessary rolling stock for the new lines constructed under the provisions of Act No. 3116. With the Company being relieved from spending its own money for hotel construction and as a result of the reimbursement for the amount expended on the Tarlac-San Jose branch line, the Company can devote the cash on hand to the retirement of the balance of the Southern Lines 4 per cent bonds maturing next year, thus solving to a large extent one of our most important and pressing financial problems.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly, May 14, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly

[Released on May 14, 1938]

OPERATION BY THE GOVERNMENT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES OR BUSINESS COUPLED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST

When a strike or lockout occurs in a public service or in a business affected with a public interest, the public suffers through no fault of its own.

The State should not allow any strike or lockout to jeopardize or embarrass the common weal.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am submitting for your consideration and early approval a bill, entitled—

“An Act to authorize in certain cases the taking over and operation by the Government of public utilities or business coupled with a public interest; to appropriate funds for such purposes; and to prescribe penalties for interfering with the exercise by the Government of its authority under the Act.”

Ordinary labor conflicts affect only the employer and his employees or laborers and the immediate dependents of such parties. These conflicts can be taken care of by the agencies now provided by law for their solution. However, there are some labor conflicts whose effects transcend the immediate participants and cast an influence, more or less appalling, upon a great number of innocent people. When a strike or lockout occurs in a public service or in a business affected with a public interest, the public suffers through no fault of its own. What is more, it is not infrequent that the strikes or lockouts in such businesses become a public problem, affecting, as they do, not only the convenience of a great number of people but also the maintenance of public order, the preservation of public health, and the operation of industries necessary to the national economy. In those cases, there is no doubt that the ordinary processes heretofore provided would, be unavailing. The problem becomes serious and calls for immediate solution. The public welfare and the public interest demand that the services offered by those businesses should not be interrupted. The State should not allow any strike or lockout to jeopardize or embarrass the common weal. The service of that same interest, likewise, demands that some expedient be found to the end of preventing the occurrence of strikes in the business while under the control of the Government or to the end of recalling to the service of such business those who prior to the assumption by the Government of the control thereof, have abandoned their work, either individually or collectively, on account of any dispute or disagreement between their employers and themselves.

Therefore, the attached bill is submitted for your consideration. Under it, the Government is authorized to operate such business, for its own account, during the period of the emergency. It is my belief that the provisions contained therein are sufficiently broad to meet the emergency which a strike or lockout in a public service or in a business coupled with a public interest may cause. It contains provisions which will guarantee to labor a just determination and recognition of its claims and to capital, the just compensation to which it is entitled under our Constitution. It contains provisions which will protect the Government against sabotage while it is operating such businesses.

I am aware of the fact that there is no specific provision in the Constitution of the Philippines authorizing the measure now submitted for your consideration and approval. I am, however, guided by the demands of the public interest and by the implications that may be drawn from that provision of the Constitution which authorizes the State, in the interest of national welfare, to establish and operate industries and means of transportation and communication, and upon payment of just compensation, to transfer to public ownership, utilities and other private enterprises to be operated by the Government. (Section 6, Article XII, Constitution of the Philippines.) I am of the opinion that if the State can go to the extent ordained in the foregoing provision of our Constitution, it can do what is proposed to be done in the attached bill, which is much less than that.

Message of President Quezon to the Commission on Appointments of the First National Assembly on Withdrawal of Judge Zandueta's Appointment, May 18, 1938

Message

To the Commission on Appointments

On Withdrawal of Judge Zandueta's Appointment

[Released on May 18, 1938]

Gentlemen:

Under the authority granted me by the Constitution and our laws I issued an ad interim appointment in favor of the Honorable Francisco Zandueta as Judge of the Court of First Instance of the Fourth Judicial District, Fifth Branch, on November 7, 1936. This ad interim appointment was submitted to the Commission on Appointments during the 1937 regular session but the Commission took no action thereon until it adjourned on November 20, 1937. Whereupon again I made the same ad interim appointment which I have submitted to your Commission as provided by the Constitution.

Since this last ad interim appointment was made, there had come to the knowledge of the Secretary of Justice some information which he deemed necessary to look into affecting the conduct in the Bench of Judge Zandueta. Before starting the investigation, the Secretary of Justice informed me of the case and I authorized him to proceed with the same and to inform the Chairman of your Commission of the pendency of such investigation. While this investigation was being conducted, and after the Secretary of Justice had informed Judge Zandueta of the nature thereof, I was approached by a prominent Chinese merchant on behalf of Judge Zandueta. While the Secretary of Justice, after completing his ex-parte investigation has informed me that there is sufficient ground for the presentation of formal charges, in my opinion it is not necessary to go any further with said case. Regardless of the merits of the complaint against Judge Zandueta, there is sufficient cause for the Chief Executive to consider him unworthy of the position of Judge, by the mere fact that in order to keep himself in his present position, he has appealed to the intervention of the said Chinese merchant, who has had a case before his court and secured favorable judgment therein. Besides, Judge Zandueta has also appealed to other parties for the same purpose.

Officials of the Philippine Government must be made to realize that whenever they have a case to present or defense to make of themselves they should assert their right through the methods recognized by law—never through outside influence. In the case of a Judge, this is much more important. A Judge should never place himself under personal obligations to anybody. The dignity of his office, no less than the independence of the Judiciary, is involved. The conduct of Judge Zandueta in this case makes him unfit to continue in his position as Judge of the Court of First Instance of Manila.

It should be remembered that although Judge Zandueta has been serving in the Bench for many years, he has ceased in the service under the Judicial Reorganization Act passed by the Assembly in conformity with the Constitution, and, therefore, his ad interim appointment may be considered, and it is so legally, a new one. His position, therefore, under this new appointment is different from that where his appointment had been already confirmed. In this latter case to separate him from the Bench, the judgment of the appointing power as to his fitness is no longer conclusive. A procedure has been provided by law through which alone he can be removed from office. But, before an appointment has been confirmed by the Commission on Appointments of the National Assembly, if for sufficient grounds the Chief Executive should find that he made a mistake in making the appointment, it is his duty to apprise the Commission on Appointments of the facts and secure the consent of the said Commission to withdraw the same or ask for its disapproval. I am, therefore, requesting you to consent to my withdrawing this appointment.

WITHDRAWAL OF AN AD INTERIM APPOINTMENT

Officials of the Philippine Government must be made to realize that whenever they have a case to present or defense to make of themselves they should assert their right through the methods recognized by law—never through outside influence.

A Judge should never place himself under personal obligations to anybody. The dignity of his office, no less than the independence of the judiciary, is involved.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on further amendment of the Public Works Bill for 1938, May 19, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On further amendment of the Public Works Bill for 1938

[Released on May 19, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Referring to my messages to you of February 1 and May 10, 1938, in connection with the Public Works Bill for 1938, I have the honor to submit for your consideration the necessity of improving the facilities of the School for the Deaf and Blind in Pasay, Rizal, in order that those unfortunates may be more adequately cared for. The accommodations of this school are so limited that, of the large number of deaf and blind people in this country, very few who are susceptible to training and education which will render them at least in part self-supporting can be admitted. For that reason, I recommend that the Public Works Bill for 1938 now under consideration by that honorable body be further amended by the insertion of the following item under section 2-A-(a):

“9.	For the School for the Deaf and Blind, Pasay, Rizal
-----	---

It appears, also, that additional funds should be provided for the completion of the shore-protection project at Dalahican, Cavite, and therefore, I recommend the insertion of the following item under section 1-D-(z):

“23.	Dalahican shore-protection, (sea wall and/or dyke)
------	--

These additional items will increase the total appropriations in this Bill as follows:

(1)	Excise tax on coconut oil collected in the United States	P88,688,100.00
(2)	National revenues collected in the Philippines	5,263,200.00
(3)	Port Works Fund	2,100.000.00
Total		P96,351,300.00

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on commercial stock service and public improvement aids to the cities of Manila and Baguio, May 19, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On commercial stock service and public improvement aids to the cities of Manila and Baguio

[Released on May 19, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

My attention has been called to the lack of firsthand information on the prices of Philippine export products prevailing in foreign markets, which could serve as basis for the producers and local traders in determining the prices at which they should sell such commodities to the exporters. The only source of information now available is that provided by the exporters, which, for obvious reason, does not always satisfy the producers.

I am informed that, formerly, the Bureau of Commerce was maintaining a cablegraphic service which enabled it to keep the Philippine producers and local traders constantly informed of the changes in the prices of commodities exported from the Philippines as quoted in the foreign markets, but the same had to be discontinued several years ago when the bureau's appropriation was substantially reduced. I consider the revival of the said service an urgent necessity and of vital importance to the producers of our export products, in particular, and to the business concerns of the Philippines, in general, and I recommend that the necessary appropriation for carrying out the purpose be made available. It is estimated that a daily cablegraphic service which would give adequate information and data regarding prevailing prices, market conditions and other necessary trade informations between Manila and the cities of New York, San Francisco, London and Osaka, will require an annual appropriation of P57,000, including the salaries of the correspondents who will have to be employed therefor. Accordingly, I hereby amend the 1939 Budget by adding a new item under "Special Purposes," Department of Agriculture and Commerce, which should read as follows:

For expenses of the Bureau of Commerce for establishing and maintaining cablegraphic service on prices of important export products of the Philippines, market conditions and other trade informations between Manila and important trade centers abroad, to be spent with the approval of the President

Commonwealth Act No. 242 grants the City of Manila a yearly aid of P1,000,000 for public works, to be provided in the annual General Appropriation Act. Although, in the preparation of the 1939 Budget, the amount needed to meet this yearly outlay was set aside, the corresponding item has not been included in the said budget. Pursuant to the above-mentioned law, I also hereby recommend the inclusion in the 1939 Budget of an additional item under "Special Purposes", Department of Public Works and Communications, as follows:

Aid to the City of Manila for construction of public improvements to be expended at the discretion of the Secretary of Public Works and Communications, Commonwealth Act No. 242

Under section 2553(a) of the Administrative Code, the City of Baguio has been given a yearly aid from the National Government which formerly amounted to as high as P150,000. During the last several years, in consonance with the retrenchment policy of the National Government, the amount of this aid was gradually reduced and since last year only P10,000 has been given annually. The City of Baguio is now undertaking a vast program of public improvements which requires large outlay of funds. To enable the said City to accomplish the early termination of such improvements, I recommend that for the year 1939 the amount of aid to the same be increased to P100,000 on condition that this amount shall be spent exclusively for the construction of public improvements at the discretion of the Secretary of Public Works and Communications. Accordingly, it is requested that Item E-IV-13 for P10,000 under the Department of Finance be suppressed, and in lieu thereof, the following new item be inserted under Special Purposes for the Department of Public Works and Communications:

Contribution to the City of Baguio under section 2553 (a) of Act No. 2711, as amended, to be spent for the construction of public improvements at the discretion of the Secretary of Public Works and Communications, any provision of existing law to the contrary notwithstanding

The above stated aids to the Cities of Manila and Baguio for public improvements replace Item 8 of P818,700.00 under Special Purposes, Department of Public Instruction, in the 1939 Budget for maintenance and operation of primary schools in said cities, the elimination of which is also hereby requested.

On Consideration of Ten Bills

[Released on May 23, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In addition to the bills already submitted to you by the Executive and covered by special messages and certificates of the urgency of the enactment thereof, I have the honor to submit for consideration during your special sessions, pursuant to the provisions of Proclamation No. 272, dated May 19, 1938, the following measures:

1. Bill No. 3360.—An Act authorizing the chartered City of Cebu to issue bonds for the purpose of providing funds to construct necessary sewer facilities in said city, and authorizing also a National Government bond issue secured by said city bonds.
2. Bill No. 3384.—Ley que enmienda los artículos uno y cinco de la Ley Número Cuatro mil ciento cincuenta y uno, de modo que las disposiciones de dicha ley sean también aplicables a cualesquier ciudadanos extranjeros o a aquellos cuya ciudadanía no está bien definida, y consigna fondos para dicho propósito.
3. Bill No. 3478.—An Act creating an animal utilization service in the Bureau of Animal Industry and appropriating funds for its establishment, equipment, maintenance, and operation.
4. Bill No. 3547.—An Act amending some of the provisions of Chapter Thirty-one (Medical Law) of Act Numbered Twenty-seven hundred and eleven, commonly known as the Administrative Code of nineteen hundred and seventeen, as amended by Act Numbered Four thousand and seven.
5. Bill No. 3681.—Ley que revisa, reforma y consolida todas las leyes referentes a carreras de caballos, y provee penas para su infracción.
6. Bill No. 3700.—An Act to amend sections sixty-two and sixty-eight of Commonwealth Act Numbered One hundred and thirty-seven, known as the “Mining Act.”
7. Bill No. 3741.—An Act to amend sections one, four, eleven, twelve, and sixteen of Act Numbered Thirty-one hundred and five, entitled “An Act regulating the practice of public accounting; creating a Board of Accountancy; providing for examination for the granting of certificates and the registration of Certified Public Accountants; for the suspension or revocation of certificates, and for other purposes” as amended, and for other purposes.
8. Bill No. 3841.—An Act authorizing the chartered City of Davao to issue bonds for the purpose of providing funds to construct necessary sewer facilities and other permanent improvements in said City, and authorizing also a National Government bond issue secured by said city bonds.
9. Bill No. 3413.—An Act to provide for the use of a certificate of identification and residence by certain residents of the Philippines of the age of twenty-one and under seventy years, and notation thereof on every notarial document.

10. Bill No. 3748.—An Act to amend paragraph numbered 4, under D-IV-Special Appropriations, section two, pages fifty-nine and sixty, English version, of Commonwealth Act Numbered Two hundred forty-five pertaining to the appropriation of the Department of the Interior so as to reitemize Item D-IV-(j) thereof and for other purposes.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Veto of Bill No. 3307, June 4, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
FIRST NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
VETO OF BILL No. 3307—OPTIONAL RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

[June 4, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

After a conscientious study of Bill No. 3307 of the National Assembly, entitled “An Act to carry out more effectively the provisions contained in section nine hundred twenty-eight of Act Numbered Twenty-seven hundred eleven, known as the Administrative Code, and in section five, article thirteen of the Constitution, regarding optional religious instruction,” I have come to the conclusion that it is unconstitutional, and therefore I deem it my duty to veto the same. My conclusion is based on the following grounds:

First.—Contrary to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (1), of the Constitution, the real subject of the bill is not expressed in its title.

Second.—In violation of the cardinal principle of constitutional law that a discretionary power granted by the Constitution to the Executive may not be abridged by either the Legislative or the Judicial branch of the Government, the bill restricts the discretion vested by the Constitution in the Superintendent of Schools to fix the hour for religious instruction in the public schools.

Third.—The bill substantially changes the policy embodied in section 928 of the Administrative Code regarding optional religious instruction, the maintenance of which is ordained by the Constitution.

Article VI, section 12, paragraph (1) of the Constitution provides:

“No bill which may be enacted into law shall embrace more than one subject which shall be expressed in the title of the bill.”

The title of the bill under consideration reads: “An Act to carry out more effectively the provisions contained in section 928 of Act No. 2711, known as the Administrative Code, and in section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution.” According to this title, the object of the bill is merely the enforcement of section 928 of the Administrative Code and the compliance with the provisions of section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution. The truth, however, is that section 1 of the bill not only amends the language but also violates the spirit of section 928 of the Administrative Code and thereby contravenes section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution. This is clear from a mere comparison of section 928 of the Administrative Code with article 1 of the bill.

The real and true objective of those who favored the passage of the bill can easily be perceived by following the different steps taken by those who advocated it from the time the movement was initiated to change the present practice followed in the public schools with reference to religious instruction.

The movement was started with a letter written by a large number of members of the National Assembly and addressed to the Secretary of Public Instruction wherein the Secretary was asked to promulgate new rules governing religious teaching in the public schools. Upon receiving the answer of the Secretary of Public Instruction denying the petition, a series of bills were presented in succession, all practically with the same title and for the same purpose. These bills were entitled: "An Act providing for a course in character building and good manners and right conduct or in religion in the public schools, and for other purposes," and they provided for compulsory instruction in character building and good manners and right conduct, recognizing at the same time, however, the right of the parents or guardians to have their instruction in lieu of that in character building and good manners and right conduct.

When the question of the constitutionality of these different bills was raised on the floor of the National Assembly, those who advocated their passage were forced to present as a substitute, the bill under discussion, which apparently was approved on the assumption that the change in its title and provisions had made it conform to the Constitution. In this bill, the provision regarding the course in character building, good manners and right conduct, has been eliminated and only the subject of religious instruction is left. But, while it purports merely to enforce the provisions of section 928 of the Administrative Code, it prescribes certain directions and requirements which would have the effect, if complied with, of giving religious instruction in the public schools a category which it does not possess under section 928 of the Administrative Code. Thus, while under this legal provision religious instruction is merely tolerated, under section 1 of the bill, it is made a desired, if not a preferred subject.

To show the difference in practice between section 928 of the Administrative Code and section 1 of the bill, it is enough to bear in mind the legislative and administrative contemporary interpretation of Act No. 74 of the Philippine Commission approved on January 21, 1901, from which Act section 928 of the Administrative Code was taken. Since the passage of Act No. 74, the Division Superintendent of Schools, in fixing the hour for religious instruction, always took into account the school hours and school activities in each school in order that it might not interfere with the teaching of other subjects or with other school activities which the pupils were required to attend.

The policy and practice thus established is reversed or modified under the provisions of section 1 of the bill. Here, the Superintendent of Schools is directed to fix an hour for religious instruction "which shall be neither too early nor too late; neither shall it be an hour which coincides with other school activities, such as athletics, military training, singing and musical programs, rehearsals, society meetings, recesses and recreations, and cleaning by the students of the school premises, nor shall athletics and military training take place immediately before the classes in religion." It is evident, therefore, that the intention of the bill is that if the program of classes and school activities fills entirely the school hours both in the morning and afternoon session as is now the case, one of the subjects or one of the school activities must be either eliminated or assigned an hour outside of the regular school hours, in order that the classes in religious instruction may be held as required by the bill.

It is thus manifest that the real intent and purpose of the bill is not the enforcement of section 928 of the Administrative Code, as expressed in its title, but the amendment thereof which cannot be done under the Constitution.

II

Article XIII, section 5, of the Constitution, in part, provides:

"Optional religious instruction in the public schools shall be maintained as now authorized by law."

The law authorizing religious instruction in the public schools at the time of the approval of the Constitution is contained in sections 927 and 928 of the Administrative Code, reading as follows:

“SEC. 927. Discussion of religious doctrines to be eschewed.—No teacher or other person engaged in any public school, whether maintained from Insular, provincial, or municipal funds, shall teach or criticize the doctrines of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or shall attempt to influence the pupils for or against any church or religious sect. If any teacher shall intentionally violate this section he or she shall, after due hearing, be dismissed from the public service.”

“SEC. 928. Provision for religious instruction by local priest or minister.—It shall be lawful, however, for the priest or minister of any church established in the town where a public school is situated, either in person or by a designated teacher of religion, to teach religion for one-half hour three times a week, in the school building, to those public school pupils whose parents or guardians desire it and express their desire therefor in writing filed with the principal teacher of the school, to be forwarded to the division superintendent, who shall fix the hours and rooms for such teaching. But no public school teachers shall either conduct religious exercise or teach religion or act as a designated religious teacher in the school building under the foregoing authority, and no pupils shall be required by any public school teacher to attend and receive the religious instruction herein permitted. Should the opportunity thus given to teach religion be used by the priest, minister, or religious teacher for the purpose of arousing disloyalty to the United States, or of discouraging the attendance of pupils at such public school, or creating a disturbance of public order, or of interfering with the discipline of the school, the division superintendent, subject to the approval of the Director of Education, may, after due investigation and hearing, forbid such offending priest, minister, or religious teacher from entering the public school building thereafter.”

As may be seen from the above-quoted provisions of the Administrative Code, the Division Superintendent of Schools is given full discretion to fix any hour for religious instruction, at any time during or outside of regular school hours, considering not only the convenience of the students who are to be given such instruction, but also the requirements of the curriculum and the program of other school activities. This discretion of the Division Superintendent of Schools is impaired by the bill to such an extent that he may even be forced to sacrifice required subjects or other school activities in order to give way to the teaching of religion.

It is an established principle of constitutional law that when the Constitution confers full discretion upon the Executive as to the exercise of a certain power and does not specifically authorize the legislature to regulate or limit that discretion, every enactment impairing the free exercise thereof constitutes an invasion of the constitutional authority of the executive, and is, therefore, null and void.

III

The bill lays down a new policy on religious instruction in the public schools which is essentially different from, if not contrary to, that embodied in sections 927 and 928 of the Administrative Code, which the Constitution ordains shall be maintained.

In order to fully understand the meaning and scope of sections 927 and 928 of the Administrative Code, it is necessary to recur to its source and origin, which is section 16 of Act No. 74 of the Philippine Commission, approved on January 21, 1901. This Act established the Department of Public Instruction, and in prescribing the powers and duties of that Department and its officials, it provided for optional religious instruction.

Prior to the approval of that Act, extended public hearings were held by the Philippine Commission. The question which aroused the greatest interest and caused the most spirited debates, not only amongst those who took part in the public hearings but also amongst the members of the Philippine Commission themselves, was precisely the question of religious teaching. There were two extreme views presented before the Philippine Commission: one opposing any and all kinds of religious instruction in the public schools, and another demanding that only the Catholic religion be taught in said schools. Commissioner Moses took the side of those who were opposed to the teaching of any religion in the public schools, upon the ground that to do so would be contrary to the principle of the separation of the Church and State. Every member of the Commission agreed that under the American system of government, with its doctrine of the separation of Church and State, the proposition that only the Catholic religion be taught in the public schools was inconceivable.

Mr. Taft who was then the President of the Commission, and later President of the United States, and until his death, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of that country, in opposition to Commissioner Moses, took the stand that the public school buildings could be used for the teaching of religion without violating the doctrine of the separation of Church and State, if such teaching was given at a time when the school building was not needed for the purposes of a public school. In line with his theory, Mr. Taft submitted to the Commission an amendment to the bill, which was approved and became section 16 of Act No. 74, and reads as follows:

“No teacher or other person shall teach or criticize the doctrines of any church, religious sect or denomination, or shall attempt to influence the pupils for or against any church or religious sect in any public school established under this Act. If any teacher shall intentionally violate this section, he or she shall, after due hearing, be dismissed from the public service.

“Provided, however, that it shall be lawful for the priest or minister of any church established in the pueblo where a public school is situated, either in person or by a designated teacher of religion, to teach religion for half an hour three times a week in the school building to those public school pupils whose parents or guardians desire it and express their desire therefor in writing filed with the principal teacher of the school, to be forwarded to the Division Superintendent, who shall fix the hours and rooms for such teaching. But no public school teacher shall either conduct religious exercises or teach religion or act as a designated religious teacher in the school building under the foregoing authority, and no pupil shall be required by any public school teacher to attend and receive the religious instruction herein permitted. Should the opportunity thus given to teach religion be used by the priest, minister or religious teacher for the purpose of arousing disloyalty to the United States, or of discouraging the attendance of pupils at such public school, or creating a disturbance of public order, or of interfering with the discipline of the school, the Division Superintendent, subject to the approval of the General Superintendent of Public Instruction, may after due investigation and hearing, forbid such offending priest, minister or religious teacher from entering the public school building thereafter.”

This section was incorporated almost verbatim in sections 927 and 928 of the Administrative Code.

From the minutes of the Philippine Commission, vol. 1, pp. 171-180, the following is taken:

“He (Mr. Taft) reviewed the proposed amendment in detail, pointing out its specific provisions and limitations, from which it was shown that the only use that could be made of the school building under the section was a use which was not to conflict in any way with the use of the building for the purposes of a public school.”

Such then, as stated by its author, was the import and implication of the law which authorized the teaching of religion in the public schools. From the date that Act No. 74 of the Philippine Commission was approved to the time that it was incorporated in the Administrative Code and thereafter until the Constitutional Assembly approved section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution, the Division Superintendent of Schools only permitted the use of the school building- for the teaching of religion when it did not conflict “in any way with the use of the building for the purposes of a public school.”

The legal presumption is, of course, that when the Constitutional Assembly approved section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution, it was cognizant of the then existing law regarding religious instruction and the manner in which it was enforced by the Bureau of Education. Aside from this presumption, an examination of the records of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention shows that the makers of the Constitution were fully informed of the law and existing regulations regarding optional religious instruction in the public schools when they approved section 5 of Article XIII of the Constitution.

The original proposition regarding religious instruction was presented by Delegate Norberto Romualdez, now member of the National Assembly and one of the authors of the bill under consideration, who, through Delegate Godofredo Reyes, presented it to Delegate Jose P. Laurel who was the Chairman of the Committee on Bill of Rights. The proposition of Delegate Romualdez reads: “* * * that in all public schools there shall be prescribed a course in moral ethics or the religion of the parents of the school children, at the option of the parents.” Delegate Romualdez wanted his proposition to be included in the Bill of Rights, but it was not included in the draft prepared by the Committee. When the draft of the Constitution was presented to the Constitutional Convention, it contained a clause identical to section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution. Delegate Artadi offered an amendment to that clause as follows: “En todas las clases publicas se incluire entre las asignaturas la moral o instruccion religiosa a opcion de los padres o encargados de los discipulos.” (“In all the public schools there shall be included amongst the subjects, moral or religious instruction at the option of the parents or guardians of the pupils.”)

During the discussion of the amendment of Delegate Artadi, statements were made by several delegates which were recorded in the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention showing that the delegates knew that there was at that time a law authorizing optional religious instruction in the public schools and that they were also informed of the practice followed by the Division Superintendent of Schools in fixing the hour for the teaching of religion. Delegate Manuel Roxas who objected to the amendment offered by Delegate Artadi said that under existing law optional religious instruction was permitted in the public schools and explained the practice that was being followed. To this, Mr. Artadi answered: “That is precisely what I am opposing, the present provisions of the law * * *.” Other delegates of the Convention took part in the discussion and when the amendment of Mr. Artadi was put to a vote, it was voted down on a division, and the clause as now appears in section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution was approved by a vote viva voce.

As already stated, optional religious instruction was prescribed by law as early as 1901. Under said law and conformably to its provisions, rules and regulations were issued by the Bureau of Education which had been in force without change until 1934, prior to the approval of the Constitution. The members of the Constitutional Convention were cognizant of the provisions of the law and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder. Attempts were made to change the law. The Constitutional Convention rejected these attempts and went to the extent of specifically confirming and ratifying the legislation then in force.

To me, it is very clear that the National Assembly can in no manner amend the present law without violating section 5, Article XIII, of the Constitution. Any attempt, directly or indirectly, to give to religious teaching in the school an importance lesser or greater than is now accorded to it by law, would be unconstitutional. Even without recurring to the statements of Mr. Taft above adverted to, the letter and spirit of sections 927 and 928 of the Administrative Code which, by reference, have been made a part of the Constitution, clearly indicate, in my opinion, that the intent and purpose thereof, is merely to tolerate the teaching of religion in the public schools and not to give it such prominence or encouragement, as contemplated in the bill under consideration.

In view of the foregoing, I am returning Bill No. 3307 of the National Assembly without my signature.

Respectfully,

On Veto of Bill No. 1613—

Reimbursing necessary travelling expenses and actual subsistence of witnesses subpoenaed to give testimony in the trial or investigation of criminal cases

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have to-day disapproved Bill No. 1613, entitled “Ley disponiendo el abono de los gastos de viaje y manutención de los testigos citados para declarar en el juicio o investigación de causas criminales.”

Act No. 3434, approved on November 28, 1928, already provides for the reimbursement by the provincial governments and by the government of the City of Manila of the necessary travelling expenses and actual subsistence of witnesses, known to be indigent, whose testimonies are considered material and indispensable in the trial of criminal cases in Courts of First Instance, whether testifying for the prosecution or for the defense. The present bill will supersede Act No. 3434 and will require such reimbursement, whether the witness is indigent or not, and whether his testimony is material and indispensable or not. It will also transfer the responsibility for the reimbursement of such expenses from the local governments to the National Government.

Without going into the question of whether the National Government has enough funds to cover the appropriation provided for in this bill, I believe that the bill is objectionable, because it is wrong policy to pay every witness in a criminal case his travelling and other necessary expenses. It is part of the civic duty of every person residing in the Philippines to help in the suppression of crimes by testifying in a criminal case at his own expense. While I would recognize a qualification of this duty so as to relieve indigent persons from the burden of travelling and subsistence expenses, as now provided in Act No. 3434, I cannot give my consent to a bill which will extend the same privilege to those who are not indigent and, therefore, can reasonably bear the burden of attendance in court to testify in a criminal case at their own expense.

The bill is, furthermore, objectionable, because it provides for the reimbursement of the expenses of all witnesses whether their testimonies are considered material and indispensable or not. The absence of any qualification on this matter will lend the system to very easy abuse.

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2331, entitled “Ley que enmienda el artículo dieciséis de la Ley Número Mil quinientos once.”

I am not in favor of giving the Director of Public Works authority, as intended in the proposed measure, to allow public ditches to be used for irrigation or for private purposes, as to do so would be contrary to the old legal principle that property of public ownership is outside the commerce of men and should not be utilized for private purposes. Furthermore, a road ditch is built expressly for road drainage purposes and its conversion into an irrigation ditch or canal will not only interfere with the proper maintenance and upkeep work but will also so saturate and weaken the road beds that it may damage the sections thus affected.

For the reasons above stated, the bill is, in my opinion, not a wise measure and should be, as it is hereby, disapproved.

Appropriating P300,000 for the purpose of creating thirty health travelling units

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2653, entitled “An Act appropriating the sum of three hundred thousand pesos for the purpose of creating thirty health traveling units,” for the reason that funds are already provided for in the 1938 and 1939 General Appropriation Acts which, by administrative action, could be used for the purpose of carrying out the services proposed to be established in the bill.

If it is intended to appropriate additional funds for the purposes sought to be accomplished in the bill, I wish to invite your attention to the fact that the appropriations for recurring ordinary expenses authorized in the 1939 General Appropriation Act leaves, as excess of the ordinary income over the ordinary expenditures, only a small amount which is inadequate to take care of contingencies, especially at this time when revenue collections are not steady. In view of the unsettled conditions in many parts of the world which may in one way or another affect the Philippine national economy, and considering that the National Assembly did not act upon the various tax measures that I submitted to you during your last regular and special sessions, the situation demands the exercise of caution in adopting measures that would increase the recurring expenses of the operation of the Government.

Increasing the salaries of the Fiscal and the Chief of the Police and Fire Department of the City of Iloilo

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3075, entitled “An Act amending sections twenty-three, twenty-five, sixty-four, and seventy-one of Commonwealth Act Numbered One hundred and fifty-eight, entitled ‘an Act establishing a form of government for the City of Iloilo’” for the reason that it seeks to increase the salaries of the Fiscal and the Chief of the Police and Fire Department of the City of Iloilo, which would mean additional burden to the finances of the said city. No representation has been made to me that the duties of the said officials have increased considerably so as to justify the increases in their salaries.

In connection with the proposal in the bill to authorize the Fiscal of the City of Iloilo to appear not only in the Municipal Court of said city but also in the Court of First Instance of Iloilo, I believe that it is high time for the adoption of a definite and uniform policy regarding the law departments of the several chartered cities throughout the Philippines. I propose that in all the chartered cities, with the exception of the City of Manila and the City of Baguio where conditions are different, the fiscal of the province to which they were attached prior to their incorporation as a city shall be, ex officio, the City Fiscal with a certain amount of increased remuneration to be paid out of the city funds, and that provision should be made for the creation of positions for one or more assistant fiscals in the said city to aid the Provincial Fiscal, the salary of which assistant fiscals shall be paid out of the funds of the city concerned. By following this policy, it is believed that the ends of the administration of justice in those cities would be best served and at the same time the newly created cities would be saved the expense of a city fiscal with a remuneration commensurate with the importance of his position. I, therefore, commend for your consideration at your next session the enactment of such measures as would be necessary to carry out the suggestion above made.

Granting compensation to barrio lieutenants and their substitutes

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3250, entitled “An Act to amend the Administrative Code, so as to grant compensation to barrio lieutenants and their substitutes.”

The enactment of the proposed measure into law would not only cause financial embarrassments to the municipalities but would also cause them to exceed the legal limitation upon the amounts expendable for salaries and wages. I would like to invite your attention to the fact that at present many of the municipalities cannot even provide the minimum rate of compensation of P360 per annum for their employees. Besides, the compensations provided for in the bill are too meager and barrio lieutenants and their substitutes should be made to feel that their positions carry more dignity if they remain honorary as they now are, rather than encumber them with a salary that is very inadequate.

Aside from the considerations above stated, I note that the proposed measure is defective because the authority granted to members of the municipal council to appoint rural policemen is not contained in the title of the bill, in violation of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (1) of the Constitution.

Making public school buildings available for the free use of Community Centers, Women's Clubs, Parent-Teacher Associations, and Local Adult Education Committees for their activities

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3252, entitled "An Act making public school buildings available for the free use of community centers, women's clubs, parent-teacher associations, and local adult education committees for their educational, social, and recreational activities."

Although I am in accord with the purpose of the bill, it is believed that its enactment into law is not necessary because the proposed objectives can be accomplished by administrative regulation. In this connection, I would like to invite your attention to section 917 (f) of the Revised Administrative Code which vests in the Division Superintendent of Schools the control over the use of the provincial and municipal school buildings and their use for other purposes than such as are incident to the conduct of public schools. The aforesaid provision of the Revised Administrative Code implies that the public schools may be used for the purposes mentioned in the proposed measure.

In view of the foregoing and in order not to make our statute books cumbersome with the approval of measure whose purposes may be accomplished through administrative regulation, I am constrained to disapprove the bill under consideration.

Further amending the charter of the City of Davao

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3280, entitled “An Act amending Commonwealth Act Numbered Fifty-one, as amended by Commonwealth Act Numbered Two hundred nine, otherwise known as the Charter of the City of Davao.”

I note that the proposed measure intends to eliminate from sections 12 and 34 of the Charter of the City of Davao the provision requiring the approval of the corresponding Department Secretary in matters regarding the fixing of the per diems of the members of the city council and the compensation of officers and employees of the said city specifically mentioned by law. The approval of the Department Head in such matters has been inserted in the Charter of the City of Davao as a matter of precaution. Without such approval the city councilors may abuse their power and may fix their per diems at the maximum rate or increase the salaries of certain officers and employees of the City of Davao, even if the financial condition of the city would not permit it. Davao is still a young city and I believe that for the purposes of a more efficient government, the present provision of the law intended to be eliminated from the Davao City Charter should be preserved.

One of the proposed amendments seeks to grant specific authority to the City Council to tax and regulate the establishment of cockpits as well as cockfighting. This amendment is unwise in view of the policy of the National Government to suppress gradually the cockfighting vice and other vices of similar nature.

The Secretary of the Interior has pointed out to me certain other objectionable features of the proposed amendments to the Davao City Charter and without the necessity of passing on such other objectionable features, I believe that the considerations above stated sufficiently warrant disapproval of the bill under consideration.

Exempting from preventive detention persons accused of petty thefts or less serious physical injuries

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I wish to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3376, entitled: “Ley declarando libres de detención preventiva a los acusados por faltas y delitos leves o menos graves con ciertas excepciones.”

While I view with sympathy the plight of accused persons who, for lack of means, cannot furnish bail, yet there are certain well established principles of criminal law,— among which is that an accused person must be arrested and provisionally detained while the case against him is pending final decision,—from which we cannot safely depart.

Section thirteen of General Orders Numbered Fifty-eight, as amended by Act Numbered Forty-one hundred and seventy-eight, already provides an exception to this rule by declaring as exempt from arrest those accused of offenses punishable by imprisonment of not over one month or by fine of not more than two hundred pesos. The bill above-referred to would extend this exception to persons accused of offenses punishable by imprisonment for not over six months or by fine of not more than six hundred pesos. This would extend the benefits of the law to persons accused of such serious offenses as resistance or disobedience to persons in authority, certain falsifications, certain classes of physical injuries, certain threats and coercions, certain classes of theft, and some forms of trespass to dwelling. I fear that the bill will aggravate the rising tide of criminality in the Philippines. Persons committing petty thefts or less serious physical injuries, for instance, will find encouragement in the belief that the State considers such offenses so harmless that it prohibits and penalizes the preventive detention of persons accused thereof. By so relaxing the law, the State will unwittingly become an abettor to its violation.

Furthermore, the bill will not only liberalize in the above particular the provisions of section thirteen of General Orders Numbered Fifty-eight, as amended, but will also eliminate certain good features of that law, to wit: (a) the provision that persons accused of physical injuries will not receive the benefits of the law; (b) the provision that a person who does not reside at the place where the crime is committed or who does not have a known place of residence therein shall, in every case, be required to give bail; and (c) the safeguard that a judge may, for good reasons, require an accused, otherwise exempted, to give bail before he may be released.

I believe that Act Numbered Forty-one hundred and seventy-eight, amending General Orders Numbered Fifty-eight, is as far as we can safely go in the matter, without jeopardizing public safety and public order.

Increasing the salary rates for municipal of officials in the specially organized provinces of Mindanao and

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3398, entitled “An Act to amend section twenty-six hundred and fifteen of the Administrative Code.”

I am not in favor of increasing the salary rates for mayors, secretaries, and treasurers of municipalities in the specially organized provinces of Mindanao and Sulu, as it will mean additional financial burden on the part of the municipalities concerned.

It is true that the bill seeks to give to municipal officials of specially organized provinces the same rates of salaries as those for the corresponding municipal officials in regularly organized provinces. It must be noted, however, that specially organized provinces have until now been receiving financial aids even for their ordinary administrative expenses, both from the respective provincial governments and the National Government. The approval of this bill would consequently increase the expenses of the municipalities concerned for administrative purposes and may result in demands for increase in the aids that the respective provincial governments are now receiving from the National Government. The purpose of this bill is, therefore, inconsistent with the policy of gradually reducing the aid which the National Government is giving annually to specially organized provinces for expenses of administration.

Appropriating fund for the establishment, maintenance, equipment, and operation of public dispensaries in

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3566, entitled “An Act appropriating fund for the establishment, maintenance, equipment, and operation of public dispensaries throughout the different barrios and remote communities in the Philippine Archipelago” for the reason that funds are already provided in the 1938 and 1939 General Appropriation Acts to carry out the services proposed to be established in the bill.

If it is intended to appropriate additional funds for the purposes sought to be accomplished in the bill, I wish to invite your attention to the fact that the appropriations for recurring ordinary expenses authorized in the 1939 General Appropriation Act leave as an excess of ordinary income over ordinary expenditures, only a small amount which is inadequate to take care of contingencies, especially at this time when revenue collections are not steady. In view of the unsettled conditions in many parts of the world which may in one way or another affect the Philippine national economy, and considering that the National Assembly did not act upon the various tax measures that I submitted to you during your last regular and special sessions, the situation demands the exercise of caution in adopting measures that would increase the recurring expenses of the operation of the Government.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3572, entitled “Ley que enmienda el artículo diez y ocho de la Ley Número Cuatro mil tres, conocida por Ley de Pesquerías.”

This bill seeks to insert a proviso in section 18 of the Fisheries Act to the effect that no license shall be issued to fishing vessels unless at least 30 per cent of their licensed fishermen are Filipino or American citizens. Apparently aimed to benefit Filipino fishermen, the proviso will sanction the employment of foreign fishermen, in that it is assumed that 70 per cent of the fishermen employed in a fishing boat may be foreigners. This bill, together with its companion Bill No. 3573, which I have today also dis approved, will abandon the policy of strict nationalization of the fishing industry which underlies the Fisheries Act, and for this reason, I am constrained to disapprove the bill under consideration.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3694, entitled “An Act to enable the office of private education to maintain a close and rigid supervision over all private schools, colleges, and universities, and to appropriate funds therefor.”

I am in favor of having the Office of Private Education exercise a close and rigid supervision over all private schools, colleges, and universities, as the title of the bill implies. I notice, however, that the main purpose of the proposed measure is to increase the present personnel of the Office of Private Education. The Vice-President and Secretary of Public Instruction has informed me that his office has not received from the Office of Private Education any request for additional funds for the expenses of the latter office. In view thereof and considering that in the 1938 General Appropriation Act, new positions were created in the Office of Private Education to take care of the increasing number of private schools and colleges, I do not see any necessity for the approval of the proposed measure.

Increasing the Fisherman's License fee to two pesos

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3573, entitled “Ley que eleva a dos pesos el derecho anual de licencia de pescador en escala comercial, enmendando al efecto la Ley de Pesquerías.”

This bill in effect repeals that portion of section 22 of Act No. 4003 which requires that no license as fisherman to work on vessels of more than three tons gross for the commercial catching of fish in national waters shall be issued except to citizens of the Philippines or of the United States or of countries the laws of which grant similar rights to citizens of the Philippines. The elimination of this requirement would place aliens on an equal footing with Filipino or American citizens, thereby opening an opportunity to the former to control the fishing industry in the Philippines. In other words, this bill would abandon the policy of strict nationalization of the fishing industry which underlies the Fisheries Act.

Furthermore, attention is invited to the fact that the title of the bill does not express the subject thereof. Although the title states that it seeks to increase the fishermen's license fee to two pesos, it will be noted that the body of the bill also seeks to eliminate, as already stated above, that proviso which prohibits the issuance of license as fisherman to work on vessels for the commercial catching of fish, except to citizens of the Philippines or of the United States or of countries the laws of which grant similar rights to citizens of the Philippines. This is contrary to the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (1) of the Constitution, and on this ground alone this bill should be, as it is hereby, vetoed.

On Veto of Bill No. 3318—
Extending the effectivity of the City of Manila Reorganization Act

[Released on June 16, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3318, entitled “Ley prorrogando hasta Diciembre de Mil novecientos treinta y ocho los efectos de la Ley Número Cuatro mil doscientos setenta de la Legislatura Filipina con una enmienda.”

I am constrained to veto this bill as it is believed that its purpose is only to grant gratuities to the employees and laborers of the City of Manila who wish to leave the service and not for the purpose of reorganizing the city government in order to effect economy. The approval of the proposed measure would cause financial embarrassment to the government of the City of Manila because at present the city government is not even able to solve the yearly recurring problem of financing its public schools and the National Government has to grant it an annual aid of P1,000,000 for public works purposes.

In view of the foregoing, and considering the fact that, according to the Secretary of the Interior, there is no necessity for further reorganization of the government of the City of Manila, I cannot give my approval to the bill under consideration.

Respectfully,

Giving the name of Celestino Aragon to a street in the City of Manila

[Released on June 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2250, entitled “An Act giving the name of Celestino Aragon to a street in Manila” on the ground that the changing of the names of streets will only create confusion in titles to registered lands and in deeds and contracts relating to real property in which the name of the street sought to be changed may appear as one of the boundaries of the property involved. To change the name of a street will necessitate the changing of such boundaries and thus entail expenses on the part of the parties concerned.

As nothing is to be gained by changing the names of streets, I wish to announce that hereafter I shall veto all bills of this nature. If it is the intention to honor any great man in the manner suggested in the proposed measure, this could be done by naming a new street after him instead of changing the names of streets which are already known to the public through long usage.

Furthermore, I wish to invite your attention to the fact that one of the two subjects of the proposed measure, namely to change the name of an alley in the City of Manila to that of “Pedro Zapanta” is not expressed in the title of the bill, in violation of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (1) of the Constitution. On this ground alone, the bill should be vetoed.

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2924, entitled “Ley eximiendo del impuesto fijo sobre negocios sujetos al impuesto del tanto por ciento a los comerciantes en pequeña escala cuyas ventas en bruto por trimestre no excedan de trescientos pesos.”

There are pending before the National Assembly measures to revise the sales tax. As previously announced I shall presently call the National Assembly to a special session for the purpose of revising our system of taxation. The purposes of the bill before me can be better served if and when the National Assembly takes up the general revision of the merchants' sales tax law.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today approved Bill No. 3428, entitled “An Act to amend items of appropriation under section one, paragraph a, of Commonwealth Act Numbered Two hundred forty,” with the exception of the following items:

Albay—Item													14
Camarines	Sur—Items		34,		34a,		34b,		34c		and		34d
Capiz—Items			34					and					39
Cavite—Item													10
Cotabato—Items	1,	2,	3,	4,	5,	6,	7,	8,	9,	10,	11,	and	12
Ilocos													40
Iloilo—Items	24,		24a,		24b,		24c,		25,		25a,	and	25b
Masbate—Items					12						and		16
Occidental								23			and		28
Pampanga—Items					15						and		15a
Sorsogon—Items					13						and		14
Tayabas—Item	19

The suppression of item 58 under Ilocos Norte is hereby disapproved, for the reason that the fund for this item has already been released and the construction of the project authorized.

This bill now becomes Commonwealth Act No. 329.

On Veto of Bill No. 3499

[Released on June 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have decided to withhold my signature on Bill No. 3499 creating the City of Lipa. I hesitated long between letting the bill lapse into law and announcing that I would not organize the city until certain features of the bill were amended, or veto the bill outright. At last I have adopted the latter course because I desire to submit this question de novo to the National Assembly at its next session.

This is the first time that a municipality, not the capital of a province, is given a special charter, taken out from the control of the province and granted the allotments which normally go to the province. This bill, therefore, initiates a new policy in the establishment of political subdivisions of the Philippines which, in the long run, may affect the reorganization of the provinces themselves. If the National Assembly should insist in passing this bill at its next session, I shall not object to it.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2156, entitled “An Act appropriating two and one-half million pesos for the classification, survey, and subdivision of public agricultural lands.”

I would have been willing to approve this bill which has for its main purpose the acceleration of the development of our public agricultural lands, had you included in it the proviso recommended by our finance officials authorizing the President of the Philippines to suspend or otherwise stop the expenditure of the amount herein appropriated if the public interest so demands. The Commissioner of the Budget has reported to me that the appropriation for the recurring expenses authorized in the 1939 General Appropriation Act leaves, as an excess of ordinary income over ordinary expenditures, only a small amount which is inadequate to take care of contingencies, especially at this time when the revenue collections are not steady. Insertion of a proviso of suspension of expenditures, as above pointed out, would have constituted a sufficient safeguard to meet any contingency that may arise affecting the stability of the National Budget.

Reducing the cost of cadastral surveys made by corporations of private surveyors

[Released on June 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Once more I am vetoing Bill No. 3106, entitled “Ley para reducir el costo de las mediciones de los proyectos catastrales llevados a cabo por corporaciones de agrimensores particulares y destina fondos al efecto”, which has been repeatedly introduced and passed by the National Assembly on the same ground that I vetoed it the last time. The private parties who undertook to make these surveys did it with the expectation of reaping a large profit and now that they are not able to collect their fees, they want the National Government to come to their rescue. These parties did not do the work with any special desire to render a public service, but purely as a business proposition and on a business basis. They have no right to ask relief from the National Government.

I shall, however, consider favorably a bill that will permit the assumption by the National Government of the obligation of the landowners and the responsibility for its collection, provided that the amount to be paid to the private surveyors shall not be in excess of what it would have cost, had the Government undertaken these cadastral surveys itself.

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Veto of Bill No. 2654

[Released on June 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I wish to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2654, entitled “An Act granting to Ricardo Gemora the right to sell, convey, assign, or transfer his franchise and all property and rights acquired thereunder to install, operate, and maintain an electric current, heat, and power system in the Municipality of Hog, Province of Occidental Negros, in favor of Mrs. Esperanza Lucerna.”

The records of the Public Service Commission show that by virtue of Act No. 3781, approved on November 28, 1930, Ricardo Gemora was granted a franchise for the maintenance and operation of an electric plant in the Municipality of Ilog, Province of Occidental Negros, in accordance with the terms of Act No. 3636, known as the Uniform Electric Franchise Law. On December 2, 1930, Mr. Gemora filed with the Public Service Commission an application for a certificate of public necessity and convenience, which the Commission granted by its decision, dated November 7, 1932, the formal Certificate of Public Convenience and Necessity having been issued to him on December 14, 1932. However, Mr. Gemora has up to this date not filed with the Commission his written acceptance of the franchise and has not deposited with the Treasurer of the Philippines the bond in the amount of P1,000, required by sections eight and nine of the aforesaid Act No. 3636. In view thereof, on the date when Bill No. 2654 was approved by the National Assembly, authorizing Ricardo Gemora to sell or transfer his franchise and other property rights acquired under Act No. 3781, the aforesaid Ricardo Gemora no longer had such rights, because those rights had lapsed in view of his failure to comply with the provisions of Act No. 3636, above cited. I assume that the National Assembly was not informed of these facts, when it approved the bill under consideration. If it is the intention of the National Assembly to grant to Mrs. Lucerna the rights and interests in the franchise originally given to Ricardo Gemora under Act No. 3781, there is no objection to the passage and approval of a bill directly granting to Mrs. Lucerna the franchise in question.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on Veto of Bill No. 3501, June 18, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On Veto of Bill No. 3501

[Released on June 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I wish to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3501, entitled “An Act to amend section one of Act Numbered Thirty-four hundred and thirty-six, entitled ‘An Act granting to the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company a franchise to install, operate, and maintain a telephone system throughout the Philippines.’”

On November 28, 1928, the “Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company” was granted a franchise to install, operate, and maintain telephone systems covering the most feasible following routes: Manila-Baguio, including all provinces traversed and Manila-Iloilo-Negros-Cebu, including all provinces and islands traversed. The present bill will grant to the Telephone Company the authority to operate the following additional lines: Manila-Albay, including all provinces and islands traversed, Manila-Camarines Sur, including all the provinces traversed, Manila-Davao, including all the provinces traversed, and Manila-Tayabas, including all the provinces traversed. The bill would in effect grant to the Telephone Company the right to operate practically in all parts of the Philippines south of Baguio, and would undoubtedly affect the rights of some provinces and municipalities which are now operating their own telephone service.

The Telephone Company has, on various occasions, attempted to obtain from the Philippine Legislature the extension of its franchise to other routes and lines, in addition to those granted in its original franchise; but so far it has been unsuccessful, undoubtedly because there has been no decision as yet as to the proper policy to adopt in this respect, the Government itself having its own telegraph service and many of the provinces and municipalities their own telephone systems, even before the telephone franchise was originally granted. Notwithstanding its inability to get legislative action, the Telephone Company has been extending its lines and the present bill, I am informed, is intended to legalize the existence of these extensions.

Cognizant of the above facts, and in view of the express provision of the Constitution authorizing the Commonwealth Government, in the interest of national welfare and defense to establish and operate means of communication, I have appointed sometime ago a board on telegraph and telephone communications, in order that this matter may be given thorough consideration and study, so that the Government may finally adopt a definite policy on the subject. Until then, I believe it inexpedient to approve any extension of the present franchise of the Telephone Company such as is contemplated in the bill under consideration, unless it be provided therein that in the event the Government should decide to maintain and operate for itself such service, the grantee shall surrender the franchise and turn over to the Government all serviceable equipment at cost. The bill before me does not contain such provision.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3500, entitled “Ley concediendo a la corporacion ‘Jai-Alai Manila, Inc’. un privilegio para construir, explotar y mantener en la Ciudad de Manila, Filipinas, un fronton de pelota vasca,” upon the ground that it is of very doubtful constitutionality. Section 7, Article XIII, of the Constitution provides that “the National Assembly shall not, except by general law, provide for the formation, organization or regulation of private corporations, unless such corporations are owned or controlled by the Government or any subdivision or instrumentality thereof.” It is apparent from the provisions of the bill that, in effect, it is in the nature of a franchise granted to Jai-Alai Manila, Inc., to conduct this particular business (pelota vasca) which can not be otherwise pursued by it if it were to incorporate only under the general corporation law. It has been held that “under a constitutional limitation prohibiting the formation of a corporation by special act * * * the grant by special act of a power or franchise to a corporation formed under a general act which could not be acquired by such a corporation under a general act, is a violation of the constitutional provision.” (26 C. Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3506, entitled “An Act to amend section twelve hundred ninety of the Administrative Code,” as the authority intended to be given to the Collector of Customs to impose, in his discretion, surcharges in case of undervaluation and misdescription in the declaration and entry of a merchandise is a very dangerous power to grant unchecked. I would have had no objection to this proposed amendment if the revision of the surcharges were subject to the approval of the Secretary of Finance or the President.

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To to the First National Assembly
On Veto of Bill No. 3585

[Released on June 18, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3585, entitled “An Act to condone penalties on real estate taxes incurred prior to the year nineteen hundred and thirty-eight, provided that delinquent landowners shall pay said taxes without penalty within a period of one year from the date of the approval of this Act,” for the following reasons:

1. The approval of this bill would create an unsound precedent as it is likely that in the future taxpayers would default willfully in the payment of their taxes, expecting that sooner or later the penalties will again be condoned.
2. The remission of real property tax penalties would be a discrimination against those who have already paid their taxes in arrears unless a provision is made for the return or refund of such penalties already paid, in which case it is feared that such refund will cause serious financial embarrassment to the local governments for the reason that the collected penalties may have already been spent.
3. Relief in the form of remission of penalties should be resorted to only in very exceptional cases as where there is general failure of crops or similar widespread disaster in any municipality or province, resulting in the absolute inability of taxpayers to meet their obligations to the Government. Such situation does not obtain at present as shown by the fact that a big majority of the taxpayers in the provinces have already paid their taxes for 1937.
4. The purpose of the bill may be accomplished through administrative action under the present law. Section 58 of Act No. 3995 empowers the President of the Philippines to remit or reduce the real property tax for any year in any municipality or province if he deems that the public interest so requires.

In view of the reasons above stated, and taking into consideration that when I signed on October 6, 1938, Bill No. 264 (now Commonwealth Act No. 35), which provided in part for the consolidation of all taxes on real property and the penalties due thereon and setting aside forfeitures theretofore effected, I then announced that it was the last time that I would sign a bill of this nature, I regret to inform you that I can not approve the bill under consideration.

Letter of President Quezon on proposed ordinance by Municipal Councils of Pampanga, June 20, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On proposed ordinance by Municipal Councils of Pampanga

[Released on June 20, 1938]

My dear Governor Baluyot:

My attention has been called to news items appearing in the newspapers to the effect that there is a plan or move to have the municipal councils of Pampanga approve a municipal ordinance “prohibiting the promotion of hatred between classes, the spread of communistic teachings and dogmas, the assemblage of questionable characters, the wanton destruction of property, the penalty thereof, and other purposes.”

The alleged proposed ordinance is not only so illegal on its face but also so foolish, that I would not give it any importance except for the fact that people may be induced to believe that the Government is going to countenance such an arbitrary action on the part of any Government employee. I hope it is not necessary for me to tell you that no ordinance of this sort should be tolerated.

In order that there may not be any misunderstanding as to my purposes in my conference with the provincial and municipal officials of Pampanga and Tarlac, I desire to re iterate that when I told the municipal mayors that the Government would not tolerate violations of the law in respect to the holding of meetings or public demonstrations, I meant to convey the idea that they should not permit gatherings of a large number of people for the purpose of preventing citizens from attending to their lawful pursuit, or of coercing them through positive acts or through intimidation into joining organizations, especially those of doubtful legality, against their will, or when such gatherings are likely to produce or cause public disorder or alarm. You will recall that my remarks on this point were made as a result of information given during the conference that in certain sections of the Province of Pampanga, night gatherings were being brought about through the use of the “tambuli”; that those gatherings, generally resorted to for the purpose of getting new followers for some associations, have been causing alarm among the peaceful people; and that in several instances, large groups of people pertaining to some labor associations were used for the purpose of preventing the laborers of certain landowners to pursue their daily labor or of forcing upon the said landowners the labor of other people not acceptable to the landowners. It was because of these occurrences that I directed the mayors to be on the lookout for any violations of the law, and counselled them to pass ordinances so as to make it necessary in the future to obtain the necessary permission from the authorities in order to hold such gatherings, and to prohibit the use of the “tambuli” and other similar contrivances for such purposes.

If the reports as to the alleged form of the proposed ordinance are correct, it is not only not in accordance with this direction but also, as I have already stated, entirely untenable under a democratic form of Government.

Sincerely yours,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON
President of the Philippines

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3395, entitled "An Act to amend section three of Commonwealth Act Numbered One hundred and ninety-five."

This is a bill which I permitted to be considered among others during your last special session in view of representations made to me that the extension of the effective date of Commonwealth Act No. 195 from July 1, 1938, to July 1, 1940, was justified and would cause no harm to the public interest. I have now before me the study made by the Secretary of Finance, the Commissioner of the Budget, and the Collector of Internal Revenue and they all recommend disapproval of the bill on the ground that its enactment into law will adversely affect the yearly income of the National Government. The Commissioner of the Budget further informs me that the additional revenue expected to be realized from the enforcement of Commonwealth Act No. 195 was taken into consideration in estimating the income of the National Government in the 1939 Budget, which served as the basis for the estimate of the expenditures for that year.

[Released on June 22, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3547, entitled “An Act amending some of the provisions of chapter thirty-one (Medical Law) of Act Numbered Twenty-seven hundred and eleven, commonly known as the Administrative Code of nineteen hundred and seventeen, as amended by Act Numbered Four thousand and seven.”

Under the provisions of Act No. 4007, known as the Reorganization Law of 1932, all of the sixteen boards of examiners were reorganized and placed on the same level by requiring that all of the said Boards of Examiners shall each be composed of a chairman and two members who shall serve for a period of one year and shall receive compensation not to exceed five pesos per capita of the candidates examined, and that the results of the examinations shall be reported to the Commissioner of Civil Service as the executive officer of the boards, who shall in turn submit such results to the corresponding Secretary of Department for approval. The proposed measure, however, seeks to place the Board of Medical Examiners in a class by itself by providing, among others, that the term of the members of the Board of Medical Examiners shall be for a period of five years, that the compensation of the members of the Board be increased from five to ten pesos for each candidate examined, and eliminating the requirement in the present law that the results of all examinations be submitted to the Department Head concerned for confirmation.

No representation has been made to me that the duties of the members of the Board of Medical Examiners have increased to such an extent as to justify the proposed increase in their compensation. All the boards of examiners are, in their respective fields, charged by law with the same duties and responsibilities which would seem to indicate that there is a sound basis for uniformity in compensation, tenure of office and in the procedure of conducting examinations, and I can not, therefore, see any reason why the Board of Medical Examiners should be given certain special considerations which are denied to the other boards.

In view thereof, I am constrained to veto this bill.

Respectfully,

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION, AND THE WORK OF
THE JOINT PREPARATORY COMMITTEE ON PHILIPPINE AFFAIRS

[Delivered at the opening of the fifth special session of the National Assembly, July 25, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have called this Honorable Body into special session so that you may enact a law fixing the date for the election of the members of the National Assembly, their term of office to commence on the 15th of November, 1938, the date when, under the Constitution, the terms of the present members shall expire. In this connection, I desire to invite your attention to the need of amending the Election Law, so as to prohibit and punish certain practices not covered by existing legislation. These practices are well known greatly to increase expenditures of the candidates and tend to vitiate the elections. Determined as we are to establish democracy firmly and permanently in our country, we must exercise the strictest vigilance to maintain the streams of free popular expression unpolluted and undefiled. Above all we must guard the ballot box against the pernicious influence of money, and guarantee to every citizen that the lack of wealth shall not be a bar to his seeking an opportunity to serve this nation. I trust, therefore, that you will be able to accord to this matter early consideration.

It was my intention, and have so announced, to submit to you at this session certain measures recommended by the Department of Finance relative to taxation. This was deemed necessary, first, because there was urgent need of more funds to provide for the increase this year in the public school enrollment, which could not be met with estimated ordinary revenues; and second, in order that our system of taxation may be more in accord with the policy to which we are committed—a just distribution of the tax burden upon the principle of ability to pay. It now appears that we have collected during the first six months of this year several million pesos more than was estimated in the Budget. It is not necessary, therefore, to enact at this time any tax measure to raise funds to defray the urgent expenses of the Government for the Bureau of Education and other necessary activities. In view of this fact, I have decided not to ask you at this special session to consider tax legislation, leaving the matter for your next regular session.

The imposition of new taxes is always a serious matter, especially if it means a fundamental change in the policies underlying the public revenue system. The adoption of new theories of taxation already accepted in other progressive countries, as well as by competent students of public finance, is not the only question which should merit consideration. Equally important, and in our particular case, probably more so, is the rationalization of these theories in regard to the particular social and economic organization of our people, so that they may not in practice bring greater evils than those they are intended to remedy.

The power to tax can be and should be used both to produce revenues for the Government, and as an instrument to mold and direct the social and economic organization of the country. If, however, this latter function is to be accomplished successfully, with the least possible inconvenience or injury either to individuals or the body politic, this great power should be employed only after careful deliberation. If the proverb that “to go fast one must go slowly is ever true, it is so in the case of social or economic reforms. It is evidently the better part of wisdom for us to take more time—since we can do this without jeopardizing the solvency of the public treasury—in the study of the tax measures that are proposed for enactment, hearing those who wish to be heard, and thoroughly examining every aspect of the questions involved.

Everyone should realize that the people of the Philippines are, absolutely as well as relatively, among the least taxed people in the world. On the other hand, we cannot stagnate; we must make progress; we are far from performing adequately the most elementary duties of government. Hundreds of thousands of children are still being deprived of the opportunity to enter the primary schools, despite the injunction of the Constitution that no child of school age be deprived of this privilege. The health of our people is not being properly protected, and there are many other essential activities which the Government should undertake and which have not so far been done for lack of funds. We must, therefore, insure a larger income from the Government, within the limits, of course, of the economic capacity of the country to provide that income. This means that we must not only revise our system of taxation to conform with the principle of the ability to pay, but also with a view to increasing our revenues.

For the stability of business and in order that those who are engaged in productive enterprise may be in a position to plan their respective industries, bearing in mind their obligations to the Government, together with all other items and factors which determine their costs and risks, it is most desirable that our tax structure possess some degree of permanency. To avoid frequent changes in our tax laws so disturbing to business, we should endeavor to estimate the probable and inevitable increase in the expenditures of the Government during the next ten years, so that revenue laws may be passed adequately to meet such requirements. I, therefore, propose the appointment of a commission which will study our tax system, considering the growing cost of public education with the increase of our population, the greater expenditures in the maintenance of roads which are being built under the four-year program which you have approved in your last session, and other essential activities of the Government which, as the years go by, will necessarily demand a progressively larger outlay. Needless to say, increased revenues may come not only from present sources, or from tapping new ones, but also from the creation of taxable wealth which it is to be hoped will result from the stimulation of our economic development to be planned by the National Economic Council.

There is one other subject which I deem it my duty to lay before you at this time.

By a large majority of the members of this body, a bill on religious instruction in the public schools (Bill No. 3307) was passed in your last regular session. I vetoed this bill and my veto message which is now in your possession states the reasons for my action.

Inasmuch as the National Assembly had already adjourned sine die when I vetoed the religious instruction bill, this body did not have an opportunity to reconsider the measure under the provisions of the Constitution, which would have permitted it to repass the bill, the veto of the President notwithstanding.

It is not my desire, nor do I consider it conducive to the public interest, to deprive you of the opportunity to take up this matter again, if you regard it your duty to do so, despite my veto and my reasons therefor. You can only do this, in my opinion, if I include this subject among the measures which may be taken up at this special session. I am affording to you constitutional authority to take it up, if you so desire. I have considered it advisable to do this, because I regard the controversies that have arisen in relation to the bill on religious instruction of such seriousness and importance, that it would be well for the whole nation and all the parties involved that they be settled now and forever. These controversies are pregnant with the seeds of popular dissension and I trust that the National Assembly will cooperate with me in my earnest endeavor toward our country against the bitter strifes that have arisen in other nations due to similar or allied causes. Let us not by our refusal to face these dangers merely postpone the inevitable conflict which, notwithstanding the sound and patriotic purposes of those engaged therein, will inevitably degenerate into a religious struggle with all its accompanying evils.

The religious instruction bill, after a thorough deliberation, was passed by this body by a vote of two-thirds of the members voting. Such a large majority could not but have weight in my mind when I took action on the bill. If I had any doubt as to the interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution in this regard, or if the questions involved were merely of policy, I might have been inclined to resolve the doubt in favor of the views of such a large majority of your members. I wish to state to you, however, that after a careful study and consideration I saw that my duty was plain and clear, for the provisions of the Constitution are so explicit that they left me no choice except to disapprove the bill. It must be borne in mind, moreover, that in consonance with most constitutions recognizing religious freedom and the separation of Church and State, our Constitution expressly prohibits the use of any public property, directly or indirectly, in the interest of any religion. Taking into consideration all these provisions of the Constitution, the conclusion is inescapable that the precept relating to religious instruction does not provide a limitation to rights that otherwise exist under the Constitution, but is permissive in nature and establishes a privilege which otherwise would not exist. This fact, by every rule of statutory construction, compels the strictest interpretation of such provisions. This was my conviction when I vetoed the measure, and I have not changed my views on the matter. I am deeply convinced that the bill which you passed was unconstitutional. Any other bill which you may pass amending the present law on religious instruction in the public schools will likewise be unconstitutional. If the National Assembly should again pass the same or any other similar bill, I shall veto it and send it back to you at this session that you may act on my veto.

It may not be amiss to reiterate that I am one of those who believe that religious instruction is not only good but also necessary for children of school age. As I stated in my veto message, I consider religion as a great power for good. It is stabilizing in its influence. It is good for the individual and good for the body politic. I believe also that the primary duty to teach religion devolves on the parents, if and when those parents profess a religion. Of course, it is a part of the essential functions of a church to teach religion to its faithful. I am prepared to give every facility for the teaching of religion to the youth of our country in accordance with the laws of the land.

But I can go no further. I am persuaded after a careful study, not only by the express provisions of the Constitution regarding this subject, but also by the essential implications from the doctrine of separation of Church and State, that the Government of the Philippines cannot do more in reference to religious instruction in the public schools, than what is now authorized by law. In other words, in order that the Government may allow the teaching of religion during school hours in place of curricular activities, it will be necessary not only to amend existing legislation which has been incorporated by reference into our Constitution, but also to repeal the provision of the Constitution establishing the separation of Church and State.

This was also the view of Taft, who contended that to permit religious instruction in the public schools during the hours when the buildings were required for school purposes would be a violation of the accepted constitution inhibitions intended to safeguard religious liberty and the separation of Church and State. As is well known, it was Taft who, in the face of strong opposition, was responsible for the teaching of religion in the public schools being permitted at all.

Much as I believe that religious instruction is necessary for our youth, and, therefore, much as I sympathize with the idea that somehow the Government should promote the teaching of religion, I must emphatically state that if this can be done only by undermining or in any way violating the doctrine of the separation of Church and State, I am irrevocably opposed to it. This attitude is dictated by what I consider my duty under the Constitution and by my own personal convictions. After all the obligation to teach religion resides in the parents and the Church, and should they comply with this duty, the spiritual need of the people in this respect would be amply provided for. A government that authorizes optional religious instruction in the public schools, as it is done in the Philippines, with the limitations imposed by the Constitution, is already supplementing in no inconsequential way that duty of the parents and of the Church. With the opportunities we offer in the public schools at present, the Government cannot be blamed if religion is not more generally taught.

As you well know, during my last visit to the United States, President Roosevelt, in consultation with me, appointed the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, composed of Americans and Filipinos, to study and make recommendations as to the future trade relations between the United States and the Philippines, with a view to a gradual, rather than an abrupt, elimination of trade preferences between the two countries. This action was prompted by a considered view of the injurious consequences to American-Philippine commerce, and particularly to the integrity of the Philippine economy, if the trade provisions of the Independence Act were to be left unchanged. It was the consensus of opinion not only of the officials of the Government of the United States in charge of Philippine affairs, but also of the officials of the Philippine Government, that there exist some inequalities in the effects of these provisions which should be removed, and that they should otherwise be modified so as to give to the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust its economy. This opinion was entertained generally by Americans and Filipinos who are cognizant, either from study or actual experience, of the inevitably harmful results to Philippine economic interests of the enforcement of the trade provisions of the Independence Act after 1941 and 1946.

On another occasion, I advised you of the creation of this committee and of the members that constituted it. It is my pleasure now to inform you that the committee has concluded its work after a long, laborious and conscientious study of all phases of the problem. The committee did part of its work in the United States and part in the Philippines. It held hearings in both countries, and after the hearings it met first in Manila and then in Washington, and spent many months before it could come to a unanimous agreement upon its recommendations. Perhaps the recommendations of the report may not meet with the approval of everyone, but I am voicing the sentiments of the Filipino members in the committee when I say that the American members went as far as they honestly felt that they could go in meeting our views, and I hope that the American members will also feel that this had been the attitude of their Filipino colleagues. There was one common purpose and objective shared by all the members of the committee, Americans and Filipinos, and that was to do the best that they thought they could do under the circumstances in the interest equally of America and the Philippines.

I feel certain that you and our people unite with me in expressing to the members of the committee, both Americans and Filipinos, our grateful appreciation of their valuable work done with such high purpose and devotion. The President of the United States needs no praise from us, but I must say that the whole Philippine nation will never forget the kindly interest and concern which President Roosevelt has shown for our future welfare and security. May I also reiterate, that it may be recorded in the annals of our country, that the President, despite the grave problems which from the start have besieged his administration, has shown that his heart has never failed to throb for the liberty and happiness of the Filipino people, and that his active mind has been always seeking the best course leading to the attainment of these noble aims, with the least possible suffering for our people.

I have in my possession an official copy of the report and the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs. I am constrained to withhold transmittal to you now of this report, because I have been asked by the President of the United States to keep it confidential until such time when, in consultation with me, he should decide that it be made public. In due time, this report will be submitted to the National Assembly for your consideration and appropriate action.

I bespeak the cooperation of the National Assembly in the settlement of the problems which I have laid before you and of those which it is my purpose to submit from time to time for your consideration during this special session.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have called this Honorable Body into special session so that you may enact a law fixing the date for the election of the members of the National Assembly, their term of office to commence on the 15th of November, 1938, the date when, under the Constitution, the terms of the present members shall expire. By a large majority of the members of this body, a bill on religious instruction in the public schools (Bill No. 3307) was passed in your last regular session. I vetoed this bill and my veto message which is now in your possession states the reasons for my action.

Inasmuch as the National Assembly had already adjourned sine die when I vetoed the religious instruction bill, this body did not have an opportunity to reconsider the measure under the provisions of the Constitution, which would have permitted it to repass the bill, the veto of the President notwithstanding.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on changing the Official Fiscal Year, July 27, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To to the First National Assembly
On changing the Official Fiscal Year

[Released on July 27, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Under section 9 (1), Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines, the President is required to submit within fifteen days of the opening of each regular session of the National Assembly a budget of receipts and expenditures. Since the enactment of Commonwealth Act No. 244, which changed the opening date of each regular session of the National Assembly from October 16th to the fourth Monday of January of each year, the preparation of the annual budget has become difficult for the administration due to unavailability of appropriate data on actual collections and expenditures of the different branches of the Government on which to base the estimate of income and expenditures for an incoming fiscal year that commences a year thereafter.

I, therefore, recommend the enactment during your present special session of a law changing the official fiscal year from the period from January first to December thirty-first to the period from July first of each calendar year to June thirtieth of the calendar year immediately following, in order to enable the administration, in preparing each annual budget, to use as basis the actual collections and expenditures for the first quarter of the current fiscal year, and such annual budget shall be for a period that will commence only six months from the time it is prepared.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the immediate necessity of the enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Message of President Quezon on repealing the conditional feature of some items of appropriations contained in the General Appropriation Act for 1939, July 27, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On repealing the conditional feature of some items of appropriations contained in the General Appropriation Act for 1939

[Released on July 27, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Section 6 of the General Appropriation Act for 1939 makes the availability of the following items of appropriations, which are provided in said Act, conditional upon the enactment of tax laws authorizing the collection of additional revenues sufficient in amount to cover them:

D-IV- 1	For pensions of veterans of the Philippine Revolution as may be authorized by law	P50,
G-IV-20	For the operation and maintenance of ten aërological stations	30,2
H-IV-16	Additional expenses for the operation and maintenance of ten radio stations to be devoted principally for broadcasting weather reports	70,9
H-IV-17	For the operation of twelve radio telephone stations to be established at different airports for the benefit of aviation	20,4
I-IV- 6	Additional appropriation for the establishment or opening of new primary schools or classes, in June, 1938, including the purchase of necessary textbooks	P1,0
I-IV- 7	For the continuation of the new elementary schools or classes established or opened in 1938	1,84
I-IV- 8	For the operation, maintenance, and equipment, including the purchase of necessary textbooks, of new public primary schools or classes to be established upon the opening of the school year 1939-1940	1,00
I-IV-13	For the conversion of existing agricultural schools to regional agricultural schools of the Central Luzon type and/or the establishment of new regional agricultural schools of said type	192,
I—IV—14	For the conversion of existing trade schools to regional trade schools of the type of the Philippine School of Arts and Trades and/or the establishment of new regional trade schools of said type	158,
I-IV-28	For additional appropriation for the operation of traveling X-Ray Units and the establishment of combined Pneumothorax Clinics and Tuberculosis Dispensaries	145,
I-IV-29	For the establishment and maintenance of public health laboratories for the study and investigation of communicable diseases	P71,
I-IV-30	For the establishment, operation, and maintenance of offices of epidemiologists to be assigned by the Director of Health in the	45,5 provinces of the Philippines to make scientific epidemiological studies and investigations of the prevalence of communicable diseases

I-IV-31	For the extension of the control and eradication of malaria	950,
I-IV-34	For expenses of the Nursery for Nonleprous Babies and Children below two years of age	18,7

This arrangement has to be made in order to keep the ordinary recurring expenses of the National Government within its estimated ordinary income and to avoid further depletion of the surplus.

The postponement of the consideration by the National Assembly of the tax measures creating additional sources of income for the Government to the next regular session of the same having been agreed upon, the urgent and vital needs of the Government for the extension of elementary education and the protection and improvement of the public health and for social amelioration will have to be met by other means. Fortunately, although the revenue collections during the first six months of the current year have fallen below those collected during the corresponding period of last year, they have exceeded the estimated collections for the same period, and, should the present trend continue, this year's excess of revenue collections over those originally estimated in the budget will not be less than P5,000,000.

I, therefore, recommend the enactment during your present special session of a law repealing the conditional feature of the items of appropriations listed above. Such repeal will in no way endanger the stability of the budget in view of the authority which the President of the Philippines may exercise any time to suspend or otherwise stop the expenditure of any of the items of appropriations provided in Commonwealth Act No. 300, or any portion thereof, under section 8 of the same Act.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the immediate necessity of the enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on authorizing the President to lease haciendas from their present owners for a period not exceeding 25 years with an option to purchase them at a stated price, August 10, 1938

AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT TO LEASE HACIENDAS FROM THEIR PRESENT OWNERS FOR A PERIOD
NOT EXCEEDING 25 YEARS WITH AN OPTION TO PURCHASE THEM AT A STATED PRICE

[August 10, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I wish again to bring to your attention the problem of the purchase of the large landed estates or “haciendas.” In my message to the National Assembly of June 16, 1936, I referred to the question of acquiring these estates at a fair and just price, so that they may be resold in small lots to those occupying them as tenants. The Coalition platform was committed to this policy. I stated then, however, that in view of our experience in relation to the friar lands, I was convinced that the purchase and resale of these haciendas would not solve the agrarian and social problems existing therein; that it would not prevent the concentration in the future of these lands in the hands of a few people; and that the benefits, if any, that might accrue to the tenants would not justify the large outlay of public funds required to cover the purchase price, which funds did not exist in the public treasury.

The portions of the haciendas which are urban in character offered a different problem. They did not require such a large outlay, and with the well-known attachment of the Filipino to his home, I was convinced that there was no immediate danger of the urban lots ultimately finding their way into the possession of a few men. I, therefore, requested authority to proceed to acquire these urban portions through expropriation proceedings. The National Assembly has authorized a total expenditure of P3,000,000 for this purpose. I have the pleasure to report that these proceedings are now before the courts and are being pressed to a termination as soon as possible. They cover lands within the Haciendas of Lian in Batangas, San Pedro de Tunasan in Laguna, and Dinalupihan in Bataan.

In view of the extraordinary funds covered into the Philippine Treasury from the coconut oil excise tax, I appointed a Committee to study further the advisability of purchasing the agricultural portions of these haciendas, for it has always been my desire to ameliorate the situation of the people occupying these lands. The Committee has been making a careful study of all the questions involved, and at your last regular session I transmitted to you a partial report of that Committee covering the proposed purchase of the Hacienda of Lian. Since then, the Committee has recommended an appropriation of P12,000,000 for the purchase of some of these haciendas. To acquire all of them would undoubtedly require a much larger sum.

From the letter of the Chairman of the Committee transmitting the recommendation for the additional appropriation alluded to, I quote the following:

“Your Committee considers that the objective of the Government in the acquisition of the big landed estates is not only to break them up into small parcels, but also to enable the occupants to acquire and hold lands for themselves and their children and thus become free and independent farmers. In the case of the big estates acquired by the Government under Act No. 1120, this objective of the Government was not fulfilled in many instances. It is true that the small landowners were created out of the previous tenants and ‘kasamas’, but a considerable number of these, left to themselves, transferred their holdings to others, bringing about the consolidation of their holdings in a few individuals who finally became their landlords. Much in the same way, parcels of the public domain granted to individual settlers found their way into the hands of a few. The situation has been due largely to the fact that the Government has limited itself to the distribution of the land and has not given to the occupants the necessary facilities in their struggle to become landowners. It is believed that to attain success, the Government should not stop at the sale of the lands but should continue to lend a helping hand so that the ‘kasamas,’ usually unlettered, who heretofore had to depend on their landlords for money advances, for advice and for guidance, may have an agency to take the place of the former landlords.”

I endorse the views of the Committee. I believe we will solve nothing by merely purchasing and reselling the lands. On the other hand, to adopt the recommendation of the Committee will involve the Government in a most difficult enterprise, requiring years of planning and execution, and an outlay which will amount to many times the P12,000,000 which is being asked. The Committee estimates that, this sum will be sufficient to acquire only four haciendas at their assessed value. We may have an idea of the large amount needed when we consider that up to now there have been received sixty petitions for the purchase of landed estates and homesites in different parts of the Philippines.

I am not prepared to embark the Government upon such a costly undertaking and with such uncertain results. Moreover, we cannot make these large expenditures without neglecting entirely the just claims of a vast number of our population for government assistance. There should be a relative balance in our appropriation of public funds in relation to the furtherance of our social objectives, so that the welfare of the nation at large may be promoted and the people may be benefited in proper proportion.

I cannot, on the other hand, resign to a policy of inaction and defeatism in the face of the problems created by these landed estates. Without the need of very large expenditures, I believe we can effect a gradual but more real and lasting improvement in the conditions obtaining among the tenants in these haciendas. I recommend that the Chief Executive be authorized to lease these lands from their present owners for a period not exceeding twenty-five years, with an option to purchase them during that period for a stated price. In this manner we need not now appropriate so many millions of the public money, and during the period of the lease we shall have an opportunity to study and, more effectively, I believe, improve actual conditions in those areas. I also request authority to establish the necessary agencies for the administration of these haciendas during the period of the lease, and an appropriation of P1,500,000 for these purposes.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on situation of the Sugar Industry, August 12, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On situation of the Sugar Industry

[Released on August 12, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am submitting to you for your serious and earnest consideration one of the most vexing problems that now confront the country. I am referring to the situation of the sugar industry.

The sugar industry has become one of our basic industries. It represents a very important factor in the national economy. It has attained its present prosperous situation due to what might be termed "an artificial condition," namely, the privileged status which its free access to the American market has given it. The sugar industry is now threatened with disruption through several distinct causes. Under the provisions of the Independence Act, the free entry of Philippine sugar to the United States market will begin to suffer restrictions, starting from November 15, 1940, and ending in a total elimination of its preferences. When that time comes, the sugar industry in the Philippines can only survive if costs of production have been so reduced as to allow it to compete with sugar produced in those countries supplying the open markets of the world.

Because of this privileged status of the sugar industry, it may be properly stated that its prosperity has been due mainly, if not exclusively, to direct government protection. With the establishment of quota limitations on production, it has become a monopoly of those who were already in the industry. The sugar industry, therefore, more than any other industry in the Philippines, has definite social obligations, and the Government is duty bound to see to it that the benefits so conferred upon the industry be fairly distributed among those who make up the industry.

There are four elements that take part in the production of sugar: the sugar mills or centrals, the landowners, the sugar planters, and the laborers. No impartial observer can fail to admit that the sugar centrals have received generally the largest share in the benefits derived from the industry, compared to that received by either the sugar planter or the laborer. The landowner who leases out his land is, perhaps, the one who, relatively speaking, is in the most favored situation, for he takes no risks, exerts no effort, spends nothing to improve his land, and yet ordinarily he exacts very high rent.

The apparently unfair contract between the central and the planters may be explained by the fact that when the sugar industry was established in the Islands, capital invested in the sugar centrals was uncertain as to the prospects of the industry, especially because we were adopting a system which theretofore had proved to be a failure in other countries; namely, the system of producing cane on lands which were not owned or controlled by the factory. The sugar planters on the other hand, finding themselves in the alternative of either producing sugar under the old system or having the opportunity of producing it under modern methods, accepted the contracts that the sugar centrals offered them, without regard to the proportionate benefits they were receiving, knowing that by so doing they were materially improving their condition.

It may be assumed, therefore, that both parties to the contracts acted in good faith, without one's intention of taking advantage of the other. The fact, however, is that the fear or doubt of the sugar centrals has proved to be unfounded and they have made large profits. Some of these sugar centrals, many of them in fact, have already recovered their original investment. The sugar planters, on the other hand, have not made as much profit as they expected, not only because their estimates did not prove to be correct, but also because in the case of those sugar planters who do not own the land, they have been compelled to pay more and more rent for the land, as the landowners saw that they were making profits on their plantations. The laborers, whether in the sugar central or in the farms, have not in any case received the wage that they should have received. Generally speaking, the laborers in the sugar centrals have received higher wages than those in the plantations, but even in the case of the laborers in the centrals it is a fact that their wages are too low and should be raised.

Two problems, therefore, confront the country: one is to find means for the preservation of the sugar industry, after all the privileges that it now enjoys have terminated; the other, is to find the means of distributing the profits of the industry more equitably, as between the sugar central and the landowner on the one hand, and the sugar planter and the laborers, on the other.

It is my belief that a measure can be enacted within the limitations of our Constitution whereby the sugar industry may have a fair opportunity to readjust itself to a competitive status through a reduction of production costs. I also believe that a means can be found whereby a more equitable distribution of the profits can be made. I, therefore, recommend that the National Assembly enact a law for the purpose, first, to eliminate from the sugar industry the lands that are not favorably suited to the production of sugar cane and the centrals that can not be operated economically; second, to compel sugar centrals and sugar planters to pay higher and more appropriate wages to their respective laborers; third, to afford in the form of benefit payments, adequate relief to planters who are not receiving the share that they should receive from their sugar cane; and fourth, to provide funds for the amelioration of social and labor conditions existing in the industry, and to carry out a sound program for its adjustment and stabilization.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2) of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of such a law.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on negotiations on the pineapple industry and the operations of the Philippine Packing Corporation, August 15, 1938

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the First National Assembly
On negotiations on the pineapple industry and the operations of the Philippine Packing Corporation

[Released on August 15, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to submit hereunder, for your information, the facts surrounding negotiations that have been conducted in regard to the pineapple industry, with particular reference to the operations of the Philippine Packing Corporation in northern Mindanao.

In order to clarify the several steps taken in these negotiations, a short history of the pineapple industry and of the operations of the Philippine Packing Corporation in the Philippines is necessary.

In the year 1921, a group of trained experts in the production and packing of pineapples came to the Philippines and, up to 1926, made extensive studies of agricultural conditions throughout the country to determine the appropriate site for pineapple culture, and exerted efforts to acquire land of sufficient size to warrant developing a profitable industry. After these years of preliminary study, the Philippine Packing Corporation was organized in 1926. With such organization, additional technical staff was brought from the United States and definite field plantings were established in many places in the Islands, especially around Sarangani Bay and in Bukidnon. After two years of field plantings, or in 1928, Bukidnon was finally selected as the best place in which to grow pineapples and the first planting on a commercial scale was made therein.

The site selected by the officials of the Philippine Packing Corporation for pineapple culture were already covered by leases existing in 1928, as follows:

Lease No.	Area in hectares	Former Lessees	Date of expiration of lease	Assi
1. 1. 702 (E-G4)	1,024	Bukidnon Cattle and Coffee Co., Inc.	June 12, 1942	Anit
2. 703 (E-99)	471. 112	R. E. Gearhart	Oct 24, 1942	L.E.
3. 727 (E-76)	828.4367	Manuel Escobar	Sept. 4, 1942	A. V
4. 728 (E 77)	1,015.0162	J. J. Ossorio	Sept. 4, 1942	H. A
5. 729 (E 78)	985 3480	M. J. Ossorio	Sept. 4, 1942	J. M

All the above-mentioned leases were granted by the Government to their former lessees in the year 1917 for a term of 25 years expiring in 1942. As the land covered by them was found to be the most suitable in regard to location and quality, the officials of the Philippine Packing Corporation negotiated, through and with the approval of the then Department of Agriculture and Natural Resources, the assignment of the leases to some persons connected with the Philippine Packing Corporation. As may be seen from the above tabulation, the assignments of the leases to their present holders were finally effected in the year 1929, although the first commercial plantings of pineapples were made in 1928 in order that the first harvest may be ready for packing in 1930.

In the year 1930 the Packing Corporation erected a complete canning plant costing P1,500,000 in Bugo, Oriental Misamis. Almost immediately after erection 'of this plant, serious setbacks were suffered by the Packing Corporation due to the world economic depression which reduced the demand for canned pineapples considerably, so the Corporation attempted to pack tuna fish commercially in which enterprise they suffered great losses. When economic conditions improved, the Corporation went back to the cultivation and packing of pineapples. At present the Corporation is employing over 600 men on the plantations and about 500 men and women in the factory. It is intending to increase its output soon and will then be able to accommodate almost double its present personnel. The minimum wage on the plantations is P1 per day with free quarters and free medical and dental care for the laborers and their families. The men in the factory are paid a minimum rate of P1.04 per day, and the women P0.80, for eight hours work. The Corporation agrees to follow the minimum wage limits set by law or by the Administration. The entire organization is practically 100 per cent Filipino with the exception of seven employees from the United States used as technical advisers. The entire labor pay roll averaged P200,000 a year during the last five years and will be considerably increased as soon as the contemplated expansion is effected. The Corporation uses Philippine refined sugar valued at over P100,000 a year and pays a considerable amount of taxes to the local and National Governments. It has also spent about P250,000 on experimental work to develop practical control of pineapple pests as well as on the growing and canning problems which had to be solved before commercial production was possible, and established an experimental station in which they coöperate with the National Government in endeavoring to grow other crops suitable to the Bukidnon district. Roads and bridges and a telephone communication system within the areas covered by the leases and connecting such areas to the cannery in Bugo, Oriental Misamis, have been built entirely at the expense of the Corporation.

I also gathered from several acts of the Government that the Philippine Packing Corporation or the men behind it were encouraged to establish the cannery above mentioned in Mindanao and that the Corporation established this cannery in the belief that they would be permitted to occupy such lands as may be necessary to produce pineapples to feed the factory during such period as may be necessary for them to recoup their investments and make a reasonable profit. In the year 1929, the Governor General by Proclamation No. 230, created the Libona Pineapple Reservation, containing an area of approximately 14,000 hectares. In the same year, the Department of Agriculture and Natural Resources submitted to the Legislature a bill containing the so-called Alunan plan providing for the establishment of industries or agricultural enterprises to be administered in accordance with the sugar central system. The object of the Alunan plan was precisely to organize the pineapple industry in accordance with the sugar central system, and the Department of Agriculture and Natural Resources had already prepared regulations governing the institution of the central system in the pineapple industry.

As can be seen hereinabove, the existing leases covering the lands planted to pineapple to feed the cannery of the Philippine Packing Corporation will expire in the year 1942. As it takes two years for pineapples to bear fruit, the Philippine Packing Corporation desires to have the existing leases extended or that some sort of an arrangement be agreed upon to assure an adequate supply of pine apples to their cannery. The Corporation has to plan the production of pineapples so that there would be a sufficient harvest each year for the cannery. Their present arrangement has always been to divide the entire area devoted to planting into three portions—one portion planted during a year, and another portion planted another year and the third portion planted the third year, so that there would be a constant supply of pineapples produced in sufficient quantity to feed the cannery.

I believe it much better for the Government to enter into some suitable arrangement under which some Government agency would take over the control of such lands as may be needed for the development of the pineapple industry and for such agency to enter into an equitable contract with the Philippine Packing Corporation for the absorption by the latter of all the pineapples that may be produced. In my belief, some such arrangement is justified in view of the implied commitments of the Government to the Packing Corporation and especially because of the fact that a stoppage of operations of the Philippine Packing Corporation would deprive the Government of a considerable amount now paid as taxes and also of the benefits that may be derived from the experimental station operated and the researches conducted by the Corporation at its expense. Such stoppage of operations will also deprive the country of a good consumer of Philippine sugar and other products and will throw out of work nearly 2,000 laborers now employed on the plantations and in the factory to whom the Corporation pays yearly wages amounting to at least P200,000. The training of Filipinos in the cultivation and packing of pineapples will also stop.

So I considered the idea of letting the National Development Company have under lease from the National Government all the lands that may be necessary for the development of the pineapple industry and for the National Development Company to enter into a suitable agreement with the Philippine Packing Corporation in regard to this industry. The National Development Company under its charter has been permitted by your honorable body to do these things.

The National Development Company has submitted to me for my approval a plan of development which in my opinion will not only be beneficial to the Government and to the Company but also to the people of our country. The principal features of the agreement are as follows:

1. That the National Development Company lease from the National Government such areas of suitable land as may be needed for the development of this industry, including the land now held under lease by the officials and members of the Philippine Packing Corporation, as above enumerated, because the present lessees have agreed to return to the Government such leases and waive their rights thereunder although the leases do not expire up to 1942; and that the National Development Company shall pay the ordinary rentals on all land leased for this purpose.

2. That the National Development Company and the Philippine Packing Corporation will enter into a contract of operation of the pineapple plantations, and the principal features of such agreement, as tentatively arrived at, are as follows:

a. That the operation of the lands devoted to pineapple culture should be under a working agreement between the National Development Company and the Philippine Packing Corporation.

b. That the technical supervision with regards to the planting, etc., is to be left in the hands of the Philippine Packing Corporation which, through its experimental station and researches, has developed special technique in the production of pineapples, control of pests, etc.

c. That Filipino laborers and technicians will be employed with the exception of those whose places cannot be occupied by Filipinos because of requirements for highly specialized training and experience.

d. That the Philippine Packing Corporation shall pay to the National Development Company a rental for the use of land in the amount of P1 per hectare yearly.

e. That the capital for the operation of the plantations shall be advanced by the Philippine Packing Corporation and that the operating account shall be liquidated yearly after the harvest and delivery of pineapples to the Philippine Packing Corporation.

f. That the Philippine Packing Corporation shall pay the partnership for the pineapples delivered to said corporation at the rate of P10 per ton.

g. That every year, a liquidation of the operation shall be made to determine the profit or loss, as follows: Take the gross income on the basis of P10 per ton of pineapples produced, and deduct from the amount all the expenses of operating the plantations only. The profit shall be divided share-and-share alike by the Philippine Packing Corporation and the National Development Company. If the liquidation shows a loss, the loss shall be suffered only by the Philippine Packing Corporation. In this liquidation, the amount of P1 rental to be paid by the Philippine Packing Corporation to the National Development Company for each hectare of land devoted to pineapple culture shall not be taken into consideration as expense of operation.

h. That the experiments on the diversification of crops in the Bukidnon district shall continue and that as soon as the experiments show commercial possibilities for the production of other crops, such production shall be undertaken by the Philippine Packing Corporation and the proceeds from the sales of such crops shall be considered as income to the partnership and should be included in the yearly liquidation of the operation of the plantation.

i. That the National Development Company shall have authority to revise all the books and records connected with the operation of these plantations.

I believe that these conditions are fair because without the actual expenditure of public funds they will tend to develop an important industry, and I am inclined to approve them and to direct the National Development Company to proceed with the execution of the operating agreement.

This transaction can and will be entered into by administrative action under the existing laws. I deem it my duty, however, to apprise you officially of the contemplated action because, in my opinion, the nature of the transaction is such that, in this as well as in other similar cases when the National Development Company should undertake enterprises of this sort, the National Assembly should be fully informed of what is being done by this agency of the Government.

Respectfully,

ON

APPROVAL OF BILL No. 3616—PROVIDING FOR PAYMENT OF INDEMNITIES AND PENSIONS IN CASE OF ACCIDENT
DURING THE TRAINING OF TRAINEES AND RESERVISTS OF THE PHILIPPINE ARMY

[Released to the Press, September 12, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have today approved Bill No. 3616, entitled “An Act providing for the payment of indemnities and pensions in cases of accident during the training of trainees or reservists of the Philippine Army,” which has now become Commonwealth Act No. 400, as I believe that its aims and purposes are in line with the general policy of social security. The trainees or reservists, upon being drafted into the service, are taken away from their usual mode of occupation, and as an act of justice to them and to their families that are left behind, the Government should give them the assurance that while in training, they will be indemnified or compensated for any accident that may happen to them.

It has been pointed out to me that the first section of this bill is practically covered by Section 13 of Bill No. 3776 which has already been approved by me and is now known as Commonwealth Act No. 385. The provisions of said Act are general in their application, whereas the bill just signed by me would only apply to trainees or reservists who die or are disabled in case of accident. I shall, however, give instructions to the Chief of Staff of the Philippine Army so that only trainees or reservists or the forced heirs thereof who may take advantage of the provisions of one of these Acts shall not be allowed to enjoy the privileges accorded by the other Act.

VETO OF BILL No. 3887—
FURTHER AMENDING THE CHARTER OF THE CITY OF DAVAO

[September 13, 1938]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 3887, entitled “An Act amending Commonwealth Act Numbered Fifty-one, as amended by Commonwealth Act Numbered Two hundred nine, otherwise known as the Charter of the City of Davao.”

In section 12 of the bill, which amends section 34 of the Davao City Charter, it appears that the City Auditor is one of the officials to be appointed by the President with the consent of the Commission on Appointments. In my message to you dated June 18, 1938, regarding the Bacolod City Charter, I pointed out to you the inadvisability of having the City Auditor included among the appointees of the President. Under section 36 of the Davao City Charter, it is the Auditor General who receives and audits all accounts of the city, so that the appointment of another official to act as City Auditor might be considered as an interference with the constitutional duties of the Auditor General to audit, through his own representatives, the accounts of the City of Davao. Reiterating any previous stand on the matter, I cannot give my approval to the idea of providing a position of City Auditor for the City of Davao, as the Auditor General should be allowed to choose his own representative to enable him to perform the duties required of him by the laws and the Constitution.

I notice that in the same section 34 of the Davao City Charter sought to be amended, the Mayor is still empowered to suspend and remove any appointive city officer or employee not appointed by the President. In view of the approval of Commonwealth Act No. 177 which places in the hands of the Commissioner of Civil Service the power to impose administrative discipline on subordinate officers and employees of the Government, it is believed that the provision granting the Mayor such power of suspension and removal should no longer be allowed to stay in our statute books.

Under the provisions of section 2 of the bill, the Mayor is granted the power to approve the conveyances and encumbrances of real estate made by illiterate non-Christian residents of the City of Davao whenever the real estate is located within the boundaries of the city. Under the provisions of section 120 of Commonwealth Act No. 141, commonly known as the Public Land Act, conveyances and encumbrances made by illiterate non-Christians are not valid unless duly approved by the Commissioner for Mindanao and Sulu. The position of Commissioner for Mindanao and Sulu has been created with a view primarily to coordinating the different activities relating to the administration of the affairs of the inhabitants of the non-Christian provinces in Mindanao and Sulu. For the sake, therefore, of harmony and efficiency in the efforts of the Government to promote the welfare of the non-Christian inhabitants of Mindanao and Sulu, I am not agreeable to the proposed provision which would grant the Mayor of the City of Davao the power to approve conveyances and encumbrances of real estate made by illiterate non-Christians in the said city, without the intervention of the Commissioner for Mindanao and Sulu.

In view of the foregoing considerations and of the fact that the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Finance have pointed out to me certain other objectionable features of the proposed measure. I am constrained to veto the bill under consideration.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on Mayorship of the City of Cebu, September 14, 1938

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
MAYORSHIP OF THE CITY OF CEBU

[September 14, 1938]

My dear Assemblyman Rama:

Due to repeated requests of the present mayor of Cebu to be returned to the classified service, I am constrained to grant his petition. Mr. Alfredo V. Jacinto has been an efficient and loyal public servant in all the positions in the classified service, which he has occupied for many years, and my hopes, in appointing him mayor of Cebu, have been more than justified. Nevertheless, I am aware of the fact that his indefinite continuance in the mayorship, besides exposing him to the uncertainties of politics, also removes him from the branch of service in which Government officials are assured of permanence of position while they render satisfactory service.

This makes it necessary for me to appoint a new mayor for Cebu, and I have arrived at the conclusion that none better than you can be called upon to occupy the position. You are the author of the law which has converted the municipal government of Cebu into a city government. This law, inspired by the highest sense of patriotism and responsibility, should be justified in the eyes of the people. From all viewpoints, it is your duty to prove in practice that the conversion of an elective municipal president into an appointive mayor is justified. In conceiving the idea of making the post of mayor appointive, you acted under the belief that such a mayor is in a better position to serve the collective interests, as he is not bound by partisan exigencies, than an elective mayor. I am prepared to give you an opportunity to make good in practice the doctrine involved in the legislation you have sponsored. And so I offer you the mayorship of Cebu after the expiration of your term as assemblyman, as I cannot appoint you before this time due to a specific prohibition in the Constitution.

I request you to excuse yourself from your constituents and not to present your candidacy for reelection. I know that because of your services to the country from the halls of the Assembly, you are entitled to a reelection, and that the electorate of Cebu will reelect you in any district of the province where you may launch your candidacy. Nevertheless, taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, I am convinced that it is your duty to accept the post I now offer you, and I expect that you will not hesitate in giving me your affirmative answer.

Sincerely yours,

Message of President Quezon on Amelioration of the lot of the Workingmen, September 26, 1938

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

AMELIORATION OF THE LOT OF THE WORKINGMEN

[Read at the celebration of the Collective Labor Movement, in Angeles, Pampanga, September 26, 1938]

My Fellow Countrymen:

Mr. Pedro Abad Santos, of San Fernando, has requested me to address you on the occasion of your celebration of the Collective Labor Movement. Owing to previous engagements, I am unable to be with you in person, but I take pleasure in sending you a message of welcome and encouragement.

Every fair-minded man will have to admit that the workingman in the Philippines is not receiving his due. It has been my most earnest endeavor to ameliorate his lot and to secure for him just and equitable treatment. I want you to realize, however, that the labor problem is a very complicated one, especially with us, for it is inter woven with many phases of our daily life and century-old traditions. This is the reason why the Government has been proceeding slowly in its solution, measuring carefully every step that it takes. We have to change an archaic system which we have inherited from our ancestors and which has grown out of social conditions which cannot now be tolerated. But it is not merely a matter of enacting progressive laws which have proven successful in other countries; our task—and it is a difficult task—requires that we adapt them intelligently and constructively to our social and economic structure, lest we so disorganize our industries as to bring about a total economic collapse which, in the end, will do more harm to the laboring class itself than to other elements of our community.

There is not a single problem that is nearer my heart than this one, and if nothing else could be accomplished by my administration but to raise the wages of the laborers and improve their living and working conditions, I would feel that the country has not placed governmental powers in my hands in vain.

I need, however, the sympathetic cooperation of all the elements of our population, particularly of labor itself, in order that I may make substantial progress in this undertaking. It is more important that every ground that we win be made secure, than to advance quickly only to lose the following day what we have won the day before. I call upon you then to have patience and to give me your confidence, avoiding in the meantime the commission of acts on your part that might place obstacles in the way of the Government in bringing about these needed reforms. Above all else, you must show respect for the law and maintain peace. You can only be strong in your demand for recognition of your rights if at the same time you show willingness to recognize the rights of others.

I thoroughly sympathize with the movement to give the laboring class of the Philippines opportunities for collective expression and organization so that it may be able effectively to present its petitions and make valuable suggestions to the Government. But you must, at all times, be careful not to be led astray by irresponsible or selfish leaders who are interested more in their own egotistical aims than in your welfare. Please bear in mind that social justice does not mean justice to some and injustice to others. It means precisely justice to all the elements that constitute the community. I am emphasizing justice for the poor and for the workingmen now because it is the poor and the workingman who, at this juncture really need special care and protection on the part of the Government and its officials.

Manuel L. Quezon, Fifth State of the Nation Address, January 24, 1939

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On the the State of the Nation and Important Economic Problems

[Delivered at the Opening of the First Session in the Assembly Hall, Legislative Building, Manila on January 24, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I take pleasure in congratulating you upon your election to this Second National Assembly, and to you, Mr. Speaker, I wish publicly to express my deep feeling of satisfaction that your distinguished colleagues have elevated you to this position of great responsibility and honor.

As we enter upon the second and last period of my administration, we should once more make public avowal of our objectives and of our firm determination to achieve them.

The Philippines is our country, and we shall make it the home of a free people—not alone politically, but economically as well. And this economic freedom must not be limited to the concept of national self-sufficiency, but must extend to every hamlet and hearth in this land. For of what practical value can the “right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness” be to a person, if he does not actually enjoy it and his only freedom consists in the freedom to starve or die?

This then is our ultimate goal: That the political rights vouchsafed to all our people by the Constitution be made real and effective by affording to every person willing to work the opportunity to earn a decent livelihood.

The First National Assembly laid the foundations for the attainment of this goal. It made an enviable record worthy of emulation. Only a visionary could claim that this task can reach fruition during the life of one administration or of even a generation. We have to rebuild our national structure on the solid and permanent foundation of social justice. Laws alone will not do it. We have to fight against prejudices, wrong notions, and outworn customs and traditions. We have to preach the fundamental principles of Christianity, and make them the underlying philosophy of our political and social institutions.

The great work initiated by the First National Assembly with such signal success we have to continue and carry forward. This is the mandate we have received from our people and which we dare not disobey.

No party has ever received such a vote of confidence as the Nationalist Party did at the last general election. Not a single candidate from the minority parties has been elected to this body. The faith and trust which our people have placed in our party in this extraordinary manner demands, in turn, from each of us extreme fidelity and devotion to duty. Not only must we steadfastly forge ahead with our determination to elevate to the topmost the moral, cultural, political, economic, and social conditions of our people, that they may be free from every sort of bondage, but our official acts and deeds should be such as to convince our people of the earnestness and honesty of our aims.

As the head of the State and the leader of our party, I venture to express the hope that the National Assembly will resist every temptation to divide itself into groups or blocs that may tend to weaken our unity of purpose and action. One of the dangers of such division lies in the possibility that the general interests of the nation may be overlooked, at least temporarily, and sacrificed for the benefit of the particular interests represented in the group or bloc. Obviously, one of the reasons why our people did not elect to the Assembly members representing the opposition is because they realize the importance of avoiding waste of time in political bickering in the proceedings of this body in these anxious days when every single energy we can command should be devoted to the difficult task of preparing our nation for an independent existence in an international situation so fraught with danger. Moreover, organized groups or blocs within a party are inconsistent with party responsibility and majority rule.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly, with your permission, I shall now proceed to give you a report on the state of the nation and to submit my recommendations regarding measures of first importance which I consider deserving of your prompt attention. From time to time, I shall take the liberty of sending to this body other messages concerning matters which, in my opinion, should be acted upon at this session.

During the past year the country enjoyed peace and order. There have been conflicts between capital and labor, but without serious consequences. Both the Department of Labor and the Court of Industrial Relations are entitled to commendation for the happy solution of such conflicts. However, we would be closing our eyes to the realities of the situation were we to believe that labor in our country is satisfied with its lot. There is growing unrest and discontent, specially among the farm laborers, not due entirely to the activities of professional agitators and irresponsible so-called labor leaders. Our laborers cannot be easily led astray by agitators when they have no real grievances. The Government is deeply concerned with the well-being of our masses, and it will not cease in its efforts to better their condition until ample justice is secured to them.

New public schools and classes have been opened and the enrollment in the public schools last year was increased by over 243,000. Approximately 18,500 kilometers of roads were in existence at the end of the year, and new wharves and other port facilities have been constructed. Public hospitals have been increased or enlarged, and clinics and dispensaries have been established in many localities. We are making progress in providing the remotest sections of the country with the services of doctors, dentists and nurses, and it is my earnest hope that during the next three years every town will be provided with these services. Sanitary conditions have been improved. We have not had any serious outbreak of epidemics and every threat or danger was effectively checked. An important housing project has been started in the vicinity of Manila to permit wage-earners and low-salaried employees to acquire or build their own homes. Should this project be successful, as I hope it will be, similar projects will be initiated in other communities.

Generally speaking, our national defense program has been carried out as planned, both as to cost and the number of men trained. Two full classes of trainees have now been processed through the instructional cadres and their organization into effective military unit's proceeds apace. Acquisition of arms, equipment and supplies is in approximate step with the production of tactical units. The Air Corps is steadily evolving into an effective fighting unit, both as to personnel and to equipment.

Deserving of special mention is the Philippine Military Academy in Baguio and its progress toward the establishment of a training course calculated to produce a highly trained, loyal and efficient professional leadership for our Army.

One accomplishment of the year toward which effort had been long directed was the separation of the Constabulary from the Army. From the beginning it was realized that law enforcement is not properly a military responsibility. Yet the necessity for using the Constabulary, as it existed in 1935, as the nucleus out of which to establish the Army's foundation, and the paucity of trained men for key positions had been the causes of the temporary consolidation heretofore existing. In the hope of avoiding wholesale transfers from the Army for police work, the establishment of a State Police from civilian sources was attempted in 1936. When the lack of trained personnel demonstrated that this method could succeed only if large numbers of officers and enlisted men were made available, it was decided, to avoid administrative complications, to separate from the Army the necessary individuals and organize them into a Constabulary. This has been done, and there is every reason to believe that the reconstituted organization will quickly earn a popular respect and prestige equal, and even superior, to the reputation in this regard enjoyed by the organization that existed prior to the establishment of the Commonwealth.

As a final word respecting the Army, I want to urge you, once again, to give to all matters concerning our future security the earnest consideration their fundamental importance deserves. If eternal vigilance is the price of freedom, let us then be ceaselessly vigilant. Our defensive system requires no unusual sacrifice by any individual, but its success depends primarily and almost exclusively upon a unification of the efforts of all toward this common and vital purpose. To attain such unification in a democracy, the military plan must be supported by popular intelligence, confidence, and enthusiasm. It is a special function of Government to see that this confidence is fairly earned and assiduously sustained. To this end let us see to it that every law we pass and every military measure we adopt shall reflect an unselfish and national purpose, that it shall impose injustice on none, and that it shall promote the security and defend the peace, the possessions and the liberty of all.

The business enterprises of the Government, especially the Philippine National Bank and the Cebu Portland Cement Company, were operated at a profit during the past year. The Manila Railroad Company has at long last completed its southern line. The gap which existed for many years between Tayabas and Camarines Sur was connected at a cost of about P2,000,000. This was one of my dreams that have come true. The significance of this achievement will be readily seen when we consider the fact that a daily, comfortable, fast and inexpensive communication service has been established between Manila and the Bicol provinces. At the same time the completion of this southern line means increased earnings for the railroad. The National Rice and Corn Corporation stabilized palay and rice prices at levels which, under the circumstances, properly safeguarded the interests of consumers and producers alike. The National Development Company is completing the construction of certain factories and studying the organization of others, in line with our policy to promote industrial development and provide more opportunities for the employment of labor. It is our policy with regard to many of these new industries merely to do pioneering work and ultimately to transfer them to private ownership and management.

Our foreign trade during 1938 suffered a slight reduction, mainly on account of low prices for our export products. It is to be noted, moreover, that our imports increased materially, while our exports decreased in value resulting in larger imports than exports decreased in value, resulting in larger imports than exports. This is an unhealthy condition for a country like the Philippines and every step should be taken to guard against the persistence of this adverse balance of trade. This situation may be due in part to increased purchasing power as a result of the expenditure by the Philippine Government of proceeds of the excise taxes on Philippine products collected in the United States. At the beginning, these remittances were made through the Dollar Exchange Standard Fund which resulted in an increase of circulation. In order to avoid this undesirable effect, the necessary measures have been adopted to effect the transfer of these funds through normal bank exchange transactions, without the necessity of releasing new currency by the National Treasury.

Tax receipts exceeded budget estimates during the last year. The income from taxation, however, for the year 1938 was P8,076,362.49 below the collections for the year 1937, exclusive of the proceeds of the excise taxes from the United States. This reduction in revenue may be attributed to three causes: (1) the low prices for our agricultural products both for domestic consumption and for export, (2) the stock market slump during the year 1938, and (3) the fact that in 1937 large amounts were collected for taxes due in preceding years. Despite the reduction in the public revenues the fiscal position of the Government remains sound and strong. As the budget which I shall present to the National Assembly will reveal, the expenditures of the Government during the year 1938 were well within the income for that year, with an excess in collections accruing to the general fund over the ordinary expenditures amounting to P12,410,420.21 at the close of the year.

The low prices for our export crops during the past year were a serious blow to a large portion of our population. This emphasizes the necessity that we should endeavor to establish our economy in an ever-growing proportion on the basis of our home market, because export crops must face conditions which are beyond the control of our Government.

As I have already reported to the last National Assembly, the President of the United States, in consultation with me, appointed the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs to study and make recommendations concerning future trade relations between the United States and the Philippines. The Committee has submitted its report and recommendations to the President of the United States and to the President of the Philippines. Copies of this report were furnished to the members of this body. The report will be officially transmitted to the Assembly tomorrow. I commend it to your careful and earnest consideration. President Roosevelt and I have both approved the report and recommendations of the said Committee and it is my understanding that the President will urge the Congress to enact appropriate legislation to carry into effect those recommendations. One of these recommendations is to do away with the restrictions on the expenditure of the proceeds of the excise tax on coconut oil, and another is to bind copra and abaca free of United States duty during the Commonwealth period. While it is not necessary for the National Assembly to pass any legislation effectuating such recommendations until the Congress of the United States has acted thereon, I earnestly recommend that you approve a resolution endorsing the recommendations of the report, so that the Congress of the United States may be informed that, if it should take favorable action on said recommendations, the National Assembly would do likewise. It is my hope that the Congress of the United States will approve legislation putting into effect the recommendations of the report at an early date, in order to place American-Philippine trade relations on a more fair and equitable basis, and to permit the Philippines properly and intelligently to plan its economic adjustment in preparation for independence.

In connection with this matter, I have sent as my special representative to Washington the Honorable Sergio Osmeña, Vice-President of the Philippines, to conduct, with the cooperation of the Resident Commissioner, the necessary negotiations with the Government of the United States. With the authority, they have enlisted the assistance of the Honorable Antonio de las Alas, formerly Secretary of Finance. I am in constant touch with the Vice-President who is keeping me advised of the progress of their work. So difficult and delicate a task could not have been entrusted to better hands.

Yielding to the wishes of the members of the last National Assembly and of the business community, I agreed to defer action upon my proposals for a tax revision and appointed a Tax Commission to study the matter. The Tax Commission has effected a revision of our internal taxation, taking into consideration the fiscal adequacy of our system of public revenue, a more fair and just allocation of the tax burden, and the need of insuring a more equitable and sound redistribution of wealth. I also instructed the Commission to revise the tax system of our local governments with a view to supplying them with definite sources of revenue and a sufficient income to meet their growing needs. The report of the Tax Commission will be transmitted to you at an early date and I trust that it will receive your favorable attention.

I also desire to submit to your consideration the enactment of necessary legislation for the settlement of sparsely populated regions of the Philippines, specially in Mindanao. This is important not only for obvious political reasons and as a means to promote economic development, but also to relieve the acute congestion of population existing in certain agrarian areas. The National Economic Council has recommended a carefully prepared plan to carry out this objective. The plan contemplates a ten-year program aiming at the settlement in these vacant areas of about 500,000 people on selected lands adapted to subsistence farming and the production of certain money crops. This project will require an estimated total outlay of P20,000,000 which may be appropriated from the proceeds of the excise taxes. The report and recommendations of the National Economic Council on this matter will be transmitted to the National Assembly within a few days.

Another problem which demands immediate attention concerns banking and credit, the cost of credit, and credit facilities for commerce, agriculture, and industry. The only institution in the Philippines that grants agricultural credit is the Philippine National Bank, but the limit fixed by law on the amount of the capital and resources of the Bank which may be invested in such credits has already been reached and the Bank is unable to give any more agricultural loans. Credit for capital investment is not available. There is practically no market for industrial bonds. Prevailing rates of interest charged by banks and private money lenders are still high, which fact is a drag upon economic enterprise and business prosperity. The National Economic Council is recommending a reform of our banking structure in order to remedy these evils. The Council proposes the creation of an investment bank for agriculture and industry, to which shall be transferred all the activities of the Philippine National Bank except those exclusively pertaining to commercial banking. The Council also recommends the establishment of a reserve and rediscount institution which will operate precisely in the same manner as the Federal Reserve System in the United States. This will provide a reasonable degree of elasticity and control over the money market and should immediately result in releasing for investment many millions of idle cash now prudently held by the banks as reserves in excess of legal requirements. These proposals will not only insure sufficient credit facilities at reasonable cost, but will, in my opinion, afford credit to small farmers, either directly or through cooperatives, and likewise to large industrial enterprises. Upon the approval of these measures, the Assembly may also consider the wisdom of amending the Usury Law by reducing the maximum rates of interest that can be charged. Considering the importance of credit as an aid to economic enterprise, I request that these proposals, which will be transmitted to you shortly, be given early consideration.

One of the most pressing needs of the Philippines is develop men with the necessary technological training to supply the needs of modern industry and agriculture. There is likewise great need for men who may assume positions of responsibility in the management of business and industry. I believe that the institution which should be principally expected to supply these men is the University of the Philippines. Hence, I have urged the authorities of the University to propose plans for a reorganization of that institution with a view to raising its standards and placing it on the same level with the best institutions of its kind in the world. Pursuant to my request, the Board of Regents has been studying a plan of reforms in that institution and has employed two of the most competent educators of the United States to act as its advisers in that important task. One of the recommendations of the Board of Regents has been studying a plan of reforms in that institution and has employed two of the most competent educators of the United States to act as its advisers in that important task. One of the recommendations of the Board of Regents is the transfer of the University of the Philippines to a new site. This is considered essential in order that University students may be brought under a more strict and wholesome supervision and control, and the proper spirit and atmosphere may be created on the University campus. Moreover, the physical plant of the University must be enlarged and improved, and suitable laboratories provided, if it is to be enabled to grant adequate professional training, specially in science, demanded by present-day progress. Besides being inconveniently located, the actual site of the University is too small to permit of these improvements. The transfer of the College of Medicine will require the construction of a modern hospital on the new site. At any rate, the Philippine General Hospital is no longer adequate to supply the needs of the growing population of Manila, particularly for free patients, and a new hospital is instantly necessary. This transfer of the University will require a considerable outlay, but I believe that the expenditure will be more than justified if we succeed in our efforts to capacitate that institution to supply the Commonwealth with properly trained professional men, business executives, economists, and scientists. Once reorganized and its standards raised, the University of the Philippines would set a mark for private universities to emulate. Fortunately, the present physical plant of the University will not be wasted. The Government is in dire need of buildings to house several offices and the present buildings of the University can be made adequate for that purpose. It would be highly desirable for the National Assembly to act upon the proposed transfer of the University of the Philippines at this session, so that the Government may consider the availability of the buildings of the University in framing its program of construction for government offices.

Heretofore, the municipal and city governments have had, by law, the responsibility of maintaining all elementary instruction. But in order that the purpose of the Constitution may be accomplished, it has been necessary for the National Government to assume the burden of supporting the primary schools, leaving to the local governments only the maintenance of intermediate instruction. As regards secondary instruction, I recommend that provincial governments be authorized to spend their funds only for vocational high schools and not for academic high schools, which, beginning with the school year 1940-1941, should be maintained on a self-supporting basis. Vocational high schools, however, should continue to receive adequate national aid.

To properly cope with the problem of public health and sanitation, I desire to recommend the establishment of a Department of Public Health. This is necessary for a more effective coordination of public health administration, the better to insure the protection and care of the health of our people, particularly those in early age. Furthermore, it is desirable that the Department of Public Instruction be placed in a position to devote itself exclusively to the far-reaching problems of education and to give greater impetus to the up building of the character and physique of our youth. The new Department of Public Health should be given administrative supervision over public sanitation, hospitals, asylums, clinics, dispensaries, and other institutions that minister to the health of the people.

In order to effect an orderly and scientific development of our agriculture and to permit the intelligent planning of agricultural production, it is essential that as soon as possible we undertake an agronomical survey of the Philippines. The Department of Agriculture and Commerce has completed the soil survey of several provinces. This work should be supplemented and accelerated. This agronomical survey has been recommended by the National Economic Council and the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs. I request that sufficient funds be appropriated to carry out this survey, which should indicate to the Government and to the people the crops adapted to different sections of the country.

Another recommendation of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs is the establishment of agricultural experiment and extension stations. This is a project which should merit our immediate consideration, if we wish to stimulate agricultural enterprises and modernize agricultural methods. I recommend the repeal of the present law requiring a 5 per cent contribution by provinces and municipalities to the local agricultural fund. Better results could be obtained by a consolidation of these experiment and extension stations in typical areas than by dispersing them, as at present, and often duplicating the experiments, in each province. I recommend an appropriation from the proceeds of the excise taxes of a sufficient amount to cover the expenses for the establishment and operation of these stations in such localities as may be determined by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. Another reason which induces me to make this recommendation is the fact that the finances of local governments are inadequate to support this service and that they cannot continue setting aside such a large portion of their revenues for these stations without jeopardizing other activities imperatively needed by local communities.

Modern industry and agriculture can not be efficiently operated without the aid of scientific research. This is particularly true in the Philippines where technological science of common knowledge is so far behind other countries. We have secured the advice of a renowned scientist to assist the Government in the establishment of an institution for scientific research. It should serve not only the Government but also private industry and agriculture. I shall submit to the National Assembly appropriate recommendations on this subject as soon as the studies of the National Economic Council and the Department of Agriculture and Commerce are completed.

The National Economic Council has recommended the establishment of an Institute of Nutrition. In order to protect the health and build up the physique of our masses such an institution is necessary. The people need to be educated on the nutritive value of different food products. There are many wholesome and nutritious articles that are consumed in some sections of the country which are unknown in others. It is also necessary to formulate dietary programs scientifically balanced which shall be within the reach of the people of the most modest means. Once the Institute completes its study of the different food products that could be produced abundantly and cheaply in the Philippines, the Department of Agriculture and Commerce could conduct a campaign for the production of national interests, has agreed with our Government that political refugees who desire to come to the Philippines shall not be given visas by American consuls without the previous approval of our Government. We owe it largely to His Excellency, the United States High Commissioner, that the State Department was fully appraised of the situation and that this administrative policy was adopted.

At the last session of the First National Assembly I had occasion to express publicly our indebtedness to High Commissioner McNutt for his unstinted cooperation with our Government. I reiterate those sentiments now. It is, therefore, with a sense of great loss for our people and for me that I have heard of his contemplated return to the United States. If he should find it necessary to resign his present post, we would be deprived of a true friend and a most able collaborator, one whom we need at this most critical period and who would be very hard to replace. But if he must leave us, we wish him to know that he takes with him our affection and gratitude, and our prayer that he may succeed in his future undertakings.

To protect the interests of our people and to repair an injustice done to certain races by existing legislation, we should enact a new immigration law. Under our present immigration law passed by the Congress of the United States, Chinese, Indians, and some other Orientals may not be admitted into the Philippines. Ours is an oriental country, and we are an oriental people. We belong to the same racial stock as some of those excluded by our laws. So long as other foreigners are allowed to immigrate to the Philippines, we should admit, under the same terms and conditions, those coming from oriental countries. To avoid, however, a large influx of immigrants from any one country, we should establish a quota that will be the same for all countries.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly, the world in which we live today is an entirely different world from that which we knew only a few years ago. Whereas before the World War, democracy was gaining ground everywhere, mankind is now divided into two great camps—those who believe in democracy and those who feel contempt for it as a completely discredited system of government. By our political education, by our convictions and by our inclinations, we are a democracy. We have established a democratic system of government and the perpetuation of this system will depend upon our ability to convince our people that democracy can be freed from those vices which have destroyed it in some countries, and that it can be made as efficient as any other system of government known to man. It behooves us; therefore, to prove that through a wise use of democratic processes, the welfare and the safety of the people can be promoted, thus contributing our share to the preservation of democracy in the world.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Calling of Bids for Exploration and Development of Petroleum and Gas Deposits and Rejection of Bid of Standard-Vacuum Oil Company, February 2, 1939 MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

CALLING OF BIDS FOR EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF PETROLEUM AND GAS DEPOSITS AND REJECTION OF BID OF STANDARD-VACUUM OIL COMPANY

[February 2, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Commonwealth Act No. 351, approved on August 22, 1938, authorized and directed the President of the Philippines to call for bids, upon adequate advertisement, for the exploration, exploitation and development, as independent contractors, of petroleum and gas deposits in such public and private lands in the Philippines as may be determined by him, upon such terms, conditions, and specifications as may be deemed by the President most advantageous to the Government; and upon the result thereof, to enter into and execute such agreement or agreements as may be necessary with the successful bidder or bidders.

Conformably to the provisions of the aforesaid Act, a call for bids was issued for the furnishing of all materials, labor and plant required for the prospecting, exploitation and development of the gas and petroleum-bearing properties and resources of the Commonwealth of the Philippines and the processing and treatment of the gas oil so produced. A copy of the call, the Instructions to Bidders, and the General Conditions and Specifications are hereto attached as Appendices "A", "B", and "C". On the date set for the opening of the bids, that is, on December 1, 1938, only one bidder appeared, the Standard-Vacuum Oil Company, who presented a bid in terms as appear in attached Appendix "D".

After a careful examination and study of the bid of the Standard-Vacuum Oil Company, I decided that the same was unsatisfactory in that it contained radical and material departures from the proposal embodied in the call for bids and in the general conditions and specifications. Furthermore, I thought that section 38 thereof might defeat the principal purpose behind the enactment of Commonwealth Act No. 351, to wit, to determine as early as practicable if oil and gas resources exist in the Philippines in commercial quantities. I, therefore, rejected the bid of the Standard-Vacuum Oil Company.

I desire to inform you, however, that I have to-day given instructions to the National Development Company to take the necessary steps so that preliminary works of exploration may be undertaken either by itself, or by a subsidiary corporation controlled by it, in order to ascertain whether or not oil and gas resources exist in the Philippines in commercial quantities.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on National Budget for Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1940, February 7, 1939

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On National Budget for Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1940

[Released on February 7, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution, I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration the National Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

This budget consists of two main parts: Part I covers the General Fund proper; Part II deals with the Coconut Oil Excise Tax Fund. Although the condition and operation of the Coconut Oil Excise Tax Fund has, heretofore, been shown in the Comparative Financial Statement of the Budget separately from the General Fund proper, the appropriations chargeable to both funds were not segregated. Now, the items corresponding to both income and expenditures of the Coconut Oil Excise Tax Fund are budgeted separately from those of the General Fund proper. This is done to show clearly and readily not only the exact condition of the Coconut Oil Excise Tax Fund but also the purposes for which it is being spent.

GENERAL FUND (proper)

As I anticipated in my budget message of February 7, 1938, the revenue collections accruing to the General Fund proper of the National Government substantially declined, from P96,245,963.12 in 1937 to P88,359,951.42 in 1938, a difference of P7,893,981.70. Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Finance, the total ordinary Income for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, is estimated at P85,500,500, which is P2,850,431.42 lower than the actual collections realized in 1938 and slightly less than the total estimated income for the calendar year 1939. The decrease in the estimated income is due largely to prevailing business conditions and the expected fall in the collections from import duties and income taxes, and partly to the nonrecurring items of income, such as the refund of the government contributions to the Teachers' Pension and Disability Retirement Fund, and the transfers from the special funds of the Manila Harbor Board and the Philippine Sugar Administration, which amount to a total of P1,138,412.47. The economic factors which caused the reduction of revenue collections in 1938 still exist, and there is as yet no definite indication of improvement in the near future.

The Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, proposes a total appropriation from the General Fund proper of P83,406,930 for the ordinary expenses of the National Government. This amount is P46,034.79 less than the total authorized appropriation for the same purposes for the year 1939, which is P83,432,964.79. Despite the increase of P1,010,420 in the appropriation for the maintenance of the Philippine Constabulary, the proposed total appropriations are less than those of the preceding year and leaves an unappropriated balance between ordinary income and ordinary expenditures of P2,093,570. To accomplish this result, it is necessary to impose forced savings on the appropriations of all departments in the aggregate amount of P2,115,865. Moreover, in order to balance the budget, it has been found necessary to defer appropriations for the improvement and expansion of existing public services, including some for which appropriations were authorized in the General Appropriation Act for the current year and in other laws. I am listing hereunder the services for which no appropriations are provided with the amounts that were appropriated for the current year and those that are needed for the ensuing fiscal year:

PURPOSE	Amount authorized for 1939

(1) For the opening of new primary schools; for maintaining the existing: primary classes in Manila and Baguio; and for aiding municipal districts for the maintenance of intermediate classes where local funds are deficient	P1,000,000.00

Pursuant to the provisions of Commonwealth Act No. 343, the Philippine Constabulary has been separated from the Philippine Army, and to place the former in a condition adequately to maintain internal peace and order, I have authorized an increase of the Constabulary force to its regular strength before the Army was organized. As already stated, this required an additional outlay of P1,010,420 which I am recommending in the Budget. Moreover, when the national defense program requiring a yearly appropriation of P16,000,000 for a period of ten years was formulated, it was not contemplated to continue the Philippine Constabulary as a permanent division of the Army; the intention was that the function of the Constabulary as a police force would be assumed by the projected National Police Force. As the organization of a National Police Force has not been effectuated and the National Assembly has by law authorized the reestablishment of the Philippine Constabulary as an independent organization, it cannot be expected that our national defense program can be carried out as originally planned if the Philippine Army is to be required to continue supporting the Constabulary with its appropriations. Accordingly, while in the present budget it is proposed that a substantial portion of the expenses of the Constabulary be taken from the Army, this is done upon the condition that the amount so spent shall be refunded to the Army when funds are available.

With regard to the maintenance of primary schools in chartered cities, municipalities and municipal districts, and the aid to municipal districts for the maintenance of intermediate schools in accordance with the provisions of Commonwealth Act No. 381, I wish to invite your attention to the fact that due to lack of definite and adequate information on the exact amount needed, the sum of P15,000,000 provided in the budget is only a tentative estimate of what is believed necessary for continuing the operation of the classes that now exist. The necessary data are presently being gathered to ascertain the exact amount that will be required. Any amount that may be needed in excess of P15,000,000, including whatever may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of Commonwealth Act No. 381 with respect to the cities of Manila and Baguio, for the opening of new classes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for aiding municipal districts in the maintenance of intermediate classes, will have to depend on the approval of new taxes.

Your attention is invited to the fact that only P300,000 is included in this budget to carry out the provisions of Commonwealth Act No. 359 providing for the payment of pensions to veterans of the Philippine revolutions and wars. Unless the income of the Government increases materially it will not be possible to set aside a larger amount for this purpose.

Likewise, the other items of appropriation listed above will have to be deferred until new sources of revenue are created.

The total appropriations from the General Fund proper proposed in the Budget for the next fiscal year is P84,016,930, including the items for extraordinary expenditures amounting to P610,000. These proposed expenditures are for the following purposes:

PURPOSES	Amount	Perc
1. For public education which includes the expenses for the operation and maintenance of primary, vocational, and special schools and classes, and the University of the Philippines	P22,797,890.00	27.1
2. For the national defense including a part of the expenses of	16,449,100.00	19.5

the Philippine Constabulary for maintaining internal peace and order (P3,250,000)
3. For the sinking funds and interest on the public debt of the National Government	7,999,460.00	9.52
4. For the protection of the public health, including the expenses of the Bureau of Health; the control and eradication of malaria, tuberculosis, and other diseases; the operation, maintenance, establishment, extension and improvement of hospitals and public dispensaries	5,725,630.00	6.82
5. For the operating expenses of industrial and commercial units, including those of the Bureau of Posts, the Bureau of the Treasury, and the Division of Purchase and Supply	5,256,430.00	6.26
6. For executive direction and control which includes the expenses of the Offices of the President, the Secretaries of Departments and the Resident Commissioner to the United States, the General Auditing Office, the Bureau of Civil Service, the Budget Commission, and the Philippine Sugar Administration	P5,103,070.00	6.07
7. For the administration of justice, including the expenses of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeals, the Courts of First Instance and the Justice of the Peace Courts	4,094,650.00	4.87
8. For the revenue collection services, including the expenses of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Bureau of Customs	2,545,190.00	3.03
9. For the development of agriculture, including the expenses of the Bureaus of Plant Industry, Animal Industry, and Lands	2,509,550.00	2.99
10. For the maintenance of law and order, including the expenses of the Bureau of Justice, part of the expenses of the Philippine Constabulary not included in the Army appropriation, and the expenses of the Department of the Interior for the administration of the local police forces	1,791,030.00	2.13
11. For the development of commerce, including the expenses of the Bureau of Commerce, the Bureau of Aeronautics and the Bureau of Coast and Geodetic Survey	1,695,520.00	2.02
12. For legislation (National Assembly)	1,664,590.00	1.98
13. For the conservation and utilization of the natural resources, including the expenses of the Bureau of Forestry and the Bureau of Mines	1,245,240.00	1.48
14. For the maintenance of prisoners under the Bureau of Prisons and other correctional institutions	1,083,630.00	1.29
15. For other purposes, including the expenses of the Bureau of Public Works, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Court of Industrial Relations; those for the development and promotion of arts and sciences, the regulation of public services, public charity, protection and relief from public calamities, and publicity	4,054,950.00	4.83
Total	P84,016,930.00	100.

THE SURPLUS

During the year 1938 the total ordinary income exceeded the total ordinary expenditures by P12,410,395.21. Notwithstanding this excess, however, the unappropriated surplus declined from P60,765,168.87 at the end of the year 1937 to P39,375,132.62 at the end of the year 1938, because of large appropriations and expenditures for extraordinary purposes.

The construction of public buildings in the Government Center authorized by Act No. 3597 is now in progress with the erection of the buildings for the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and the Department of Finance. This will be followed by the construction of the Justice Building and the Capitol. To carry on the development of the Government Center as planned, the unreleased balance of the Government Center Fund, which amounts to P9,995,478.56, has been segregated from the unappropriated surplus.

Similarly, the amount of P1,221,487.68 advanced to the Irrigation Fund under Act No. 2152 has been segregated from the unappropriated surplus.

During the period from January 1 to June 30, 1939, the estimated ordinary income will exceed the estimated ordinary expenditures by P1,166,930, so that, after making the adjustments resulting from the segregation of the Government Center Fund and the Irrigation Fund, and after deducting the authorized appropriations for extraordinary expenditures for the same period, amounting to P705,000, the unappropriated surplus will be further reduced to P28,620,096.38.

When the unappropriated balance of P2,093,570, which is expected to result from the operation of the General Fund proper during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, is added to the above-mentioned unappropriated surplus, and after deducting therefrom the proposed appropriations for extraordinary expenditures, which amount to a total of P610,000, there will be an estimated unappropriated surplus in the fund of P30,103,666.38 at the end of the said period.

I wish to emphasize again the necessity of leaving a reasonable surplus in the National Treasury to take care of emergencies, especially at this time when conditions affecting our national economy both within our country and abroad are in a state of uncertainty. Any attempt to further deplete the surplus for other than the most urgent and vital public needs would be extremely inadvisable.

THE COCONUT OIL EXCISE TAX FUND

At the close of the year 1937, there was a cash surplus in this fund of P82,669,860.82. The total amount of collections and accrued interest credited to the Philippine Treasury during the year 1938 amounted to P20,486,581.12. Therefore, the total amount available in this fund for 1938 amounted to P103,156,441.94. The expenditures during the same year reached a total of P31,869,994.70, thus leaving an unexpended cash balance of P71,286,447.24 at the end thereof. However, the total outstanding balances of authorized appropriations made against the fund on the said date was P110,736,146.71, which is P39,449,699.47 greater than the available balance in the fund. No actual deficit was, however, incurred because I authorized the release of only a total of P44,678,406.71, under the authority vested in the President to suspend the expenditure of any part or all of the appropriations authorized by Commonwealth Act Nos. 304, 330, 347, 369, and 403. No part of the sum of P11,000,000 appropriated by Commonwealth Act No. 332 has so far been released as the National Abaca and Other Fiber Corporation is still under process of organization. After deducting the sum of P44,678,406.71 that has been released from the unexpended cash balance of P71,286,447.24, there was a net balance available for release of P26,608,040.53 at the end of the year 1938.

A total income of P21,513,119.50 is expected to accrue to the Philippine Treasury from the excise tax on coconut oil during the six months ending June 30, 1939. This amount represents estimated payments during this period, including delayed transfers of collections made during the later part of 1938. A total of P48,121,160.03 will, therefore, be available for release during the said period.

It is estimated that the income of the fund during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, will amount to P25,200,000. The appropriations proposed in the accompanying budget from this fund amount to a total of P509,690 and are limited to purposes that are related to economic adjustment. After deducting from this fund all the authorized appropriations chargeable to the same, there will remain only an unappropriated surplus of P6,190,760.03 on June 30, 1940. Obviously, the present condition of the Coconut Oil Excise Tax Fund would not permit further appropriations therefrom, especially if it is considered that the amounts shown as estimated income for 1939 and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, will not become available for expenditure until they are actually credited to the Philippine Treasury.

The budget presented to you is balanced and shows that the condition of the finances of the Commonwealth Government is sound. To maintain this position, it has been necessary to effect substantial economies in expenditures and to limit salary increases as well as the creation of new positions to only those found to be absolutely necessary to insure the efficient operation of the Government.

Very respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Appropriation to Cover Expenses of the Osmeña Delegation Sent to the United States, February 8, 1939

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

APPROPRIATION TO COVER EXPENSES OF THE OSMEÑA DELEGATION SENT TO THE UNITED STATES

[February 8, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my message dated January 24, 1939, I informed you that I have sent the Honorable Sergio Osmeña, Vice-President of the Philippines, as my special representative to Washington, D. C, to conduct, with the cooperation of the Resident Commissioner, the necessary negotiations with the Government of the United States with a view to securing the approval of legislation to effectuate the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs at an early date.

The expenses of the trip to the United States of Vice-President Osmeña and the personnel accompanying him were taken partly from the fund appropriated under Commonwealth Act No. 191. The Commissioner of the Budget has reported to me, however, that at present there is no balance left of the amount so appropriated, since most of it was used to defray the expenses of the Filipino members of the Joint Preparatory Committee and of the delegation headed by the President that went to the United States in 1937.

I, therefore, recommend the enactment of a law appropriating the sum of P150,000 to cover the necessary expenses of the Osmeña delegation and of other delegations that may hereafter be sent to the United States to bring to a successful termination the present negotiations between the United States and the Philippines for the adjustment of the future economic and trade relations between the two countries. The proposed appropriation may be taken from the unencumbered surplus of the General Fund proper.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on solutions of problems confronting the Hemp and Coconut Industries,
February 18, 1939

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS CONFRONTING THE HEMP AND COCONUT INDUSTRIES

[Read at the convention of coconut and hemp producers held in Manila on February 18, 1939]

Gentlemen of the Convention:

I desire to extend to you my warmest greetings and to wish you success in your deliberations.

The coconut and hemp industries are two of the most important industries of the Philippines, both from the viewpoint of the number of the people depending on these industries and of their relative importance in our national economy. These two industries are now being operated on a competitive basis, enjoying no privileges nor preferences. They are vital to the economy of our country, considering that our other major industries might be adversely affected when the preferences now accorded to them are either curtailed or withdrawn.

The coconut and hemp industries are in a depressed condition. The present economic situation of producers deserves our deepest concern. In many areas producing coconut or hemp, the situation is rapidly approaching the point where it is no longer profitable to continue production.

The practical problems facing the coconut and hemp producers are low prices and high production costs. The latter is particularly true with regard to hemp production in abaca-producing provinces other than Davao. With regard to prices, these are determined by factors which are beyond the power of the Government or the industries themselves to control, inasmuch as world prices for these commodities are influenced wholly by the laws of supply and demand, and by the competition offered by substitute articles. There is unfortunately an abundance of vegetable and other oils competing with coconut oil, and there is likewise an abundance of fibers competing with hemp. When prices of coconut oil and hemp rise above certain levels, as compared with prices of competing commodities, manufacturers and users of coconut products and hemp find it more advantageous to use the substitute articles, thereby forcing coconut and hemp prices down to the competitive level. This situation necessarily establishes a relationship between the prices of our commodities and those of competing articles, except for a few special uses which require only a limited amount of coconut and hemp products.

While the Government realizes these facts, there is a field in relation to prices and marketing which might be possible for the Government to regulate in order to safeguard the interests of producers. The National Economic Council and other agencies of the Government are, at present, making a study to determine the degree by which prices for coconut products and hemp in the Philippines are being depressed because of speculative activities of dealers and brokers of these commodities in the open markets of the world. That study is now well under way and I expect them to reach definite conclusions in the near future. Proposals have been made for the establishment of a single sales agency for these products so as to eliminate objectionable speculative transactions affecting them. The question of excessive transportation rates, particularly in the case of hemp, is also being considered. When these investigations are completed, the Government will take such action as may be necessary in the interest of our producers.

Another line of action that offers some possibility of ameliorating the situation of producers is the improvement of the quality of the products and the introduction of greater efficiency in production. Success in this respect will reduce production costs and also increase, or perhaps enlarge, the indispensability of coconut and hemp for certain specific uses. This field is entirely within our control; and we can effect improvement through our own initiative and effort. The Government will do everything within its power to bring to producers the assistance of scientific agriculture and scientific research, as well as credit facilities, which will permit them to improve the quality and yield of their products.

I have refrained from authorizing the organization of the National Abacá and Other Fiber Corporation until the studies and investigations now being made should reveal the practical steps that ought to be taken not only to remedy some of the problems facing the hemp industry but also to lay out a specific program of activities for the corporation. The experience of other countries that have attempted to manipulate world prices through monopolies or cartels, should teach us to be cautious and extremely careful in attempting to solve the problems involving these two industries through direct government intervention.

I wish to assure the members of the convention, however, that no effort will be spared by the Government to give to these two industries every assistance they deserve. I am prepared to recommend to the Assembly the appropriation of the necessary funds to aid these industries, upon the formulation of a workable plan which would insure a substantial and permanent benefit to producers.

I wish to assure you of my keen interest in your deliberations. I hope that the result of your studies will throw more light upon your problems, and that you will offer to the Government practical suggestions which may help us in reaching definite conclusions on how to safeguard your interests and promote your welfare best.

Message of President Quezon on Appropriation of Five Hundred Thousand Pesos for Increasing the services of the Departments of the Interior and of Justice devoted to the maintenance of Peace and Order

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On Appropriation of Five Hundred Thousand Pesos for Increasing the Services of the Departments of the Interior and of Justice devoted to the Maintenance of Peace and Order

[Released on March 3, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Recent events in the provinces of Pampanga, Bulacan, and Nueva Ecija clearly indicate that the agrarian question is assuming such a serious proportion that it may require the use of force by the Government to protect the rights of the parties involved and to prevent any disturbance of peace and order. It is not necessary at this time to place the blame on any particular social group. It is sufficient to take cognizance of certain facts which undoubtedly contribute to the seriousness of the situation now prevailing in these provinces of Central Luzon. I have reference to the conflicts or controversies which arise between landowners and their tenants involving violations of the Rice Tenancy Law, which are aggravated by the activities of irresponsible labor leaders who advise their followers to take the law into their own hands.

The first step that I deem necessary to meet the situation is to provide the Department of Justice with adequate means by which it may detect violations of the Rice Tenancy Law and bring the guilty parties before the courts of justice. It is, likewise, important to provide the Department of the Interior with the necessary Constabulary force with which to prevent lawlessness and suppress violence. The situation calls for immediate action. Both the landowners, on the one hand, and the laborers and their leaders, on the other, should be made to realize that the Government is determined to settle their controversies with fairness to both parties, and to exact respect for the law by the use of force, if necessary. It is in this manner alone that we may prevent the shedding of more blood and uphold the authority of the Government.

In order to enable the Government to carry out the above objectives. I request that an appropriation of P500,000.00 be immediately approved by the National Assembly, to be spent at the discretion of the President for the purpose of augmenting or increasing the services of the Departments of Justice and the Interior devoted to the detection and prosecution of violators of the law and the maintenance of peace and order.

The public interest so requiring. I hereby certify, pursuant to the provisions of Article VI, Section 12, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on Revision and Codification of Tax Laws

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On Revision and Codification of Tax Laws

[Released on March 7, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my message to the National Assembly dated January 24, 1938, I called your attention to the fact that our system of taxation, both national and local, is in many respects obsolete, does not distribute the tax burden equitably, and is proving, in its operation, inadequate to meet the expanding needs of the Government. I, therefore, urged a revision of the whole tax structure, in order to meet these increasing expenditures, to distribute the tax burden more nearly on the basis of ability to pay, and to facilitate the achievement of essential social objectives.

To carry out this purpose, I created a Tax Commission on August 23, 1938, composed of competent men representing not only the Executive and Legislative branches of the Government, but also private business. The Commission was instructed to effect a revision of the entire tax system, with a view to establishing an integrated and coordinated system which may be satisfactory as regards fiscal productivity, administrative feasibility, theoretical justice, and be better adapted to the political, economic and social conditions of the Philippines. I also asked the Commission to consider the need of promoting a sound and equitable redistribution of wealth.

The Tax Commission has completed the revision of the National Internal Revenue tax system, and I now transmit to you its report and recommendations. The Commission proposes a revision and codification of the internal-revenue laws in the form of a bill entitled "An Act to Revise, Amend, and Codify the Internal Revenue Laws of the Philippines". The Commission has advised me that in future reports it will deal with local taxation and the needed changes in respect to the tariff and navigation laws.

NECESSITY OF REVISING THE PRESENT REVENUE TAX SYSTEM

For many years I have realized that the existing revenue laws of the Philippines needed revision, for the reason that since the first internal revenue law was enacted in the year 1904, no scientific study has been attempted to adjust them to our changing economic and social conditions. In fact, what we have today is a hodgepodge of various revenue acts enacted piecemeal by the lawmaking body without regard to the paying ability of the taxpayer or the effects of each tax upon the different economic classes of the nation. During the last decade economists and statesmen the world over have devoted much time to the study of the science of public finance; new concepts of justice in taxation have been evolved; new sources of revenue have been tapped; taxation has been given a new meaning and an additional social utility; notable improvements have been made in the machinery of collecting taxes; and many nations have endeavored to perfect their own system of balancing income and expenditures.

In the Philippines, agriculture has made material progress; commerce and industry have been given impetus; the wealth and income of the nation have materially increased and their distribution has been altered; and a new political structure has been erected to meet our forthcoming responsibilities as a sovereign state. But our tax machinery has remained unchanged. It is out of line with modern economic concepts; it is not responsive to the expanding fiscal requirements of the Government; it fails to distribute the tax burden in proportion to the ability and resources of the different economic classes of the people; and its administrative features are not abreast with the standards set by progressive nations.

Moreover, the present system of taxation is a source of a grave injustice. A cursory examination of our tax laws shows that a majority of the existing internal revenue taxes are paid by the consumer; hence, they weigh heavily upon the masses of the people and too lightly upon those better able to pay them. The measure recommended by the Tax Commission will remove this inequality.

PRINCIPAL CHANGES IN REVENUE LAWS RECOMMENDED

The Commission has revised the entire system of revenue legislation and has recommended numerous changes, of which the most important are the following:

Income Tax

In line with the principle of placing greater emphasis on ability to pay, the income tax has been thoroughly remodeled, the base of the tax materially broadened, the rates moderately increased, deductions and credits restricted, and opportunities for avoidance and evasion reduced.

Many persons are now exempt from the income tax although they possess a certain degree of taxpaying ability, largely because of the high personal exemptions granted to them. Out of a population of over sixteen million, only 8,860 individuals paid an income tax during the year 1937. The proposed changes will materially increase the number subject to tax.

Estate, Inheritance, and Gift Taxes

In pursuance of the policy of avoiding- the accumulation of enormous wealth in a few hands and to secure a more equitable redistribution of wealth, the present inheritance tax is supplemented by an estate tax based on the entire net estate at death, as well as by a gift tax which is imposed in order to prevent the avoidance of the estate and inheritance taxes through gifts inter vivos.

Luxury Taxes

With a view to producing a balanced tax system which will distribute tax burdens more equitably on the basis of ability to pay, increased taxes are recommended upon luxuries of widespread consumption, such as beer, liquors, cigarettes, and amusements. Certain luxury goods are proposed to be withdrawn from the operation of the sales tax and are proposed to be subjected to tax at higher rates, as follows: On original sales of jewelry, perfumes, and toilet articles, there is sought to be imposed a tax of 10 per cent; on automobiles, sporting goods, and refrigerators, 5 per cent; and on automobile parts, accessories of beauty parlor equipment, musical instruments, etc., 3 per cent.

Tax on Business, Sales and Occupation

The sales tax is retained, in part, but its objectionable features are minimized. For the purpose of reducing as far as possible the burden of tax on people of small means the exemption of small merchants whose gross sales do not exceed P200 a quarter is restored, irrespective of the kind of goods sold and whether the sale is made inside or outside of a public market. Sales at retail of domestic food products regardless of value in the public markets continue to be entirely exempt from the sales tax.

The cumulative effects of the sales tax are also narrowed by the withdrawal from its scope of specified luxury goods on which the tax is increased as above stated, as well as by the exemption of certain agricultural products, like sugar, hemp, copra and rice, from its operation and the substitution therefor of a single, uniform commodity tax at H per cent. The primary purpose of this proposal is to do away with the rather flagrant inequalities in the operation of the present law, as applied to said articles, because it discriminates so unfairly in operation against the small producers distant from the market whose product passes through the hands of several middlemen, and in favor of large producers who are simultaneously exporters and, therefore, are entirely exempt from the sales tax.

There is likewise proposed a compensating tax for all persons other than merchants or manufacturers who receive directly goods from outside of the Philippines. This is intended to prevent the growing avoidance or evasion of the tax through mail orders and indent purchases and to prevent unfair competition with domestic merchants.

ADDITIONAL REMEDIES SECURED TO TAXPAYER

Under the present law, a taxpayer cannot recover a tax illegally or erroneously collected from him unless the tax was paid under protest. It is now proposed to permit the recovery of taxes illegally or erroneously collected notwithstanding the absence of protest against their payment. The new policy is that the Government should not, at the expense of the taxpayer, retain what is not legally due it. The purpose of the change is to give full justice to the taxpayer and to encourage prompt and voluntary payment of taxes. The only limitation is that the claim for refund or recovery of the tax be filed within two years from the date of its payment.

Moreover, in the proposed bill the Collector of Internal Revenue is required to verify the return of a taxpayer within five years from the date the return is filed, otherwise no assessment for the year covered by the return can be legally made against the taxpayer, except in cases where the return filed was false or fraudulent. This proposal is in accord with the provisions of the Bookkeeping Law and is designed to secure the taxpayer against unreasonable investigations after the lapse of five years following the filing of his return.

ESTIMATED EFFECTS OF TAX PROPOSALS—SHARE OF LOCAL GOVERNMENTS IN INCREASED COLLECTIONS

While it is difficult to make an accurate estimate of the effects of the various tax proposals embodied in the attached bill, it has been computed that, if the proposed bill is enacted into law, for the two fiscal years immediately ahead, assuming the continuance during that period of business conditions substantially on the level of 1938, the increased yield will amount to approximately P10,000,000 and P15,000,000, respectively.

In the search for new sources of revenue, the needs of the provincial and municipal governments have been taken into account along with those of the National Government. It is proposed to abolish the obsolete limitation upon the share of internal revenue taxes pertaining to provincial and municipal governments to the amount provided in 1909, and give them a percentage of the revenue which will be double the amounts allotted them under existing law. Likewise it is proposed to grant provincial and municipal governments a share in the income and inheritance taxes collected, thereby stimulating their interest in the collection of these taxes. Moreover, it is proposed to turn over to the local governments the taxes on agricultural products which are intended to supplement the property taxes which now pertain to them exclusively. Assuming that business conditions gradually improve for several years and that the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs and the proposals embodied in the attached bill are adopted this year, the ultimate result, according to the best estimates available at present, would be an increase in total collections over 1938 by approximately P20,000,000. About half of this increase will accrue to local governments and the other half to the National Government.

RECOMMENDATIONS

After studying the report and recommendations of the Tax Commission, I am convinced that the measure proposed by the Commission is reasonably adequate to meet the increasing needs of the Government; that the burdens of taxation will be distributed more equitably among the different economic classes of the nation, that is, each citizen will contribute his part in the maintenance of the Government in proportion to his ability or resources; that many of the defects extant in the present tax system will be corrected; and that the proposed legislation will set up an administrative tax machinery which will secure a more just and effective administration of the revenue laws. The bill proposed by the Tax Commission has my approval.

The members of the Tax Commission have devoted long and patient study to the matters which are now submitted to you. The thoroughness with which they have effected their work is worthy of the highest commendation. They have performed a task of the greatest importance to our country, not only conscientiously, but with distinct statesmanship and ability. The principles underlying their proposals are in accord with the basic policies of my administration. I consider it my duty to express to the chairman and members of the Tax Commission the acknowledgment of the Government and my own for the excellent service they have rendered. This recognition I also desire to extend to the members of the technical staff who assisted the Tax Commission in its studies and deliberations.

It is my confident expectation that the National Assembly will give careful consideration to the Report of the Tax Commission, and I earnestly recommend that the necessary legislation be enacted before the close of the present session in line with the findings and recommendations of the report. This is necessary to raise the needed revenues and to establish justice in our tax system. I am convinced that with the approval of the proposed tax code, it will not be necessary for the Government to amend our tax laws for at least ten years, unless economic and social conditions should materially change in the meantime. It is meet and proper to give this assurance to business elements in order that they may be able to plan their operations accordingly. Frequent changes in tax laws create a condition of uncertainty in business which is harmful to the progress of the community.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Appropriations for the Second Regular Election of members of National Assembly and the plebiscite on Woman Suffrage, March 31, 1939

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE SECOND REGULAR ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY AND THE PLEBISCITE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE

[March 31, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend that a law be enacted appropriating the sum of P2,740,000, of which P2,700,000 is intended to cover the expenses for the second regular election of the members of the National Assembly held on November 8, 1938, and P40,000 to cover the unpaid expenses for the plebiscite on the question of woman suffrage held on April 30, 1937.

Under the provisions of section 19(a) of Commonwealth Act No. 357, known as the Election Code, the expenses of an election shall be charged against the branch of the Government for which the election was held. As the expenses for the election of the members of the National Assembly above mentioned, estimated to be P2,700,000, were advanced by the Department of the Interior and by the local governments, it is necessary that the National Government should reimburse such advances.

It appears that no more funds are available from the amount appropriated to cover the expenses for the plebiscite on the question of woman suffrage held on April 30, 1937. It is estimated that the amount of P40,000 more will be needed to pay all pending bills chargeable against the same.

I, therefore, urge that the National Assembly approve the proposed appropriations in order to liquidate the subsisting liabilities of the National Government in this regard.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Important and Urgent Public Improvements, May 12, 1939 MESSAGE

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

IMPORTANT AND URGENT PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS

[May 12, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In your last regular session, you approved Common wealth Act No. 330, appropriating the sum of P96,351,300 for carrying out a program of public works that is expected to be completed within a period of four years. A careful reexamination of the various projects therein included has revealed that certain items thereof can be suspended without prejudice to the country for the time being, and the funds appropriated therefor utilized for other projects of greater importance, which are more urgently needed.

I have, therefore, ordered the suspension of certain projects in accordance with the authority granted to me by law. The total appropriation authorized for these projects amounts to about P5,680,000, and I recommend that an equal amount be appropriated for public works, including allotments to be expended for the construction of important and urgent public improvements, particularly school buildings, and the drilling of artesian wells.

I also recommend that from the Port Works Fund the sum of P2,500,000 be appropriated, P955,000 for the Manila North Harbor, and the rest for other national as well as some municipal ports. A substantial amount should be devoted for the construction and improvement of lighthouses and other aids to navigation.

To keep the country abreast with the progress of aviation, provision should be made for the construction and improvement of national airports and landing fields.

Every year we see sections of the country devastated by Hoods; houses are carried away; crops are damaged or destroyed; livestock and even human beings are killed; and vast public improvements, including railroad lines, high ways and bridges, and private property are damaged. To control the rivers that cause such destruction of human lives and property and thereby prevent, or at least minimize, the damage and losses occasioned by floods, necessary appropriations should be provided for the completion of projects for flood control works the construction of which has been started, and for the improvement of those that have already been completed. Likewise, provision should be made for the construction, repair, improvement, and extension of sea protection works.

I am sending to you herewith a list of the projects that the Department of Public Works and Communications has recommended to be undertaken. I recommend this program of public works to your early and favorable consideration.

For the purposes of the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the necessary legislation.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on urgent public needs requiring a Supplementary Appropriation Bill, May 15, 1939

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

URGENT PUBLIC NEEDS REQUIRING A SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION BILL

[May 15, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my budget message of February 7, 1939, I listed a number of important public needs for which appropriations could not be provided in the National Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, due to lack of available funds. Inasmuch as the enactment of the revised National Internal Revenue Law is now practically certain, I am submitting to you herewith a list of the most urgent and vital of the said public needs and I earnestly recommend the approval of the necessary legislation that would appropriate the funds that are required therefor, including the amount needed for reinforcing the personnel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue which will be required to meet the increase activities incident to the enforcement of the law above referred to.

It is estimated that the National Government will realize an additional income of P2,500,000 during the first year of operation of the revised National Internal Revenue Law. The attached list contemplates a total appropriation of P3,548,815, which exceeds the said additional income by P1,048,815. The latter amount will have to be taken from the excess, amounting to P2,049,355, of the total estimated ordinary income for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, as shown in the Budget, over the appropriations provided in the General Appropriation Bill and other authorized expenditures for the said fiscal year, which are chargeable against the current ordinary income. The net excess of the estimated ordinary income over the estimated ordinary expenditures for the incoming fiscal year will, therefore, be reduced to P1,000,538.

The Bureau of Customs needs the services of at least two assistant medical officers for the proper inspection of the sanitary condition of interisland vessels. Its force of inspectors of hulls and boilers also needs to be increased in order that the supervision over the seaworthiness of the said vessels could be made more effective.

The services of a radiologist are needed by the Bureau of Prisons hospital which has been provided with an X-ray apparatus.

The Weather Bureau is not as yet provided with appropriate apparatus and personnel for the observation of seismic conditions in the different sections of the country. It also needs the services of two additional telephone clerks that could transmit at all times to interested parties information regarding the condition of the weather. The necessary appropriations for these purposes are provided in the attached list.

An item of P2,500 for additional subvention to the steamship company that can maintain a transportation service between Manila and Batanes via Calayan, with calls at Itbayat and Sabtang, should be placed at the disposal of the Department of Public Works and Communications to enable this department to provide a much needed communication and transportation facility for the inhabitants in those isolated islands.

The Bureau of Health should be given additional personal to enable it to adequately perform its duties in connection with the proper segregation and care of the lepers in a different regional treatment stations. Provision for the necessary personnel and other operating expenses of the Central Luzon Leprosarium for the second semester of the incoming fiscal year should also be made. The personnel of the Section of Industrial Hygiene of the Division of Sanitation, the San Lazaro Hospital, the National Psychopathic Hospital, the Southern Islands Hospital, and the Baguio Hospital are inadequate for the volume of work that they are required to perform and should be reinforced.

The Bureau of Public Welfare needs the services of an additional dietitian to adequately take care of the increased population of Welfareville.

The enlargement of the services of the Philippine General Hospital as a result of the construction of the two additional pavilions and one operating room for pay patients, a nurses' home annex, an X-ray pavilion, and a new dispensary, which are expected to be completed at about the middle of the incoming fiscal year, requires a corresponding increase in the appropriation for the operating expenses of the said hospital from January 1 to June 30, 1940.

The biggest item of appropriation proposed in the attached list is the additional outlay for the operation and maintenance of primary classes in municipalities, municipal districts and chartered cities, amounting to P2,770,000, which will be added to the sum of P15,000,000 provided for the purpose in the Budget.

The need for the organization of a Reserve Officers Training Corps in the Philippine Nautical School has long been felt. For this purpose an outlay of P11,000 is proposed.

The revenue sources from which a large part of the funds are proposed to be appropriated, new and untried as they are, cannot yet be fully depended upon for certainty as to the full realization of the estimates that have been made of their expected proceeds. Therefore, it is advisable, to keep the National Budget from becoming unbalanced, that, in authorizing the proposed appropriations, provision be made that no part thereof shall be set up in the books of the Auditor General or otherwise made available for expenditures without the previous authority of the President.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 2, section 12, Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines. I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of a Supplementary Appropriation Bill which would appropriate the necessary funds for the above-mentioned purposes.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Message of President Quezon on Proposed Constitutional Amendments, May 15, 1939

MESSAGE
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

[Delivered at the Session Hall of the National Assembly at the Legislative Building, Manila, on May 15, 1939]

Mr. Speaker, Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have come on an errand that may seem unusual; namely, to address the National Assembly on a subject which, I was informed, you will discuss in accordance with the decision reached at a caucus held by the members of this body last Saturday (June 13). I have decided to ask your leave so that I may frankly lay before you my views on the matter, for silence on my part might be misunderstood and might place me in a false light before the people.

According to my information, you have decided by an overwhelming majority of votes, to pass during this session a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution which, if approved by the Philippine electorate and subsequently by the President of the United States, would permit my reelection as President of the Philippines.

It is no secret to any one who had closely followed the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention that framed and adopted the present Constitution of the Philippines, that it was I who had conceived the idea of no reelection for the President; and it was largely because of my personal appeal to the members of the convention that the section prohibiting the reelection of the President was inserted. I had not been long in office when the talk about my reelection commenced to be heard, and I promptly gave out the statement that I would not allow myself to be induced to seek reelection. Unless my memory fails me, the first member of the National Assembly who expressed to me his opinion that I should be reelected, is the gentleman from Batangas, Honorable Eusebio Orense. I remember that I discussed the subject at length with him, and I think I was able to convince him that the matter should be dropped. From time to time, and as the occasion arose, I reiterated publicly my determination not to be a candidate for reelection.

In all candor I must say, however, that it has not been displeasing to me to learn that there is a sentiment in the country in favor of my reelection. I would not be human, if I felt otherwise. The resolutions favoring my reelection, especially when they came from nonpolitical sources, gave me the deepest satisfaction and happiness. I considered such resolutions as evidence that the people are pleased with my administration, and they served to spur me to go on and carry out the policies I had enunciated. But despite these resolutions, I remained firm in my stand that I would not allow myself to be persuaded to become a candidate to succeed myself.

But when I learned that the National Assembly was considering the question of proposing amendments to the Constitution so as to permit my reelection, I felt it my duty to weigh carefully the reasons advanced in support of the pro position. The argument, which has been frequently heard, that at present there is no other Filipino who could step in and take my place and carry on the work I have started, has made the least effect on me. Even if I were vain enough to want to think that no Filipino today could be as good a President as myself, I would not be able to close my eyes to the fact that there are many among our countrymen who possess exceptional qualifications to head our Government. I need not mention their names at this time, for I have not come here to advocate the candidacy of any one.

However, when your Speaker, who discussed this question with me recently, stated that independently of whether or not I should be reelected, he felt that the Constitution should be amended by shortening the term of office of the President from six to four years and permitting his re election—his reason being that six years are too long ‘for a bad President and too short for a good one—he created a grave doubt in my mind as to whether or not it was wise for me to attempt to oppose the consideration by the people of the question raised by the Speaker. So, I told Speaker Yulo that if the National Assembly shared his views on the subject, I would not interpose any objection to the enactment of a measure that would call for a constitutional convention for the purpose of considering this question, and such other questions as the convention might deem advisable to take up. I further told the Speaker that should a convention be called, and there was a consensus of opinion that the Constitution should be amended so as to fix the term of office of the President at four years, instead of six, and permit his reelection, I would recommend to the convention that not more than one reelection be allowed; and that, in any event, no person should be permitted to remain in office as President for more than eight consecutive years. I would also recommend, I added, that such an amendment be given a retroactive effect, so that, although I have been elected under the present Constitution, the amendment would affect my own tenure of office.

Concerning the question of my reelection, I informed Speaker Yulo that I have not changed my mind on the subject, but that if the Constitution should be amended in the manner above stated, I would give the matter further consideration, since my reelection would in that case, mean only two more years added to my present term. I let Speaker Yulo as well as Floor Leader Paredes understand clearly that under no circumstances would I be willing to serve more than eight years altogether, counting from the date of my inauguration in November, 1935.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly: I understand that have agreed among yourselves not to call a constitutional convention, but to propose the amendment by direct action of the National Assembly. Under the Constitution, you have the power and authority to do so; but it is my hope that you will still be persuaded to adopt the other method, and call a constitutional convention.

I have several reasons, which I shall presently mention, why I think you should call a convention if you are convinced that the Constitution should be amended so as to shorten the term of office of the President and permit his reelection. But if you should insist on having the National Assembly itself act upon the proposed amendment, I would deem it my duty to declare before you on this solemn occasion that even if your resolution were approved by the Philippine electorate and, subsequently, by the President of the United States, I would not permit myself to be a candidate for reelection. But, while I am reluctant to serve as President over my present term of office, yet I might be willing to serve for more than six years if the amendment to the Constitution should be adopted by a constitutional convention called for the purpose, whose delegates should have stated in their platform or certificate of candidacy that they would vote for an amendment to the Constitution reducing the term of office of the President from six to four years, and allowing one reelection. An amendment adopted in this fashion would in effect originate from the people, and I then might feel obligated to heed their command. Let me repeat, however, that in no case would I consent to hold office for more than eight years.

George Washington was as great a patriot as any ever born. He was certainly endowed with far superior qualifications to lead his people than I can ever hope to possess. Yet, he did not consider it his duty to be the head of his nation for more than eight years. That precedent is good enough for me.

Let me now give the other reasons why you should call a constitutional convention.

In my opinion, several important amendments to the Constitution should be proposed. These amendments are even more necessary than the proposed change in the term of office of the President, although I fear that, in one case at least, it would be futile to induce you to propose the amendment. I am referring to the revival of the bicameral legislature. Since it is human nature for you not to look with favor to the creation of another body which would share equally with the National Assembly the legislative powers of the Government, thus reducing by half the Assembly's present authority, I shall not attempt to tax your patience by vainly discussing the subject. It is only being fair, however, to advance you the information that, at the next convention of our party, I intend to recommend the adoption of a plank in its platform favoring a constitutional amendment to revive the senate, but making each senator elective by national suffrage, instead of by senatorial districts as before.

The other amendments to the Constitution which, I think, should be adopted must embody the following:

1. The Electoral Commission should be abolished, and the power to decide election contests affecting seats in the Legislature should be vested either in the courts of justice exclusively, or in the Legislature alone.
2. If we are to continue having a unicameral legislature, the power to try impeachments, except in the case of the members of the Supreme Court, should be vested in that court; and the power to impeach left to the National Assembly. In cases involving the members of the Supreme Court, the power to impeach should be given to the Chief Executive, while the power to try impeachments should remain with the National Assembly. Under this system, when the highest officials of one branch of the Government are impeached, the other two branches—not only one of them—would participate in determining the guilt or innocence of the parties under impeachment.

A most dangerous power is vested in the National Assembly when it is allowed to act as prosecutor and judge at the same time. This power is given to a commission of the National Assembly—the Commission on Impeachment; and the situation is not altered, although the power to try impeachments is left to that body itself, because the Commission on Impeachment is chosen by the National Assembly from among its own members.

Lastly, according to my latest information from Washington, there is some hope that Congress may approve the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs in so far as they affect the trade provisions of the Independence Act up to 1946. If the Congress should pass legislation to this effect, an amendment to the Constitution would become imperative.

Mr. Speaker, Gentlemen of the National Assembly: I hope it is not necessary for me to assure you that I am touched to the very depths of my soul by the action you have taken at your caucus last Saturday. Nothing I can say, nothing I can do, will adequately express the extent and intensity of my grateful sentiments. Whether I leave my office at the end of my term of six years, which is my expectation even as I now address you, or at the end of eight years, as it may possibly be, your action at the caucus will forever constitute the greatest and most cherished compensation for my long and, I humbly believe, devoted services to our common country.

SENDING OF TWO MEMBERS OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ABROAD TO STUDY BEST MEANS OF PROMOTING ABACA AND COCONUT INDUSTRIES

[May 17, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The solution of the problems confronting the abacá and coconut industries in the Philippines requires an adequate knowledge not only of conditions in this country but also abroad. It is essential that investigations be made as to methods of cultivation, preservation, treatment and marketing of these commodities in the principal coconut and abacá producing centers, as well as the conditions affecting them in the principal markets of the world. I, therefore, suggest the advisability of sending two members of the National Assembly each on a separate mission to undertake a study and investigation abroad of the best means of promoting, respectively, the abacá and coconut industries in the Philippines.

THE OSMEÑA MISSION IN ITS WORK

[May 17, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

The Congress of the United States is now considering legislation vitally affecting the Philippines. As is well known, I have sent Vice-President Sergio Osmeña to Washington as my personal representative. In coöperation with Resident Commissioner Joaquin M. Elizalde, Vice-President Osmeña is carrying on negotiations with the Government of the United States on matters of legislation. I believe that the presence in the United States of a delegate from the National Assembly will strengthen our position there, and at the same time insure prompt action by the National Assembly on whatever legislation might be required as a result of any action that might be taken by the Congress of the United States on pending Philippine legislation. I, therefore, suggest that the National Assembly consider the advisability of sending a delegate to Washington for the purposes above indicated.

DISAPPROVING BILL No. 448—TEXTBOOK LAW

[June 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 448, entitled “Ley sobre libros de texto.”

The action taken by me on this matter is motivated by the fact that you failed to include in this measure certain wholesome provisions found in the old law (Act No. 2957, as amended by Act No. 3772), namely: (a) the provision that “the textbooks selected and approved shall be used for a period of at least six years from the date of their adoption,” a requirement which is necessary in view of the many complaints received from the public that books are changed much too often to the prejudice of the parents of the school children; and (b) the requirements that “it shall be unlawful for the Board to consider for adoption or to adopt any treatise, textbook, or manuscript in whose authorship, editorship, or preparation a member of the Board may have direct or indirect interest,” and that “it shall be likewise unlawful for any member of the Board, during the period of his incumbency, to own, directly or indirectly, any interest whatsoever in any firm, partnership, or corporation, publishing or dealing in school textbooks,” which requirements should be retained in our statute books in order to keep members of the Board on Textbooks above criticism.

The Secretary of Justice has also pointed out to me that the provision of Section 5 of the bill, which empowers the Board to appoint “tecnicos,” unless this term is interpreted to refer only to those who do not discharge functions of government and whose work is merely advisory, may run counter to the provision of the Constitution (Article VII section 11, subsection 3) which states, among others that the “National Assembly may by law vest the appointment of inferior officers in the President alone, in the courts, or in the heads of department.”

TARIFF ACT OF 1909

[June 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly :

I have the honor to inform you that I have today approved Bill No. 958. entitled “An Act to amend certain sections of the Philippine Tariff Act of nineteen hundred and nine, as amended, for the purpose of raising revenue,” with the exception of Section 3 thereof, which I hereby veto by virtue of the authority conferred upon me by subsection (3), section 11. Article VI, of the Constitution.

I am constrained to veto Section 3 of the bill because the exclusion of foreign vessels from the privilege of drawback on all fuel oils used for their propulsion, as intended in Section 3, would, if enacted, constitute flag discrimination, and, therefore, would violate certain commercial treaties of the United States applicable to the Philippines.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Approval of Assessment Law, June 16, 1939

MESSAGE

ON APPROVAL OF ASSESSMENT LAW

[June 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have today signed Bill No. 1003, entitled "Assessment Law," which now becomes Commonwealth Act No. 470, despite one very objectionable feature thereof, as I believe that, as a whole, the bill is a decided improvement on the present Assessment Law.

The feature of the bill which is highly objectionable is the proviso contained in section 53 which will, pending the new assessment in any province, reduce by 50 per cent the assessed valuations of all permanent plants and/or trees beginning on January 1, 1940, such reduced assessments to continue until the first day of January of the year following the completion of the reassessment of real property in said province. A legislative relief in the form of a flat rate reduction of assessments throughout the Philippines is unscientific, because it is not based on the result of an investigation into the merit of each case of assessment and it disregards the question of whether the present assessed value is higher or lower than the prevailing market or true and full value. Furthermore, the adoption of the proviso does not consider at all the important factor of the effect that such reduction would have upon the finances of the provincial and municipal governments. The Secretary of Finance has conducted a survey of the probable effects of the approval of this proviso in several provinces; and from the telegraphic reports that he has received from the provincial treasurers, he informed me that the adverse effect of the flat rate reduction of the assessments, in at least sixteen provinces, will be very alarming, and that the total provincial and municipal deficits in said provinces will, in all probability, amount to more than half a million pesos. It is my purpose to recommend to the National Assembly the repeal of this proviso at its next session.

DISAPPROVING BILL No. 439—PROVIDING SECURITY AGAINST FRAUD IN GRADING OF LUMBER FOR SALE

[June 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that, I have today disapproved Bill No. 439, entitled “An Act to provide security against fraud in the grading of lumber offered for sale.”

The Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce and the Director of Forestry are of the opinion that the requirement that every lumber dealer has to stamp his name and that of the lumber on every piece of lumber sold will increase appreciably the cost of handling lumber; and that such cost will, in all probability, be added to the selling price of the lumber which, in the final analysis, will mean added burden to the consumers. Furthermore, it has been pointed out to me that the proposed bill will be impracticable of enforcement in the case of small pieces of lumber, such as mouldings and nipa strips of which thousands are being produced for the local markets. In the case of planed lumber, its marking as required might so mar its surface as to reduce its value.

Therefore, much as I favor the purpose behind the proposed measure, which is to curtail the practice of certain lumber dealers of passing inferior classes of lumber for superior ones, I am constrained to disapprove this bill in view of the considerations above stated.

DISAPPROVING BILL No. 817—AMENDING THE TRADE-MARK LAW

[June 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have today disapproved Bill No. 817, entitled “An Act amending Act Numbered Six hundred and sixty-six, to correct certain unfair practices in the importation of merchandise under an already registered trade-mark or trade-name.”

I believe that the Trademark Law already affords to honest merchants all the protection against unfair practices in connection with trade-marks and trade-names that they require; and that the approval of Bill No. 817 would merely enable certain merchants, owners of merchandise with a registered trade-mark or trade name, to maintain a complete monopoly on this merchandise, and thus restrict free competition in the market, to the prejudice of the consumers. Furthermore, it has been noted that the bill above referred to affords protection only to trade-marks or trade names owned by citizens of the Philippines or persons domiciled in the Philippines, and does not afford the same protection to trade-marks or trade-names owned by citizens of the United States not domiciled here. This is against the provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Law, which guarantee to citizens of the United States the same civil rights as are enjoyed by citizens of the Philippines. Lastly, it appears that the bill covers even cases of importation of merchandise made by persons for their own personal use and not for the purpose of trade or commerce, and I believe that this will cause undue hardship upon individual consumers.

REOPENING CADASTRAL PROCEEDINGS ALREADY DECIDED BY THE COURTS TO ANOTHER TWO YEARS

[June 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 828, entitled “An Act to amend Commonwealth Act Numbered Two hundred and seventy-six.”

The effect of the bill, if converted into law, will be to extend the benefit of reopening cadastral proceedings which have already been finally decided by the courts to another two years, because its effectivity will again commence to run from the date of the approval of the same. I note that the benefit of Commonwealth Act No. 276, which is sought to be amended herein, was extended several times in the past by the enactment of separate laws. This is no reason, however, for further extending the provision of said Act, as the persons intended to be benefited were already given all the opportunities to file their claims. If those persons failed to take advantage of such opportunities, they themselves are to blame. There must be finality in the decisions of our courts; and unless court decisions have caused an apparent injustice, it is the better policy that they should not be disturbed by legislative enactments.

I sympathize, however, with the plight of landowners whose properties have been declared public lands through no fault of their own or through excusable negligence. For the purpose of doing justice to such landowners, I shall give instruction to the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce to see to it that they are given the benefits of the free patent provisions of the Public Land Act subject to the restrictions contained in said Act.

I have the honor to inform you that I have today approved Bill No. 830, entitled “An Act to amend Commonwealth Act Numbered Three hundred and thirty, entitled “An Act appropriating ninety-six million, three hundred fifty-one thousand and three hundred pesos for public works’,” with the exception of some items, as the changes involved can no longer be made, the original appropriations having been either partly expended or have balances insufficient to meet the proposed amendments. These items are:

SECTION 1:

Antique	Items 19, 21, 28, and 33;
Bulacan	Items 40, 69, and 77;
Nueva Ecija	Item 78;
Nueva Vizcaya	Item 56;

Samar	Item 104; and
Tarlac	Item 53.

SECTION 3:

Bulacan	Items 40(a), 69(a), and 77(a);
La Union	Items 12(a) and 89(a);
Mindoro	Items 22(a) and 22(a); and
Pangasinan	Item 137(a).

The suppression in section 5 of Item 2 under Antique; of Item 18 under Bohol: of Items 18, 24, 28, 29, and 92 under La Union; of Items 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28 under Mindoro; of Items 11 and 15 under Nueva Vizcaya: of Items 29 and 145 under Pangasinan; of Items 105 and 109 under Samar; and of Item 54 under Tarlac, is also hereby disapproved.

This bill now becomes Commonwealth Act No. 475.

Message of President Quezon on Tydings-Kocialkowski Act, August 15, 1939

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Tydings-Kocialkowski Act

[Released on August 15, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I take pleasure in transmitting to you, for your information and appropriate action, an official copy of the Act of August 7, 1939, passed by the Congress of the United States, entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes'." This law embodies substantially the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, which you have previously approved, as regards necessary adjustments in the economic and other relationships between the United States and the Philippines prior to July 4, 1946. It may be recalled that the original bill introduced in the Senate included provisions continuing preferential trade relations between the two countries until the year 1961, as was recommended by the Joint Preparatory Committee. Instead of these provisions, realizing perhaps that the problems involved could be better solved if action thereon were deferred, the Congress of the United States has directed in this Act that a conference be held at least two years prior to July 4, 1946, for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to trade relations between the United States and the Philippines after independence.

The approval of this new law should be regarded by the Filipino people as another indication of the sustained interest of the United States in our welfare, and of the desire of the American people to be fair and just to the Philippines and to do everything reasonably necessary to make possible our adequate preparation for independent nationhood. I wish again to make avowal of our gratitude to the government and people of the United States and, particularly, to President Franklin D. Roosevelt who, despite the multitude and the gravity of the problems confronting the American nation, had persistently urged the enactment of this law to forestall the ruin of some of our basic industries and to facilitate in some measure our economic readjustment. I also wish to record the nation's acknowledgment of the eminent public service rendered by Vice-President Sergio Osmeña and Resident Commissioner Joaquin M. Elizalde in relation to the approval of this law. Throughout the long process leading to its enactment they represented the Philippines with dignity and ability of the highest order, and it was partly due to their persistence in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles that the measure was finally passed. Our nation's recognition should likewise go to Floor Leader Quintin Paredes, former Secretary of Finance Antonio de las Alas, former Resident Commissioner Camilo Osias, Benito Razon, and other officials of our Government who were associated with our representatives in Washington in the effort to obtain the approval of this legislation.

Summarizing the important provisions of this new Act, we find that—

- (1) It establishes an annual duty-free quota in the United States for cigars, scrap tobacco and stemmed and unstemmed filler tobacco, coconut oil, and pearl buttons, and relieves them from the payment of the export tax imposed by the Independence Act. With regard to embroideries, in the computation of the export tax to which they are subjected, the value of any cloth of United States origin used in the production thereof is excluded.
- (2) It continues until July 4, 1946, the annual quota of 6,000,000 pounds for Philippine cordage which quota, under Cordage Act, would be reduced to 3,000,000 pounds beginning on May 1, 1941.
- (3) It guarantees to Filipino citizens and corporations the enjoyment, in the United States and all places subject to its jurisdiction, of all the rights and privileges that they enjoyed at the time of the inauguration of the Commonwealth.

(4) While maintaining the prohibition against the use of the proceeds of the excise taxes to subsidize directly or indirectly producers or processors of copra, coconut oil, or allied products, it liberalizes the restrictions now imposed upon the Philippine Government in the expenditure of the proceeds of these taxes by merely requiring that such expenditures be necessary in adjusting the Philippine economy to a position independent of trade preferences in the United States and in preparing the Philippines for independence, and by expressly authorizing the expenditure of such funds to grant facilities for better curing of copra or for bona fide production loans to copra producers. The President of the United States, however, is authorized to cause the withholding of payments to the Philippine Treasury of the proceeds of excise taxes in case said funds are spent for purposes other than those contemplated in the law.

(5) It expressly exempts copra and Manila fiber (abaca) from the payment of the export tax, so that even if these articles were made dutiable in the United States, they would still be free from this tax.

(6) It establishes regulations for the collection of export taxes and the liquidation of the bonded indebtedness of the Philippines, its provinces, cities, and municipalities incurred prior to May 1, 1934.

(7) It provides for the acquisition or retention by the United States of such lands and properties in the Philippines as may be necessary for its diplomatic or consular establishments.

(8) It provides for a conference to be held in such manner, time, and place as the President of the United States may determine, at least two years prior to July 4, 1946 for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between the United States and the independent Philippine Republic. It is provided that this conference shall be between representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, such representatives, on the part of the United States, to consist of three senators appointed by the President of the Senate, three members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House, and three persons appointed by the President of the United States, and, on the part of the Philippines, to consist of nine representatives to be appointed by the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, with the consent of the Commission on Appointments of the National Assembly.

The provisions that I have briefly outlined will, in my opinion, take care of the most immediate difficulties that many of our industries have to face. The law, however, does not solve adequately nor completely the larger and more important problem of economic readjustment, for unless preferential trade with the United States is allowed to continue for at least fifteen years after independence, we could not entertain the least hope that our basic industries, representing a production amounting to about forty per cent of our total annual income, may survive the sudden application of the full American tariff on July 4, 1946. The ruin of these industries would severely affect our economy precisely at a time when the economic base of our national structure needs greatest strength and consistency, for it will occur upon our emergence as an independent state. We are doing everything humanly possible to prepare for that eventuality, but the difficulties of the task must be evident to all who have studied our economy and the degree of its dependence upon preferential trade with America. Recognizing this fact, the Joint Preparatory Committee recommended the continuation of preferential trade after independence. In this connection I wish to remark that preferential trade, to be of any assistance to the Philippines, must consist of effective preferences, such as will permit the gradual adjustment of our industries looking to their final survival or convenient substitution. It is my hope and abiding confidence that when the economic conference convenes at least two years before independence, this matter will receive careful consideration. I am strengthened in this belief, because there will be members of the American Congress in that conference and I am certain that, once the problem is understood by them, they will do that which is just and fair for the Philippines and the United States.

I believe the Philippines should prepare early for this conference. It is my purpose at your next regular session to submit recommendations to that end.

Aside from the material advantages which this new law would bring to us, there is one other consideration which enhances its significance. When the Independence Act was passed, the Filipino people accepted it on the assurances given to me by President Roosevelt that any inequalities or injustices in the law would be eliminated. This Act, in part at least, is a fulfillment of that pledge. Our reliance in America has once more been vindicated and we have every reason to feel that our faith in her has not been misplaced.

The effectiveness of the Independence Act was conditioned upon its acceptance by the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question. That requirement has established the Independence Act as a covenant between the United States and the Philippines. It has been our view, and we still hold that view, that the provisions of the Independence Act may not be changed or altered without the consent of the constitutional representatives of our people. The Act recently passed does not require that acceptance or consent. I feel, however, that in making the effectiveness of the Act dependent upon the fulfillment of certain conditions which are entirely within our control and decision, the principle of mutuality involved has been respected. Notwithstanding this, in order to clearly maintain an adherence to this principle, I recommend that the National Assembly formally accept this new Act before it initiates the required steps that are a condition to its effectiveness. Section 7 of the Act provides as follows:

“SEC. 7. (a) Sections 1 to 5, inclusive, of this amendatory Act shall become effective on January 1, 1940, if before that date—

“(1) Subsection 5 of section 1 of the Ordinance Appended to the Constitution of the Philippines shall have been amended in the manner now provided by law, by changing the final period of said subsection to a comma, and by adding thereto the words: ‘as amended by the Act of Congress of the United States approved (followed by the date of the approval of this amendatory Act),’ and section 3 of the said ordinance shall have been amended by inserting immediately after the words ‘approved March 24, 1934,’ the same amendatory language mentioned above.

“(2) The President of the United States shall have found and proclaimed that the Philippine Government has enacted, subsequent to the adoption of the amendments to the Constitution of the Philippines (as provided in subdivision (1) of this subsection). a law relating to export taxes (as provided in section 1), and has retained those Philippine laws relating to sinking fund and currency matters which were in effect on May 20, 1938.

“(b) Section 1 of this amendatory Act shall remain in full force and effect from the effective date thereof until July 4, 1946, unless the President of the United States shall, prior to July 4, 1946, have found and proclaimed that the Philippine Government has, in any substantial respect, repealed or amended, or failed or refused to enforce or administer any Philippine law referred to in subdivision (2) of subsection (a) of this section. In the event of such a finding and proclamation, section 1 shall immediately become ineffective and trade relations between the United States and the Philippines shall be as provided by section 6 of the Act of March 24, 1934, prior to the enactment of this amendatory Act and by section 13 of the said Act.

“(c) Sections 6 and 7 of this amendatory Act shall become effective upon its enactment.”

In the belief that this Act would prove beneficial to the Philippines, I urge the National Assembly to pass the necessary resolution and legislation to amend the Philippine Constitution as required in this section. I also recommend that the process for this amendment be expedited so that the National Assembly might take the action required under paragraph (2) of section 7 and thus complete all the conditions established for the effectiveness of the Act before January 1, 1940.

For the purposes of the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of legislation necessary to carry out the foregoing recommendations.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Loyalty to, and cooperation with, the United States during the European War, September 5, 1939

OF HIS EXCELLENCY
MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON LOYALTY TO, AND COOPERATION WITH, THE UNITED STATES DURING THE EUROPEAN WAR

(Delivered on September 5, 1939 at its special session)

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

For the second time in the history of our relations with the United States we are facing the grim realities of a war between nations in which the lives of millions of men are involved and the fate of civilization itself hangs in the balance. I dare say that none of those who went through the stirring days of the World War ever suspected that he would live long enough to see reenacted that greatest of human tragedies. People the world over cherished the thought that they were emerging from the wake of that great holocaust into an era of everlasting peace. Unhappily, subsequent events did not fulfill the fervent hopes and just expectations of men of good will.

During the World War, the Government and people of the Philippines had occasion to demonstrate, both in words and in action, their loyalty to the United States. Then an American Governor-General was at the helm of our Government. Now we have a Chief Executive of our own and a Government established in accordance with a Constitution adopted by our own people. Not only is the Legislature exclusively in the hands of the Filipinos, but so are the executive and judicial branches of the Government.

At present America is fortunately at peace with the world, including the nations at war. In consequence, we find ourselves in a similarly favorable situation. As a neutral power, however, America has certain obligations to perform not only in the continental Halted States but in the Philippines as well. It behooves us therefore to assure the Government of the United States of our loyalty and devotion which have grown even deeper and stronger in the perspective of the many years of unselfish American endeavor to serve the best interests of the Filipino people. In this critical moment, I wish again to pledge to America, on behalf of our people, our unstinted loyalty and our fullest cooperation in the promotion of the ideals of justice and liberty and in the safeguarding of the legitimate rights and interests of both the United States and the Philippines.

We want the Government and people of the United States to feel that we are bound to them not merely by the presence of the American flag in our country but by the nobler and stronger ties of gratitude and affection — bonds of sentiment that are born of the human heart and which transcend the obligations of allegiance implied in the presence of that flag. Our loyalty to the United States is rooted in something more permanent, something more lasting, than legal or political relationships. Our loyalty is built on faith — faith in the sense of fairness and justice of the American people, faith in the great principles and ideals for which the Stars and Stripes proudly waves over land and sea, over a free and happy people.

Our loyalty to the great American nation is but the fruit of her altruistic policy in dealing with our people — a policy which has been characterized by justice and good will and by both moral and material assistance. That loyalty, I am sure, will outlive the sovereignty of the United States over our country, and will attest for all time the moral grandeur of America and the virtuality of her free institutions.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly: We are confronting a situation which demands the exercise of prudence and foresight. We must be alive to the problems which may arise at any moment. We must be ready to cooperate with America and to protect the interests of our people. With this end in view, I have come to you to ask that necessary and adequate legislation be passed to empower this government to meet any emergency that may arise.

Message of President Quezon on to the Second National Assembly on Necessity of enacting Emergency Measures, September 16, 1939

MESSAGE

TO THE
SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
NECESSITY OF ENACTING EMERGENCY MEASURES

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In my message of September 5, 1939, I invited your attention to the necessity of enacting appropriate legislation to meet any emergency that might arise from the present critical state of world affairs. I am now taking the liberty to submit for your consideration the following measures:

1. An Act to authorize the President of the Philippines, during the period ending on March 31, 1941, to take over, for use or operation by the government, any public service or enterprise, to appropriate the necessary funds therefor, and to prescribe penalties for interfering with the exercise by the government of its authority thereunder.
2. An Act to regulate the transfer of vessels and of shipping facilities for the period ending March 31, 1941, and to provide penalties for the violation thereof.
3. An Act to authorize the President of the Philippines to suspend, either wholly or partially, during the period ending March 31, 1941, the operation of Commonwealth Act Numbered four hundred and forty-four, commonly known as the eight-hour labor law.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (2), section 12, Article VI of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the foregoing measures.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Appropriation of P2,550,000 for opening of New Primary Classes in the Philippines, September 16, 1939

APPROPRIATION OF P2,550,000 FOR OPENING OF NEW PRIMARY CLASSES IN THE PHILIPPINES

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the need for an appropriation with which to open new schools and classes under the Bureau of Education, in order that those children of elementary school age who were refused admission in the schools last June because of lack of teachers and equipment may be properly accommodated.

The Director of Education has reported to me that it would be urgently necessary to open five thousand public primary classes during the current year in the various municipalities of the Archipelago in order to accommodate the school children who are seeking enrollment in the primary grades. I have likewise been informed that the appropriations authorized in the General Appropriation Act (Commonwealth Act No. 446) and the Supplementary Appropriation Act (Commonwealth Act No. 457) for the operation of primary classes are hardly sufficient to maintain the classes already existing, so that no part thereof can be made available for opening new classes.

In view of the foregoing facts, I earnestly urge upon the National Assembly the immediate consideration and approval of an Act appropriating the sum of P2,550,000 for the opening of new primary classes or as aid for the operation and maintenance of existing ones.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph 2 of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the necessary legislation.

CORRECTION OF DEFECTS IN EIGHT-HOUR LABOR LAW

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Since Commonwealth Act No. 444, commonly known as the Eight-Hour Labor Law, was enacted, several defects in the law have been noted and several difficulties in its enforcement encountered, which need correction. Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3), section 3, Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby authorize you to consider in your current special session the necessary legislation in order to correct those defects and to avoid those difficulties.

For the purposes of paragraph (2), section 12, Article VI of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of such legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Payment of Bonds of National Power Corporation in Philippine Currency, September 16, 1939 MESSAGE

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

PAYMENT OF BONDS OF NATIONAL POWER CORPORATION IN PHILIPPINE CURRENCY

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the necessity of enacting legislation providing that the principal and interest of bonds to be hereafter issued in the name and on behalf of the National Power Corporation under the authority of Commonwealth Act No. 120 shall be payable in Philippine Currency or its equivalent in lawful currency of the United States.

Commonwealth Act No. 120 now provides that bonds issued pursuant to the authority therein contained shall be payable in gold coin or its equivalent. The reason for such a provision was the fact that, at the time of the enactment of the said law, gold was the standard of monetary value in the United States and in this country. With the abandonment of the gold standard, the redemption of these bonds in gold coin may become extremely difficult and disadvantageous.

For the purposes of the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of such legislation.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Prevention of Monopolization and Injurious Speculations Affecting Articles of Prime Necessity, September 16, 1939

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

ON

PREVENTION OF MONOPOLIZATION AND INJURIOUS SPECULATIONS AFFECTING ARTICLES OF PRIME NECESSITY

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

It is a matter of common knowledge that there are certain dealers and merchants who, taking undue advantage of the present situation, try to reap enormous profits at the expense of the poor consumers. While honest business must be encouraged and promoted, the public must be protected against those who are dominated by an inordinate desire to make huge profits. No man or group of men has any right to manipulate the prices of the necessities of life. Profiteering must be stopped.

I am, therefore, submitting for your consideration a proposed measure which will empower the President, for a limited period of time, under section 16 of Article VI of the Constitution, to prevent monopolization and injurious speculations affecting articles of prime necessity; requisition foods, materials and supplies; set limits to prices; and promulgate such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary in the public interest.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (2), section 12, Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the measure above mentioned.

Very respectfully,

TO THE

FIXING WITHIN SPECIFIED LIMITS THE TONNAGE DUES ON FOREIGN VESSELS

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

A grave situation has arisen in the shipping business of the Philippines of which it is my plain duty to inform you. Since the outbreak of the war in Europe, the freight rates charged by shipping firms on merchandise exported from the Philippines to foreign countries have increased considerably. These freight charges are taken from the world's price of Philippine-exported goods and are defrayed by Philippine producers. In view of this, the taxes collected on foreign vessels should also be increased in proportion to the increase in freight rates. For this reason, it is urged that the Chief Executive be authorized by the National Assembly to fix within specified limits tonnage dues.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of legislation on the matter.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Proposed Amendments to National Internal Revenue Code, September 16, 1939

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

[September 16, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

At your last regular session, you enacted Commonwealth Act No. 466, otherwise known as the National Internal Revenue Code. Since the final form in which the said Act was approved by you differed in several respects from the original bill as introduced in the National Assembly and upon which hearings were held by the Committee on Ways and Means, I deemed it in the public interest to hold hearings on the bill as passed before stamping my approval thereon. During the hearings, I came to the conclusion that some of its provisions should be clarified to avoid doubts as to their meaning and purport, and that some of the innovations introduced in the system would permit evasions of the law resulting in decreased revenues.

I am, therefore, taking the liberty of submitting to you some suggestions as to how the National Internal Revenue Code should be amended.

Specific tax on denatured alcohol for motive power. (Section 142).—In computing the specific tax on denatured alcohol used for motive power, the law permits the deduction of the gasoline used in the production of said denatured alcohol. The reason for this deduction is that gasoline which is used as a denaturant has already paid the corresponding specific tax. For the same reason, it is suggested that you permit the deduction of other denaturants used in the production of denatured alcohol for motive power where the specific tax on such denaturants has already been paid.

Merchants' sales tax. (Sections 182, 184, 185, 186, 187, and 188).—It is estimated that if the provisions of the Tax Code affecting the sales tax are not amended, there will be a loss of revenue which may amount to several millions. I recommend, therefore, in order to forestall that loss that the single turn-over tax be applied only to sales of luxuries and semiluxuries and on the principal agricultural products of the country and that the original sales tax of 1 1/2 per cent on sales of ordinary articles be maintained at least until the experiment of collecting a single turn-over tax shall have proved to be a success, particularly from the standpoint of the adequacy of the revenue to be derived therefrom. It is feared that with the abrupt elimination of the cumulative sales tax, the expected revenue from this source of about fourteen million pesos a year might not be realized, thereby affecting the essential functions of the Government.

For this reason, a new provision to be known as section 186(a) should be inserted in the law imposing a merchants' sales tax on every sale, barter, or exchange of articles other than those enumerated in sections 184, 185, 186, and

189. This new section should also provide that the articles enumerated in section 189, the tax upon which has not been paid under that section, shall be subject to the tax at the rate of 1 1/2 per cent on their original sale, barter, or exchange. The purpose of this amendment is to cover imported rope, sugar, rice, coconut oil, corn, and desiccated coconut so that when these imported products are sold in the Philippines by the importer, the same shall be subject to a single tax at the rate of 1 1/2 per cent of their gross selling price.

It is also recommended that you amend section 187 by limiting the operation of the consignment tax to merchants and producers consigning commodities for sale or manufacture abroad and by exempting from the said consignment tax articles imported into the Philippines and reexported from the same in their original condition by the importer, and minerals and mineral products when consigned abroad by the lessee, concessionaire, or owner of the mineral land from which removed.

To clarify section 188, it is suggested that it be amended by expressly providing that agricultural products and ordinary salt shall be exempt from the merchants' sales tax only when they are sold, bartered, or exchanged by the producer or owner of the land where produced and that sales of rope, sugar, rice, corn and desiccated coconut shall also be exempt from the sales tax, as these products are taxed in section 189. Section 188 should likewise be amended by exempting from the merchants' sales tax those persons who are exempt from the payment of the annual fixed taxes established in section 182.

Tax on certain agricultural products. (Section 189).—I think the provision relating to derivatives and products of raw materials where such derivatives and products constitute 60 per cent or more by weight or value of the said materials from which the articles are produced or manufactured should be eliminated. In view of this provision, doubt has been entertained as to whether or not molasses is exempt from the tax of 1 1/2 per cent on the ground that molasses does not constitute 60 per cent or more of the raw materials from which it is produced. On the other hand, it would be unjust to collect a merchants' sales tax of 3 1/2 per cent on the selling price of molasses when a tax of 1 1/2 per cent is collected on raw or refined sugar. For this reason, the proposed amendments seek to tax by-products at the rate of 1 1/2 per cent, irrespective of the ratio thereof to the raw materials from which derived. This section should likewise be amended by exempting from the 1 1/2 per cent tax rice or corn milled which does not exceed one cavan for every single owner in any one day, in order to enable the poor to mill their palay or corn for their own consumption without paying the tax prescribed in this section.

Compensating tax. (Section 190).—The present law imposing the compensating tax provides for no exemption with respect to the value of the goods imported or received in this country. This has given rise to considerable delay in the withdrawal of goods, particularly of mail packages, from Customs' custody. On account of the growing volume of indent and mail order business in this country, there is now a serious congestion of mail packages in the Manila Post Office. To obviate this difficulty, it is proposed that the compensating tax be not imposed on any single shipment consigned to a single person when the total value thereof does not exceed P25.

It is also proposed to amend section 190 so as to exempt from the operation of the compensating tax tourists or transients, as well as residents returning to this country from abroad bringing with them goods valued at not more than P50, or goods which, if imported from countries other than the United States, would be admitted free of duty, either absolute, subject to express condition, or upon compliance with corresponding regulations.

Issuance of sales invoices. (Section 204).—The law requires every merchant to issue sales or commercial invoices where the value of the articles sold exceeds P10. It is proposed that you further require every merchant whose gross annual sales exceed P20,000 to issue sales or commercial invoices, irrespective of the value of the goods sold. It has been observed that many importers who are also retailers do considerable business involving individual sales of much less than P10 without issuing invoices. This practice places those retailers who issue invoices to cover sales amounting to even five or ten centavos in a very disadvantageous position. At the same time it may seriously affect the revenues of the Government.

Amusement taxes. (Section. 260).—It is proposed that this section be amended so as to clarify the provisions regarding the collection of amusement taxes. These taxes should be paid in the same manner and at the same time-as the percentage taxes on business.

Approval of the President of the United States. (Section 371).—This section should be amended so as to require the approval by the President of the United States of sections 187 and 190 of the Tax Code. In the case of section 187, which imposes the consignment tax, the approval of the President of the United States is considered necessary in view of the proposed amendment of said section 187 with a view to limiting the application of the consignment tax to merchants and producers. This will meet the objection received in some quarters to the effect that although the present rulings of the collector of Internal Revenue limit the application of the consignment tax to merchants and producers of certain agricultural products, said section 187 might be interpreted later in such a way that even American citizens taking with them their personal belongings upon their return to the United States would be subjected to the payment of the consignment tax.

With regard to section 190, which imposes the compensating tax, the approval by the President of the United States is considered advisable, in order to forestall any possible claim that the tax partakes of the nature of a duty on imports and should, therefore, be approved by the President of the United States in accordance with the Tydings-McDuffie Law. While it is believed that the compensating tax may be legally imposed without the prior approval of the President of the United States, for it is identical in nature and incidence to the use tax in vogue in several states in America which was held constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, yet inasmuch as said section 190 is now proposed to be amended, it would seem to be advisable for this Government to have the same approved by the President of the United States so as to avoid further discussion as to whether or not the compensating tax partakes of the nature of a duty on imports which, to be valid, must be approved by the President of the United States in accordance with the Tydings-McDuffie Law

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph 2 of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the necessary legislation to effect the desired amendments to the National Internal Revenue Code.

Respectfully,

CREATION OF A NEW CITY EMBRACING AN AREA EXTENDING FROM THE NORTHEAST BOUNDARY OF MANILA TO THE MARIQUINA RIVER

[September 18, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the urgent need of provision for the adequate control and development of the area in the vicinity of the new site for the University of the Philippines and the People's Homesite Corporation's Subdivision project near the City of Manila. Aside from the fact that those undertakings involve a large investment, it is obvious that the objectives we are seeking can not be attained unless the development of their environs is in harmony with our aims. The purpose in transferring the University is to provide an adequate educational plant in an atmosphere conducive to moral and scholastic standards appropriate to our highest public institution of learning. The homesite project is designed to provide the workingmen and permanent employees with homes at reasonable cost and also to serve as a model residential and community center. With these ends in view, their political and social regulation should be coordinated with that of their surroundings. For that purpose, it is proposed to create a new city, embracing an area extending from the northeast boundary of the City of Manila to the Mariquina River, chartered to do all things necessary for the health, safety and happiness of its inhabitants.

In such special circumstances, it is considered advisable that the officials of such city should be appointed by the Chief Executive, with the consent of the Commission on Appointments.

I recommend the enactment of the necessary legislation to accomplish the purpose above indicated.

For the purposes of paragraph (2), of section 12, Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the proposed measure.

Respectfully,

APPROPRIATION OF P100,000 TO EFFECT ADJUSTMENTS OF PERSONNEL IN THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

[September 18, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to recommend the enactment of a law to appropriate the sum of P100,000 in order to enable the President of the Philippines to effect the necessary adjustments of personnel and such other changes in the Department of Labor as are contemplated in Commonwealth Act No. 453, especially for the purpose of reorganizing the Immigration Division.

Since the establishment of the Commonwealth regime, many laws have been passed for the protection of the rights and interests of labor, in line with the social justice policy to which the present administration has been committed. This has resulted in the manifold increase of activities of the Department of Labor, calling for a corresponding increase in its personnel. It is not enough that laws have been approved for the benefit of the working classes: there must be also an effective organization to carry out the purposes of said laws.

For the purposes of paragraph 2, section 12, Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the corresponding legislation.

CREATION OF A JOINT EDUCATIONAL SURVEY COMMITTEE

[September 18, 1939]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

In view of the annual increase in the expenses for schools, I think a thorough study should be made of the problem both in its educational and economic aspect, and for this reason I am contemplating the creation of a joint committee composed of officials of the Executive Department and members of the National Assembly as follows:

The	Secretary	of	Public	Instruction,	Chairman
The	Chairman	of the	Committee on	Public Instruction	of the National
The	Secretary	of	the	National	Finance
The	Chairman	of the	Committee on	Appropriations	of the National
The	Chairman	of the	Committee on	Ways and Means	of the National
The	Commissioner	of	the	Budget,	and
The	Director of Education,	Members

Since I intend to appoint members of the Assembly to this Committee, I would like to hear your views on the matter at your earliest convenience.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

In view of the certain decline in the Customs collections which may reach an amount that can not at present be ascertained, it would seem necessary to invest the Executive with sufficient power, in addition to the authority contained in section 7-I (2) of the Budget Act, to reduce the expenses of the Government by suspending or suppressing such services, activities or projects as in his opinion are not of immediate necessity.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (2), section 12, Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the measure suggested above.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Emergency Legislation, September 25, 1939

MESSAGE
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON EMERGENCY LEGISLATION

[September 25, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have called you to this Second Special Session so that you may have the opportunity to pass such laws as in your judgment may be necessary to safeguard the neutrality of the Philippines and to protect the public interest.

I am informed that you share with me the apprehension that unless emergency measures are enacted at this time the people will suffer unnecessary and unjust hardships on account of unscrupulous profiteers. Hence I felt it my duty to summon you to a special session soon after the adjournment of the last one.

It is indeed with diffidence that I have called this session to urge the passage of emergency legislation: first, because I am reluctant to assume the grave responsibility which the possession and exercise of extraordinary powers necessarily entail; and, second, because it will mean that you will be kept in session practically for one-half of this year since you will have to convene again in October to canvass the returns of the plebiscite. However, due regard for the welfare of our people and other obligations during the present world crisis impose upon us a solemn duty that we dare not shirk.

I think the National Assembly should meet the situation with proper consideration of the necessities of the case. Whatever emergency powers are granted the President should not extend beyond the end of the next regular session. By that time we should be in a position to know the real exigencies of the situation and it will then be possible for the National Assembly to approve adequate legislation. Should the emergency be found still subsisting, it may merely continue the temporary measures adopted at this session or else allow them to lapse if the emergency should no longer exist.

It has been shown in practice that the Eight-Hour Labor Law is defective in many ways. The effects of the war which are being felt here make the revision of this law urgent and imperative. I recommend that you take up this question at this session.

In view of the inevitable reduction in our customs revenues because of the European War and the hostilities in China, the amendment of the Tax Code as recommended in detail in my message to you on this matter during your last session is of the utmost importance. I am advised by the Department of Finance that unless the sales tax as provided in the Tax Code is modified there will be a decrease of several million pesos from this source. It is also necessary to clarify certain provisions of the Tax Code and to correct some inequalities. I earnestly commend these proposed changes to your careful consideration.

Respectfully,

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON
NECESSITY OF IMMEDIATE ENACTMENT OF FOUR BILLS

[September 28, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I have the honor to submit for your consideration at this special session the bills enumerated in the attached certified list.

For the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of the said bills.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on Increase of Judges of First Instance,
September 29, 1939

MESSAGE
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
TO THE
SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
ON INCREASE OF JUDGES OF FIRST INSTANCE

[September 29, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I am inviting your attention to the need of expediting the disposition of cadastral and land registration cases now pending in the various Courts of First Instance in the Philippines. As of March 31, 1939, there were 276,042 uncontested cadastral lots and 46,308 contested lots pending hearing in said courts. At the rate these cases are being disposed of by the courts of first instance as at present organized and constituted and considering that new-cases are filed as cadastral surveys are completed, the congestion in the dockets of our courts insofar as cadastral and land registration cases are concerned cannot be relieved unless the number of judges of first instance is increased. The early determination of conflicts as to the ownership of lands will remove a source of social unrest in this country and thus help in the preservation and maintenance of peace and order. But what is more important, our plan to develop Mindanao will be retarded if immediate action is not taken to facilitate the adjudication of titles to the land in that vast territory.

In the public interest, therefore, I recommend the creation of fifteen positions of judges of first instance to take cognizance exclusively of cadastral and land registration cases and of such other questions as may arise under the provisions of the Cadastral Act and the Land Registration Act.

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 2, section 12, Article VI of the Constitution of the Philippines, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of legislation for the purpose.

Message of President Quezon to the Second National Assembly on appropriation of additional funds for opening of extension classes in the Philippines, November 10, 1939

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

TO THE

SECOND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

ON

APPROPRIATION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR OPENING OF EXTENSION CLASSES IN THE PHILIPPINES

[November 10, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I was very reluctant to accede to the request of your Speaker that I recommend to the National Assembly at this special session the appropriation of additional funds needed for the opening of 3,599 extension classes which the Secretary of Public Instruction had certified as fulfilling the requirements of the Department as to housing and school sites. The total amount required for the opening of these extension classes is P3,371,150. Inasmuch as out of the amount of P2,550,000 appropriated in your last session for extension classes, the sum of P2,000,000 is available for this purpose, you will only have to appropriate at this time, the sum of P1,371,150 to permit the opening of all such extension classes.

My unwillingness to recommend that this additional appropriation be made was due not so much to the fact that from the current income of the Government there are practically no funds left to draw from, as to the circumstance that the report of the Director of Education shows that there are no professionally trained teachers who can be secured for most of these extension classes. As a matter of fact, because of the rapid increase in the number of schools since the inauguration of the Commonwealth, the Bureau of Education had to employ as teachers only high school graduates and a few who had not even finished the high school course. According to the same report, more than 64 per cent of the teachers employed in 1938-1939 to teach in the extension classes supported by national funds and 70 per cent of those employed to teach extension classes supported by local funds, were merely high school graduates. Explaining the situation further, the Director of Education told me in a conference I had with him and the Secretary of Public Instruction a few days ago, that owing to the necessity of having to employ persons of lower professional and academic qualifications to meet the demand for teachers, the standard of our public schools has gone down.

Under the circumstances, I felt that such a situation should not be allowed to continue, much less to get worse, by further increasing the number of nonprofessionally trained teachers. Having found, however, that for the last two years the Department of Public Instruction, in its efforts to obtain the coöperation of local governments and communities in the acquisition of school sites and the construction of school buildings, has created the impression that whenever a given community could provide a school site and build a schoolhouse from local funds or local contributions, the Government would provide the funds for the opening of new classes; and furthermore, since I am informed that section 1 of Act No. 381, approved August 23, 1938, has been construed by the people as committing the National Government to open new classes from Grade I to Grade IV whenever sites for primary schools have been provided by the local community, I felt that the National Government could not at this time decline to appropriate the funds necessary for the opening and maintenance of those extension classes for which sites and school buildings have been provided by the people or the government of each locality. I am, therefore, recommending the appropriation of P1, 371, 150 which I propose to make available from forced savings in the appropriations for the various departments of the Government.

While in view of the reasons above stated I have felt it my duty to recommend to you an additional appropriation to permit the opening of extension classes in order that the National Government may carry out the policy heretofore adopted by the Department of Public Instruction and, impliedly at least, approved by Act No. 381 of the National Assembly, I desire to give public notice that hereafter I shall not recommend the appropriation of funds for extension classes even though the people of the locality may acquire sites and provide school buildings for the purpose, unless the consent of the Bureau of Education has been secured prior to the acquisition of the school sites or the construction of the school buildings. I can not permit the continuance of the policy heretofore followed of employing nonprofessionally trained teachers. Instead of allowing the standard of our public schools to go down, it should be our aim to raise it, and I shall demand strict responsibility from the Department of Public Instruction if in the future persons who are not fully competent to do the work are employed as teachers. I think it is unfair to the children themselves and practically a waste of public funds to open new schools without a properly trained personnel to teach. The Director of Education rightly states in his annual report for 1938 that "one of the duties of the Bureau of Education is to protect the public from incompetent teaching in the public schools."

Although I am asking you to vote the funds necessary for the opening of the extension classes which have met the requirements of the Department of Public Instruction. I have nevertheless instructed the Department that, should these funds be appropriated, while it may continue appointing high school graduates for these new classes, in no case may it appoint anyone who has not completed the high school course. Moreover, the superintendent must confer personally with the candidates for school teachers who are only high school graduates, before they are given appointment, so that he may satisfy himself that the appointees, even if lacking in professional attainments, are possessed of those qualities of character, personality and teaching ability, which give promise of satisfactory service and improvement. I have further instructed the Department of Public Instruction that special attention be given to these teachers so that during vacation or in their spare time they may acquire the knowledge and skill necessary to bring them up to the requirements of the Bureau of Education for primary school teachers.

In closing, I desire to invite the attention of the National Assembly to the fact that during the last three years under the Government of the Commonwealth, there has been a greater increase in the number of schools than in any previous ten-year period. The figures of the Bureau of Education reveal that 11,836 new teachers have been appointed since the inauguration of the Commonwealth, and with the new teachers who are to be appointed for the proposed opening of the extension classes, a total of 15,835 teachers will have been added to the number existing prior to November 15, 1935. We have reached a point where the opening of new classes cannot continue, even if funds were available, without serious deterioration of the whole system of public instruction. Teachers cannot be made in twenty-four hours, and our next step should be to train more teachers. This might require the opening of more normal schools or the granting of additional facilities to permit an increase in enrollment in the ones that are now in operation. This is a matter that I propose to lay before you at your next regular session.

In pursuance of the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of legislation to carry out the above recommendations.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on the approval of the Philippine Economic Adjustment Act

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On the approval of the Philippines Economic Adjustment Act

[Released on November 13, 1939]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

I take pleasure in informing you that the President of the United States has, pursuant to subsection 18 of section 1 of the Ordinance appended to the Constitution, approved the amendments to subsection 5 of section 1, and to section 3 of the aforesaid Ordinance, incorporating in the Ordinance to our Constitution the provisions of Public Act No. 300 of the Congress of the United States, approved August 7, 1939, commonly known as the Philippine Economic Adjustment Act. Under the provisions of section 7 of the aforesaid Act, the amendments to section 6 of Public Act No. 127 of the Congress of the United States, approved March 24, 1934, will not go into effect until after the President of the United States has certified that the Philippine Government has enacted, subsequent to the adoption of the amendments to the Constitution above indicated, the necessary legislation imposing the export taxes provided for in said Act. It is unnecessary for me to dwell upon the benefits which the Philippines will derive from the enforcement of the provisions of the Economic Adjustment Act. Official cognizance of these benefits has already been taken, when you approved Resolution No. 39 proposing the incorporation of the provisions of the aforesaid Act in the Ordinance appended to our Constitution and the people of the Philippines, in the plebiscite specially called for the purpose, ratified your action in the premises. In view thereof, I recommend consideration by the National Assembly in its current special session of the necessary legislation to this end.

I, likewise, recommend the consideration by you of the necessary legislation to provide for the allocation of the quotas which, under the provisions of the Philippine Economic Adjustment Act, are assigned to the Philippines. The manner of the allocation of such quotas is defined and fixed in the Act, but the office which will take charge of such allocation is not determined therein. It is essential that such an office be organized at an early date because the quota provisions of the Act of Congress of August 7, 1939 will take effect on January 1, 1940.

In pursuance of the provisions of Article VI, section 12, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, I hereby certify to the necessity of the immediate enactment of legislation to carry out the above recommendations.

Respectfully,

Message of President Quezon on Improvement and Stabilization of the Abaca Industry, November 25, 1939

MESSAGE

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

IMPROVEMENT AND STABILIZATION OF THE ABACA INDUSTRY

[Sent to Mr. Pedro Sabido, manager of the National Abacá and Other Filler Corporation, on the occasion of the conference of the abacá producers, at Legaspi, Albay, on November 25, 1939.]

The chairman of the board and manager of the National Abacá and Other Fiber Corporation, Mr. Sabido, informed me that on November 26 there would be a meeting of all abaca producers of the Bicol region in the provincial government building of Albay, convoked by the management of the corporation to discuss, among other things, the terms and conditions of the contract governing the relations between the corporation and the abaca producers.

I have always been interested in the improvement and stabilization of the abaca industry. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to reiterate that interest and also transmit the interesting news that the National Abaca and Other Fiber Corporation, which was created by Commonwealth Act No. 332, is duly organized. I have just authorized the release of P2,550,000, which constitutes the initial payment of the sum of P10,250,000 subscribed by the Commonwealth Government.

I expect that the precarious situation of the Filipino abaca producer will be alleviated with the organization of the abacá corporation. The corporation was not organized for purposes of profit. Its principal objective is to help the abacá producer and I shall consider its aim realized should the producer, with its intervention, be able to obtain a reasonable and just compensation out of his investment and energy to give his family a decent and happy life without loss of money to the corporation.

I placed at the head of the corporation the man whom I consider, under the present circumstances, to be the best prepared to assume the great responsibility which the firm involves. Nothing can be gained, however, without your loyal, sincere and honest coöperation. Do not entertain any fear or suspicion. The corporation was organized to render you a service, not to exploit you.

It is necessary to have faith in it and in the men who are managing it. You should organize yourselves as soon as possible on the basis of common interest, which is the improvement of the abacá industry and elimination of undue manipulations of economic laws so that you may obtain from your product the price to which you are entitled in accordance with quotations of the market abroad.

Abacá is one of the basic industries of economy of the country. I wish to assure you that the Government will not spare all the support necessary to place it on a stable and beneficial basis for the producer.

I wish you all success and good luck.

Manuel L. Quezon, Sixth State of the Nation Address, January 22, 1940

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On the The State of the Nation

[Delivered at the Opening of the Second Session in the Assembly Hall, Legislative Building, Manila on January 22, 1940]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

You are convened at a time when many countries of the world are in the throes of war. The agonies which the nations involved in the conflict are suffering cannot but touch our hearts deeply. We sympathize with their sad fate and we pray to God that the tragic ordeal may soon come to an end. No nation, however far removed from the struggle, can escape its disturbing effects. Even we are experiencing the inevitable consequences of this war in the way of reduced trade with the warring nations and their neighbors, increased transportation and insurance rates, depressed prices for export commodities, and other intangible effects which result from a stoppage or a drastic limitation of world trade. Withal, we are fortunate that we are at peace and that it is the policy of the United States to stay out of the war. With that policy we are in full accord.

The United States Congress, in its last session, passed a neutrality law defining the obligations of the United States towards the belligerent nations and prescribing, limitations upon commercial intercourse between them and the peoples living under the American flag. The Philippines is bound by that Neutrality Act, and our Government and people are fully cooperating with the United States Government in its strict enforcement. It is our good fortune to have in these very critical times, His Excellency, Francis B. Sayre, as United States High Commissioner to the Philippines. He is a scholar, a diplomat and a statesman. [Applause.] During the last three years he has been engaged in the study and consideration of our problems as Chairman of the United States Inter-Departmental Committee and of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs. No one has labored more than he did in securing the approval by the Congress of the United States of the Economic Adjustment Act. He merits our gratitude for that signal service.

All the requirements prescribed by Congress for the effectiveness of the Economic Adjustment Act have been fulfilled. The Act, therefore, is now in full effect and all the agencies necessary for its enforcement have been set up. The quotas for different products provided in the Act have been allocated. It is my purpose to submit to you at an early date a definite proposal to permit the Government to lay the groundwork for the economic conference that is to be held at least, two years before the establishment of the Philippine Republic.

In your last special session, you approved laws to protect the people against profiteering during these war times, and to insure for the country a steady and sufficient supply of prime necessities and the continued operation of farms and factories. To accomplish the first aim, maximum prices for the most important commodities have been fixed and are being enforced. To attain the second purpose, the National Trading Corporation with a capital stock of P5,000,000 has been organized. A detailed report on these matters will be submitted to the National Assembly as required by law.

Pursuant to the provisions of Commonwealth Act No. 453, I have effected a reorganization of the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture and Commerce, and Labor. The National Information Board was abolished as a separate entity and converted into a division of the Department of the Interior. The activities of the various bureaus and offices under the Department of Agriculture and Commerce were properly coordinated, thus avoiding the overlapping of functions. The Bureau of Labor was abolished, and its work distributed among the various divisions of the Department, performing identical functions. The Division of Immigration was reorganized and its personnel increased with funds appropriated under Commonwealth Act No. 501.

We are making progress, however slowly, in our determination to raise the masses of our people to a position of relative ease. But our task is an extremely difficult one. Capital in the Philippines does not as yet seem to fully realize its obligations to labor and to society, and it will be necessary for you to enact after due investigation further labor legislations that will secure for the underpaid laborers higher wages and better living conditions, especially in the mining and sugar industries. [Applause.].

I regret that there are some labor leaders who insist upon resorting to strikes as the proper and best means of obtaining recognition of labor rights. Where, as in the Philippines today, the Government is earnestly endeavoring to help labor in its just claims, strikes are unnecessary and unjustified. Although the right to strike is recognized by law, strikes are, by their nature, a form of coercion, and once coercion is used by one party in a conflict, it provokes retaliation by the other party. Hence, strikes often result in physical violence, sabotage, and public disorder. When such a situation arises, the Government is compelled to intervene, and when the Government intervenes to suppress violence and restore public order, it has to act swiftly under circumstances that often inflict loss or injury upon innocent parties.

Moreover, experience shows that the cost of strikes both to capital and labor in terms of financial losses, physical and moral suffering, and otherwise is enormous. Such loss, directly or indirectly, is shared by the whole community. Strikes should not, therefore, be used except as a last resort, for the settlement of industrial and agrarian disputes or for securing recognition of the rights of labor. Arbitration or adjudication by the Court of Industrial Relations has been found to be less wasteful and more expedient procedure for securing substantial justice. In any event, when a strike is declared, the use of violence or sabotage, by either side, will not be countenanced by the Government.

Our policy to acquire large haciendas with a view to their sale in small parcels to the peasants who work them and to purchase urban land to provide homes for the poor on easy terms is being effectuated. But here again we are met with serious difficulties in some instances, coming either from selfish and greedy landowners or from irresponsible and dishonest agitators. In the Hacienda de Buenavista in Bulacan, for a long time a focus of unrest and disturbances, some of the tenants who have been made to believe that they could become the owners of the land without paying for it, are as yet not fully convinced that they have been deceived, and instead of welcoming the help of the Government, are either refusing to agree to the plan devised for the ultimate transfer to them of their landholdings, or in some other way trying to frustrate the plan. The management of the Hacienda, although carrying out the plan with firm determination, is showing extreme patience, because it is believed that these misguided people will sooner or later realize that we are seeking only their best interests and will then lend their full cooperation to the plan.

The Government has already purchased large parcels of land for homesites in Marikina, Rizal; San Pedro Tunasan, Laguna; and Dinalupihan, Bataan. Steps are being taken to expropriate the homesites in Malabon, Rizal. These purchases comprise lands owned by some corporations where people in large numbers have built their houses. We are trying to free these communities from the grip of absentee landlordism and to help them become owners of their homes, under terms and conditions that they can bear.

It is in the City of Manila where we are confronted with the most serious situation. Here the largest number of industrial workers live. Here, too, unemployment is at its worst. Individuals with no stable occupation but who can find work only occasionally, abound. The result is that in several sections of the city—Intramuros, Tondo, Sampaloc—there are many slums where the poor live under conditions totally unfit for human beings, crowded together in small quarters without sufficient ventilation or sanitary facilities.

In an effort to relieve Manila of a part of its congested population that can conveniently go to live in Quezon City, we have purchased a large parcel of land, known as the Hacienda de Diliman, with an area of about 1,600 hectares. The plan is to offer to government officials, especially the small salaried employees and laborers, for sale or rent, lots where they can build, or have the Government build, their homes. In the subdivision of this land there will be portions which may be acquired by private individuals, both the rich and those of moderate means. There will also be sections set aside for industrial establishments. This project which we have placed under a most capable management, at no cost to the Government, is in process of execution. Roads are being constructed and lots subdivided; model houses are being built and in due time the lots and the houses will be ready for sale. But this project cannot by any means solve the problem of the slums, nor provide decent homes for all the poor living in the City of Manila and its vicinity. In the first place, Diliman is too far for those laborers who work in or around Intramuros and Tondo. In the second place, if all the people residing in the overcrowded districts were to go to Diliman, there would not be sufficient room for them. From the reclaimed area in the North Fort, fifty hectares or 500,000 square meters will be reserved for the fishermen of Tondo, Pasay, and Baclaran, as well as for laborers in the water-front. But even with this plan, which will be in the course of execution next year, we shall not be able completely to do away with the slums or to have all the residents of this city live under proper sanitary conditions.

We must expropriate more land. Fortunately, there is more than enough unoccupied land within the radius of the city itself and its immediate surroundings that can be used for this purpose. But the prices of these lands have been unjustly boosted by their owners. The increase of population and the public improvements made by the Government are being taken advantage of by these land profiteers to exploit the public. These lands have been held unimproved all these many years. Their owners have valued them for purposes of taxation at incomprehensibly low prices, and now for lands that are assessed at four centavos per square meter, the owners are exacting from the Government or private individuals a price of three, four and even more pesos per square meter. This should not be tolerated.

While it is our purpose to maintain inviolate the right, of private property, we must not pay more than what is just compensation therefore, taking into consideration the value at which the property has been assessed upon the owner's own declaration or with his consent. I recommend, therefore, that the Assessment Law be amended by providing that whenever an assessment is made for the purpose of imposing the real property tax and the same is not protested by the owner thereof, within a specified period after receiving notice of the assessment, said owner will be deemed to have agreed and accepted the valuation as the just and fair value of his property, and that, in case of expropriation proceedings by the Government or its instrumentalities, the assessment shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the value of the property. I likewise desire to submit to your consideration the need of imposing special assessment tax upon real property that have greatly appreciated in value as a result of the construction by the National Government of roads or other public improvements. The owners of such properties have no right to enjoy the extraordinary rise in value or the increase in the income, without contributing proportionately to the cost of said improvements.

There are many cases involving the ejectment of poor people who have built small houses on unimproved lands with the consent of the owners thereof. Because of the construction of public improvements, the value of these lands has risen suddenly and the owners are demanding prices which are far beyond the ability of their tenants to pay. It is cruel to permit the ejection of these poor people and to have their houses destroyed, thus leaving them without shelter. The National Assembly should consider the advisability of amending the existing law regulating ejectment proceedings so as to protect such tenants by prohibiting their ejectment until the Government has had opportunity to take care of them.

Unemployment continues to be one of the main problems of the Government, and that problem, in all likelihood, will confront us for some time to come. For the purpose of assisting the Secretary of Labor in the study of this matter, I have created an Advisory Board on Unemployment; and, as an aid to the solution of the problem, or at least to prevent its aggravation, I recommend the enactment of immigration laws that will place limitations upon foreign immigration thus protecting Filipino labor from alien competition. We should, however, do away with the existing discrimination against Orientals, it being unjust and unfair to close our door to races which are akin to ours.

The fiscal operations of the Government during the past year have been satisfactory. Revenues have exceeded ordinary expenditures during the last fiscal period by P6,928,977.45, although this excess and a part of the accumulated surplus were used to cover extraordinary or nonrecurring expenses amounting to P23,927,909.43. Actual collections exceeded budgetary estimates in the amount of P5,323,573.66. The condition of the excise tax fund will be reported to you in a separate message. The public debt has been reduced as required by law and is now only P79,582,982.84, as compared to P95,076,798.27 in 1935. This public debt will be more than amply covered from the proceeds of export taxes provided in the Independence Act, accruing before 1946. In addition to this public debt, however, the Manila Railroad Company has an outstanding obligation in the amount of P26,472,000 for which no sinking funds are being provided. In order to protect the credit of one of our most important enterprises, the Government will have to assume the payment of this debt maturing in 1956. I recommend that the National Assembly consider a plan establishing a sinking fund for these obligations from the proceeds of the excise tax in the event the Manila Railroad Company is unable to provide therefore.

The business corporations of the Government have been operated efficiently and in the public interest. While the National Food Products Corporation is still operating at a loss, the Cebu Portland Cement Company, the Insular Refining Company, the Manila Port Terminal, and the National Bank have all made substantial profits during the past year. The National Development Company has also made a profit from its own operations as well as from its operations as a holding company.

The Agricultural and Industrial Bank has been organized and is now in operation. The main purpose of this bank is to help agriculture and industry, chiefly in the establishment of new industries, the production of new crops and the extension of cultivation and diversification of products in farm areas.

The National Power Corporation has decided to undertake the development of the Caliraya water project. The construction of this project is under way. The bonds issued by the corporation to finance this enterprise were oversubscribed.

The exploration of our oil resources is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible and within a few months the geological survey will be completed. As soon as the result of the survey is available, it will be time to decide whether drilling operations should be undertaken by the Government or by responsible private companies.

The Government has been giving impetus to the organization of cooperatives for consumers, producers, and small merchants to eliminate middlemen and needless entrepreneurs. This form of economic organization has been successful in other countries, and I can see no reason why it will not meet with the same success in the Philippines. It will probably take time to educate our people on the value of cooperative effort, with the discipline and intelligent collaboration required by that method of economic endeavor. We have to contend with the apathy prevailing in certain groups as well as with old practices and traditions which are both uneconomic and otherwise undesirable. But I have faith that these difficulties will be overcome. The successful operation of these cooperatives will aid in a great measure in the solution of our economic problems and in the ultimate stabilization of our national economy.

Retailers' cooperatives are being organized in Manila and in the provinces. The Buenavista Cooperative is in operation. The shoemakers of Marikina and neighboring municipalities have likewise been organized into a cooperative association to permit them to own and operate the industry themselves. It is my opinion that the same thing might be done with regard to hat-makers. The Hemp Corporation is undertaking the organization of cooperatives among hemp producers. The same thing will be done with respect to coconut producers.

The coconut industry has long been suffering from depressed prices. This is partly due to inefficient methods of curing copra, lack of credit facilities, and faulty system of marketing. It is also attributable to the failure to utilize the by-products of the coconut. In view of the authorization granted in the Economic Adjustment Act, permitting the use of this excise tax on coconut oil for the purpose of improving the curing of copra and the granting of crop loans to coconut producers, I recommend that the National Assembly pass a law allowing the organization of a corporation for these purposes. [Applause.]

The tobacco industry is going through a most critical period; both in the factories and in the fields. Prices for leaf tobacco are even now not sufficient to insure reasonable returns to farmers, and with the gradual loss of foreign markets, the situation will aggravate. Cigar makers are suffering from low wages, partly because we have not been able to find enough markets for our high-priced cigars.

The Government is undertaking a serious study looking to a solution of the problems confronting this industry, and I recommend that you consider the advisability of authorizing the creation of a tobacco corporation that will provide credit to farmers, aid in the proper curing of leaf tobacco, improve the quality of tobacco and cigars, and stimulate the production of cigarette tobacco. This corporation, when organized, could take over the duties assigned to the Tobacco Board in the investment and disposition of the funds collected from inspection fees. The Warehousing Corporation has under construction eleven warehouses for rice, copra, hemp, and tobacco, and others are being planned. The purpose of these warehouses is to provide storing facilities for producers, meantime permitting them to obtain credit on the security of their crops.

The Koronadal land settlement project in Mindanao has been started. There are now approximately 2,000 men in that territory. More are going at the rate of 250 every month. An irrigation system has been built and experiments have been conducted covering different crops. The results thus far have been most encouraging, and the program for this year is to place, under cultivation in that area, no less than 3,009 hectares. Everything is being done to safeguard the health and well-being of the settlers.

I wish to invite attention to the economic adjustment projects recommended in the report of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs. Some of these projects are in process of execution; others are still in an experimental stage or under study. In order to properly carry out the plan to promote new crops and greater diversification of products, it is necessary, as recommended by the Joint Preparatory Committee, that we establish, as soon as possible, adequate agricultural, experimental and demonstration stations. The existing stations, maintained entirely with funds contributed by provinces and municipalities, are inadequate. It is not possible to conduct experiments in so many stations which are insufficiently financed. Moreover, the necessary trained men for the operations of these stations are not available. I recommend that the National Government assume full responsibility of establishing and operating experimental and demonstration stations in carefully selected places in order that the experiments and demonstrations may be conducted on a more scientific and systematic basis.

Closely allied with the problem of economic adjustment is the question of scientific research. I desire to reiterate my recommendation in a previous message to the National Assembly to consolidate all the agencies of the Government engaged in scientific research into one scientific research institute, using the Bureau of Science as a nucleus for the purpose. The expenses for its operation may be covered with the funds appropriated for the Bureau of Science and the other agencies of the Government dealing in research. This project has been strongly recommended both by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and by the National Economic Council in view of the report submitted by Dr. Raymond Bacon who was employed by the Government to study this matter.

It is necessary to expand the activities of the Bureau of Commerce to enable it to cope with the increasing demands of our growing trade. Division for the promotion of exports and for the stimulation of local trade should be organized in that bureau. To protect the rights of inventors and manufacturers, a patent office should be established.

One of the most important but neglected industries is our fishing industry. To enable the Government effectively to promote this industry and to exercise the necessary supervision and control over the same, I propose the conversion of the present Fish and Game Administration Division into a bureau under the Department of Agriculture and Commerce.

It is hardly necessary to emphasize the importance of organizing an office to collect and compile statistical data for the use of the Government and the public. The Census Commission, after it has completed its work, should be converted into a permanent bureau to render that service.

Many public improvements authorized by the National Assembly were accomplished during the year that has just ended. First-class roads were increased by 208 kilometers, second-class roads by 878 kilometers, and third-class roads by 854 kilometers, thus making a total of 21,166.1 kilometers for all classes of roads, of which 10,310.4 are national roads and 10,805.7 provincial roads. Many public buildings were erected, including 386 school houses.

Our system of transportation has been greatly improved and extended. The railroad to the Bicol provinces has been completed and opened to traffic. Many bridges and port facilities have been built, and new boats have been added to the coastwise and interisland shipping. The number of ships under Philippine registry engaged in overseas trade has increased, and three new ocean-going steamers are now in the service. This fact should be a source of satisfaction and benefit for our country, not only because it will permit the carrying of the Filipino flag to distant lands, but also because it will help in insuring sufficient bottoms to carry our exports to foreign markets, particularly during the present emergency. The Government, however, is not contemplating the acquisition or operation at least during the next few years, of ocean-going steamers.

The Department of National Defense, created by Commonwealth Act No. 432, was organized, effective November 1, 1939. This new department has executive supervision over the Philippine Army, the Bureau of Aeronautics, the Bureau of Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Philippine Nautical School and over the establishment and operation of all radio stations other than those maintained by the Bureau of Posts. As the appropriation used by this new Department for the current fiscal year was taken from the forced savings in salaries and wages and sundry expenses of bureaus and offices under the Office of the President, it is recommended that adequate appropriation be provided for this Department for the coming fiscal year.

There are at present 363 officers and 3,735 men in the regular army and 4,829 officers and 104,412 men in the reserve. This shows that the youth of the land have responded patriotically to the call of duty and indicates how much has been accomplished in the execution of the National Defense Program.

Substantial progress is being made in public sanitation and in providing the poor with medical service. But there are still a number of provinces that do not count with proper hospital facilities. With the aid of the National Government, a more generalized program of hospital construction is being gradually carried out.

More funds should be appropriated for the care and protection of the under-privileged—the aged and infirm, the dependent and the destitute, as well as the neglected and the delinquent, the physically and the mentally handicapped children.

The extension of opportunities for public education to all children of school age continues to be one of the major problems of the Government. Despite the opening of 3,600 extension classes and the construction of new buildings, there are still many children of school age out of school. The difficulty of the problem lies not so much in the shortage of funds as in the insufficiency of professionally-trained teachers. I have appointed a Joint Educational Survey Committee for the purpose of studying and recommending a solution for the recurring school crisis.

Greater importance is being given to character and civic education and the fostering of patriotism among the children and the youth. For this purpose, a code of citizenship and ethics has been promulgated and courses of study on character and civic education are being revised.

There is a growing popular response to the work of the Office of Adult Education as shown by the fact that there are now over 4,000 schools for adult citizens.

The survey conducted by the Board of Regents with the advice of two outstanding educators from the United States on the needs and problems of the University of the Philippines has been completed, and many of the recommendations are being put into effect. The transfer of the institution to the new site in Quezon City will proceed as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

In order to meet the need of our industries for technological service, it is advisable that we increase the number of government scholarships abroad. From the appropriation at our disposal, we are able to grant only twenty scholarships every year. The better to carry out our program of economic development, this number should be increased.

For the first time in our judicial history the Supreme Court has brought its docket up to date, while the Court of Appeals is fast moving to clear its own calendar of cases. The Supreme Court has not only decided many important questions but also enunciated constitutional doctrines that have far-reaching effect. In addition to this noteworthy accomplishment, the Court has recently promulgated the Rules of Court, which constitutes a revision of our procedural laws designed to expedite litigation and to render less expensive but more efficient the administration of justice.

As a consequence of the enactment of Commonwealth Act No. 177, carrying out the Constitutional mandate to extend the merit system to all branches and subdivisions of the Government, the selection of employees, not only in the national but also in the local governments, has been based on the merit system and practically all government employees are new in the classified civil service. All positions in the Government have been classified and salaries standardized as required by the Salary Law.

The volume of work in the Office of our Resident Commissioner at Washington is continually increasing as a result of the supervision of that Office of the various interests and activities of the Commonwealth Government in the United States. Whereas in the past the work of the Resident Commissioner was limited to his congressional duties, it has become necessary since the establishment of the Commonwealth to entrust him with other duties as the representative of our Government in America. He has to supervise the work of the insular purchasing agent and the tobacco agent, take charge of matters relative to government pensionados, disseminate accurate information about the Philippines, promote Philippine trade, and look after the interests of Filipinos residing in the United States and territories. It is recommended that the appropriation for the Office of the Resident Commissioner be increased sufficiently to enable it to discharge efficiently these new duties and responsibilities.

The provinces, cities, and municipalities have maintained a sound financial position. The revenue laws recently passed by the National Assembly will increase their income by approximately P10,000,000 which will be twice as much as they used to receive from the cedula tax. The municipalities, however, are meeting serious difficulties in balancing their school budget. The total estimated deficit of municipalities for current expenditures in the school fund is around P500,000. This deficit could be met by the repeal of the provision of the new Real Property Assessment Law reducing to 50 per cent the valuation of coconut, hemp and other similar improvements. There is no justification for such a provision, considering that there is now being undertaken a revision of property values which is the best means for a proper assessment. This conclusion becomes more evident when it is considered that some provinces have only recently reduced the assessment of such improvements adjusting it to present conditions, as in the case of the Provinces of Tayabas and Laguna. I urgently recommend that the National Assembly take early action repealing that provision.

On September 15, 1939, the National Assembly adopted a resolution proposing important amendments to the Constitution. I refer to the amendments establishing a bicameral legislature, changing the tenure of office of the President and the Vice-President, creating an independent Commission on Elections, and fixing a compensation for Senators and Representatives higher than that now received by the members of the National Assembly. By Commonwealth Act No. 492, it is provided that these amendments shall be submitted to the people for their ratification at the next general election for local officials. After hearing the views of provincial and municipal officials and the members of the Council of State, as well as other persons who have no partisan interest, I deem it my duty to recommend that the law be amended so as to authorize the holding of a plebiscite on these amendments on a date different from that fixed for the election of provincial and municipal officials. While this may entail more expenses for the Government, I believe that the change is imperative from the standpoint of public interest.

The proposed constitutional amendments are in effect a revision of the present Constitution, and the resolution proposing the same clearly contemplates that they should be submitted to the people in an integrated form. The amendments so affect the entire document and in this sense are so interrelated as to preclude any manner of having them voted upon separately or severally.

The importance of these amendments requires that they be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection squarely and without the introduction of extraneous and irrelevant issues, and this would be impossible if the plebiscite were held on the same date as that set for the next regular election of local officers. The proposed amendments affect only the national Government and should be acted upon by the voters independently of local political interests or considerations.

The conquest and subjugation of formerly independent nations, the invasion by strong powers of insufficiently defended territories, the not infrequent disregard of international covenants and laws have of late caused great anxiety in the minds of many people both in the United States and in the Philippines, and not a few of them are raising the question whether it is the part of wisdom to carry out the plan already agreed upon of establishing the Philippine Republic in 1946.

No one can feel more keenly than I do the responsibility for the future of our people. The sacred duty of leading our Government through these first years of preparation for an independent national existence has fallen to my lot, and I have tried to discover by every means at my disposal if there be any compelling reason why the plan as decreed by the Congress of the United States and accepted by us should not be put through. I am of the opinion that the international situation has not developed to a point where anyone can predict what the fate of small nations will be in the years to come.

In the discussion of a possible change in the program of independence embodied in the Independence Act, it is important to bear in mind the following considerations:

First. That the Government of the United States will not consider favorably any proposal merely to postpone the granting of independence beyond 1946, meanwhile continuing the present political and economic set-up in the relations between America and the Philippines.

Second. That if the Filipino people are unwilling or afraid to assume the responsibilities of independent nationhood by 1946, their only alternative is to petition Congress to declare the Philippines permanently as American territory.

Third. That America will not assume the obligation to protect the independence and territorial integrity of the Philippines against foreign aggression.

In the face of these considerations, the question for us to decide is whether because of the uncertainty of the future of small nations, we should abandon the idea of becoming independent.

I am unalterably opposed to the prolongation of the present political set-up beyond 1946 [Applause], because I believe that it is not conducive to our best interests. On the other hand, we cannot consider permanent political relationship with America except on the basis that the Philippines would at least have full and complete power over immigration, imports, exports, currency and related financial subjects, as well as the right to conclude commercial treaties with other nations, without being subjected to the supervision and control of the United States. [Applause.] This, I am quite certain, is not feasible, considering the present state of public opinion in America.

It would be utopian to believe confidently that the Philippines would not be exposed to foreign aggression, once we cease to be under the protection of the American flag. But, if we want to have the untrammelled right to govern ourselves as we think best for our own welfare, we must assume the responsibilities that go hand in hand with that right. [Applause.] That means that we shall have to depend upon ourselves and take our chance exactly as every independent nation had to do.

We hope for the best. We shall promote friendly relations with other nations and be mindful of their rights. We shall endeavor to protect and defend our national integrity and independence to the limit of our means. We know not what the future has in store for us, but we have faith in a just God who presides over the destinies of nations, and who alone holds our fate. [Applause.] We cannot falter in the attainment of our long-cherished Ideal. We must secure a place, however modest, in the concert of free nations. [Applause.]

Manuel L. Quezon, Seventh State of the Nation Address, January 31, 1941

Message
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Second National Assembly
On the State of the Nation

[Delivered at the Opening of the Third Session in the Assembly Hall, Legislative Building, Manila on January 31, 1941]

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

This session of the Second National Assembly is of unusual significance. It is not only held at a time when momentous events are vitally affecting the destiny of nations, but it marks the culmination of a legislative epoch which commenced with the inauguration of the Commonwealth. During these five years constructive measures were passed by the National Assembly which have enabled the new government to function smoothly and to render invaluable service to the country. But more has been done. You have initiated amendments to our Constitution designed to strengthen the foundation of our democratic institutions and to insure their stability and permanence. And because of such a splendid record the members of the National Assembly have merited the lasting gratitude of our people.

As this body is about to pass into history by reason of the recent amendments to the Constitution creating a new bicameral legislature to be known as the Congress of the Philippines, I desire to express my deep gratification at the manner in which the members of this Assembly have dealt with the many important public questions requiring their attention. I take particular pleasure in acknowledging the valuable cooperation which you have accorded me in the administration of the affairs of the Commonwealth. Fortunately, we are still free from the armed conflicts now raging in several parts of the world, and let us hope that we may be spared the destructive effects of such conflicts. But our fate in this respect is linked with that of the United States. We are placed in that position not only by the very nature of our political relationship with that great nation, but by our common faith in democracy and by every noble impulse that animates our people.

In these times of stress, our national security is naturally the greatest concern of our government, and we are doing all we can in this respect. But it must be admitted that with our own resources alone we are not now in a position to defend ourselves.

The Government of the United States has embarked upon a program of national defense which, we earnestly hope, includes the Philippines; for, under the terms of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, the defense of our country remains primarily the responsibility of the United States. This is as it should be, because so long as we are under the American flag it rests exclusively with the United States, and not with us, to determine whether we shall be at peace or at war. The Filipino people, desirous of cooperating with the United States in the execution of this defense program, are ready to bear their full share of that responsibility. To this end, I have assured the Government of the United States, in behalf of the Commonwealth, that the entire Philippines—its man power and material resources—are at the disposal of the United States in the present emergency.

In my eagerness to expedite the organization of our national defense in cooperation with the United States and in the absence of available funds in the public treasury for that purpose, I have made representations to the Washington authorities requesting that the funds, declared by the Congress of the United States to be payable to the Philippine Commonwealth from the sugar excise tax collections and from profits derived from the devaluation of the American dollar, be appropriated to be spent exclusively for our national defense under the direction of the United States. I have assurances that this matter is being given serious consideration.

As you already know, the people of the United States have reelected President Franklin Delano Roosevelt for another term of four years. This outcome of the presidential election has brought joy to the people of the Philippines because the Filipino people are confident that the United States will pursue a policy which will insure for that country and for ours the continued enjoyment of peace under a regime of liberty and democracy. I wish, on this solemn occasion, to reiterate our loyalty to America and our unswerving faith in the leadership of her great President.

The constitutional amendments initiated by this body and ratified by our people, which have for their object the broadening of the democratic base of our government, have received the unqualified approval of the President of the United States. The sympathetic consideration given to these amendments by President Roosevelt could not but arouse a deep feeling of gratitude on the part of our people. By the same token, our faith in, and loyalty to, the United States have been strengthened even more.

The approval of the amendments constitutes another recognition of the principle that, in matters purely domestic, the will of our people should prevail. This principle, which we have always maintained, had been gradually accepted by the Government of the United States and fully embodied in the Tydings-McDuffie Act. It is now the basic foundation upon which American-Philippine relations rest.

I want to take advantage of this opportunity to congratulate your distinguished Speaker upon the successful outcome of his recent mission to the United States. Speaker Yulo has completely justified the confidence of our people in his patriotism and in his ability to perform this most important and delicate task. The unusually warm reception accorded him upon his return shows that the country fully appreciates the value of the work done by him.

Since the establishment of the Commonwealth Government, we have pursued a definite program designed to prepare our country for independence. This program was well under way at the outbreak of hostilities in Europe.

We completed the organization of the Commonwealth Government as contemplated by the Constitution. The new government has been functioning satisfactorily, and its varied activities have been extended in order better to serve the needs of the people.

We have adopted a plan of national defense for an independent Philippines. This plan is being carried out. Preparatory military training has been introduced in all elementary and high schools. In colleges and universities, instruction in military science for the training of reserve officers has been made compulsory. We have today a regular force consisting of 466 officers and 3,666 enlisted men excluding the Constabulary. This force has been organized to undertake the training of the annual levies of trainees and to engage in the study and planning of the most effective employment of our trained man-power in an emergency. Our total reserve force numbers 132,000 men organized into approximately 13 tactical divisions. The army and other national defense activities have been placed under the Department of National Defense, which was organized last year.

Steps have been taken for the promotion and encouragement of civil aviation and the safety of air navigation. The Government has either acquired or constructed airports and landing fields. We have also established a network of aeronautical radio and weather observation stations which has greatly facilitated air travel in this country.

The judicial branch of our government has undergone important changes designed to insure an efficient and speedy administration of justice.

The creation and organization of the Court of Appeals in 1936 relieved the Supreme Court of the task of attending to a large number of appealed cases, thus enabling it to devote more time to the consideration of cases involving important questions of law.

As a result of the work of the Court of Appeals, the determination of appealed cases has been greatly expedited. The dockets of both the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals are up-to-date.

In the exercise of its rule-making power and with a view to simplifying court procedure and reducing the cost of litigation, the Supreme Court has adopted new rules for all the courts in the Philippines.

In order to meet the increasing amount of court litigation brought about by the ever—expanding field of the law, the complexity of modern life, and the natural growth of population, the number of judges of first instance and of justices of the peace has been increased.

Our courts have been placed within the reach of the humblest citizen through the establishment of free legal aid services.

The masses of our population are more and more becoming aware that our courts are administering justice to the rich and the poor alike.

There has been a long-felt need of revising and codifying our substantive laws in order to make them conform to the customs, traditions and idiosyncrasies of our people and to adapt them to present day conditions. A Code Committee has been appointed to carry out that important task.

In order to improve the administration of our criminal laws, the provincial fiscal service has been reorganized and the Office of District Attorneys has been created for each of the nine judicial districts, excepting the city of Manila.

With a view to a better coordination of crime-investigation and prosecution, a Division of Investigation was created under the Department of Justice by Commonwealth Act No. 181. This Division is patterned after the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice. Its main duties are to help in the detection and prosecution of crimes and to acquire, collect, classify and preserve criminal identification records.

We have made reforms in our penal administration, the most significant of which have been the introduction of vocational training for our prisoners and the individualization of corrective treatment. A new insular penitentiary has been opened in Muntinlupa, Rizal, and this has afforded the insular prisoners greater opportunity for self-improvement.

The Public Service Commission has been instrumental in maintaining fair and reasonable rates for light, gas, and transportation services in Manila and in the provinces.

In order to regulate the issuance of, and trading in, securities, made necessary by the mining boom of 1935 and 1936, we created the Securities and Exchange Commission. Through its operation, investors are afforded protection in speculative ventures and against fraudulent schemes.

To reduce the evils resulting from the establishment and operation of certain kinds of amusement centers, I have promulgated rules and regulations in accordance with Commonwealth Act No. 601.

Social justice has been a major aim of our government during the last five years. To accomplish this objective, we have, among other things, set a minimum wage scale in public works, created the Court of Industrial Relations to settle labor-capital disputes, organized the National Land Settlement Administration to help the poorer classes transfer from congested districts to unoccupied areas, purchased haciendas to be subdivided and resold to the tenants, embarked on housing schemes for workers and low-salaried employees, intensified the campaign against usury, revised the system of taxation so that the tax burden would be borne by those best able to carry it, passed legislations to protect the rights of tenants, appointed officials to defend the poor, encouraged the organization of associations for marketing and purchasing among producers and consumers, and extended aid and credit to small farmers and businessmen.

Noteworthy progress has been made in the opening of settlement projects under the National Land Settlement Administration. Organized less than two years ago, the National Land Settlement Administration has established the Koronadal Valley Project in Cotabato, where some 14,000 people have settled, and has recently started the Mallig Plains Project in Isabela, covering 66,000 hectares of the Cagayan Valley.

To date, the National Land Settlement Administration has spent about P1,500,000 of the P20,000,000 capital authorized by Commonwealth Act No. 441 from the coconut oil excise tax funds. Of the amount disbursed, about half a million pesos has been given to the settlers as loans. The National Land Settlement Administration expects, within five years, to develop four or five other settlement projects along the broad lines of Koronadal, and to distribute land to about a hundred thousand settlers.

The Rural Progress Administration has been established to assist the landless in acquiring lands and homes of their own. It has already purchased several estates and homesites, among which are: the Bahay Pari Estate in Pampanga, the Marikina Homesite in Rizal, the Tunasan Homesite in Laguna, and the Dinalupihan Homesite in Bataan.

In addition to these haciendas and homesites, the Government has leased the Buenavista Estate in Bulacan. It is a matter of satisfaction to note that whereas before misapprehension and distrust prevailed among the tenants in that Estate, now there is harmony and better understanding. There is evident willingness on the part of these people to pay their rents and to cooperate with the Government in its efforts to ameliorate conditions. As the Estate progresses, it approaches the status of an independent cooperative farm.

To provide suitable homes for our working population, we have organized the People's Homesite Corporation, with an initial capital of P2,000,000, which has taken over Diliman District bordering Manila in order to convert it into a model workers' community. Hundreds of model houses for laborers and low-salaried employees have been constructed.

The eagerness with which the people have responded to the opportunity of acquiring their own houses has been very gratifying, and the People's Homesite Corporation has plans for the construction of more houses.

Besides cash loans, the Government has extended loans in the form of rice to needy tenant farmers. This work of extending credit facilities to tenants and small farmers has been placed under the administration of the Philippine National Bank, and the amount of P1,000,000 has been released for this purpose from the emergency funds.

The organized efforts of the Government to give public assistance to victims of public disasters were exerted as early as 1934 with the creation of the Board of Relief under the provisions of Act No. 4160. To further promote the security of the masses, this Board was reorganized on August 19, 1940, with the creation of the National Social Security Administration. To this new agency have been entrusted wider functions so that, in addition to giving relief to victims of public disasters, it is rendering assistance to the unemployed and studying the whole problem of unemployment in the Philippines.

Since public works projects offer at present the most practicable means of aiding the unemployed, I have issued Executive Order No. 307 requiring that the only criterion for obtaining work in these projects shall be the need of employment and fitness for it and that no regard shall be paid whatsoever to political affiliation or religious creed.

From January 1, 1934, to June 20, 1940, a total of P3,591,008.81 was spent for relief in the forms of food, clothing, medicines, building materials, and seedlings.

The Philippine Rice Share Tenancy Act, enacted in 1933, was not put in operation until 1936, with such amendments as were necessary to hasten the solution of the tenancy conflicts arising out of the division of crops. As a result of the vigilant enforcement of this law, tenancy conflicts have been reduced, and there is growing disposition among landlords and tenants to settle their differences amicably.

Disputes between capital and labor have arisen now and then, but such disputes have been fortunately free from the sharp violence and bitter antagonisms that generally characterize such clashes in other places. We have helped labor fight for its rights and we have protected these rights against unjust encroachment. This has resulted in mutual respect and understanding between capital and labor, and has contributed to the promotion of social welfare.

The Court of Industrial Relations has been a potent factor in maintaining industrial peace. Its accomplishments are to a large extent identified with the substantial gains of labor, including the fixing of the scale of wages at fairer levels, the reduction of working hours, the recognition of the right of collective bargaining, and the payment for overtime work. These gains have been reflected in improved working and housing conditions, in better sanitary facilities, in better terms of employment, and, in general, in the material, physical and moral well-being of the working classes.

The functioning of the industrial court has shown that the interests of labor and capital are compatible with one another and that- conflicts between them can be adjusted without the necessity of resorting to strikes, lockouts, or other coercive measures.

Peace and order has been maintained. No disturbance of a serious nature has arisen to require drastic action by the authorities. Where municipal police forces proved inadequate to cope with a threatened situation, the constabulary has always been ready to maintain peace and order.

For the first time a general election for local officials was held last December under the direction and Supervision of the Commission on Elections. The efficient and orderly manner in which the election was conducted proved the wisdom of creating such an independent commission.

With the abolition of the Bureau of Non-Christian Tribes in 1936, the Office of the Commissioner for Mindanao and Sulu was created to assist the Secretary of the Interior in the development work in Mindanao, and to look after the interests of the special provinces. In the five specially organized provinces, we have, whenever possible, followed the policy of placing natives in responsible executive positions. Townsites have been established, and sites for agricultural colonies properly located. The construction of roads, waterworks, port works, and other public improvements has been extensively undertaken in Mindanao.

The benefits of sanitation have been extended to all parts of the country. Because of rigid sanitary and quarantine measures, the Philippines has been spared from the ravages of dreaded epidemic diseases, such as cholera, plague, and smallpox, which have been afflicting neighboring countries.

Medical aid has been increased, specially for the poor. Hospital, dispensary and other medical facilities have been substantially increased. Twelve new hospitals and 939 public dispensaries have been organized; and 500 charity clinic physicians and 95 charity clinic dentists have been employed to render free medical and dental services.

Greater stress has been given to safeguarding the health of infants and mothers. While in 1935 we had only 196, we now have 319 puericulture centers.

Measures for the protection of the health of industrial workers have also been adopted and enforced. The campaign against common diseases has been intensified. To reduce tuberculosis incidence, we have established the Quezon Institute. Malaria and other major diseases have also received attention. Seven malaria control units are today in operation.

Besides the leprosarium at Culion, funds have been provided for the establishment and operation of other leprosaria in different parts of the country. Of the new regional leprosaria, the largest, the Central Luzon Leprosarium, has already been opened.

A public health laboratory with modern facilities has been organized. An Institute of Hygiene has been established. The system of medical instruction in the University of the Philippines has been improved and funds for the establishment of postgraduate courses have been made available. The Philippine General Hospital has been reorganized and enlarged with the addition of several wards, including a unit for the treatment and study of cancer, for which a building is now being constructed.

A separate Department of Health and Welfare has been organized with a view to effecting a better coordination of public health and sanitation, welfare, and related services.

In the last six years, the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes has distributed a total of P7,611,230.43 to charitable health and civic institutions and organizations such as the Philippine Tuberculosis Society, the Associated Charities, national and provincial hospitals, puericulture centers, charity clinics, the Philippine Amateur Athletic Federation, the National Federation of Women's Clubs, the Boy and Girls Scout organizations—and for the maintenance of such activities as malaria control work and the repatriation of Filipinos from the war zones in China and Europe. Besides, it has distributed P939,102.42 to cities and provinces.

In our public schools now numbering 12,000, we have admitted about 800,000 additional pupils, so that today more than 2,000,000 pupils are in attendance. To insure proper support and a more rapid extension of elementary education, the National Government has assumed responsibility for the maintenance and operation of elementary schools. This reform has made possible a more efficient coordination of school finances and the full utilization of the services of teachers, and has offered increased opportunity for elementary education throughout the country.

The curricula have been revised. Character education and citizenship training have been stressed and special efforts made to develop a greater appreciation of Philippine culture. Attention was also focused on vocational education by establishing new vocational schools and by giving vocational courses in academic high schools. Considerable progress in athletics has been made as shown by a general improvement in the physique of our youth.

The needs and problems of the University of the Philippines have been surveyed by a committee of the Board of Regents with the advice of two outstanding educators from the United States. The recommendations of the committee are being considered, and some have been put into effect. The reorganization of the University of the Philippines has been largely carried out. Commonwealth Act No. 442 was enacted directing the transfer of the University of the Philippines to a site outside of the City of Manila. Three buildings are nearing completion and the work on the plans for all the necessary buildings is proceeding as rapidly as circumstances permit.

With the extension in 1936 of government supervision over all private educational institutions issuing diplomas or conferring degrees, as provided in Commonwealth Act No. 180, the quality of instruction in private schools has shown general improvement. The Government has encouraged private initiative in education, but at the same time, it has adopted the necessary safeguards to protect the public interest, and to carry out the educational aims enunciated in the Constitution. Through closer supervision by the Office of Private Education, the number of competent instructors has grown, school libraries have been expanded and laboratory equipment and facilities improved. The various government boards of examiners act as technical advisory committees to the Office of Private Education and cooperate with the various institutions to coordinate government licensing examinations with teaching.

We organized the Institute of National Language to evolve a common language for our people adopting Tagalog as the basis. The Institute has completed a grammar and is now preparing a dictionary. We are gradually introducing the teaching of the national language in the public and private schools.

We have established a system of adult education. During the past four years 6,069 adult schools have been opened with more than 50,000 volunteer citizens helping in the eradication of illiteracy and the teaching of citizenship and the stimulation of vocational competence. Up to December 31, 1940, these schools had an enrolment of 581,307 adults, men and women. Over 2,500,000 copies of publications on adult education have been distributed.

To supplement instruction in the schools, the facilities of public and school libraries have been expanded. The National Library has established branches in different provinces and its facilities have been made available to an increasing number of people. Its Filipiniana collection has been enriched. Recently we acquired the Blumentritt collection on the life and writings of Rizal. Letters of Rizal have been collected and published.

Roads with a combined length of 6,979 kilometers were built which increased the total length of roads to 22,959 kilometers. Particular attention was directed to the opening of new roads and highways in Mindanao to accelerate the economic development and settlement of that region. The important parts of the island are now linked by a network of roads with a total length of 3,878 kilometers, of which 1,811 kilometers were constructed during the Commonwealth period.

The construction of concrete pavements on national roads has been undertaken. We have today 362 kilometers of cement roads. Supplementing our road-building program, the sum of over P7,500,000 was spent for the construction of bridges. We have now 33 new bridges in process of construction costing more than P4,662,000.

Another important phase of our public works program was the construction of 2,362 buildings costing about P11,000,000.

During the last five years there were constructed in the provinces a total of 134 waterworks systems and 492 artesian wells at a total cost of P5,300,000. These water systems and artesian wells are serving some 876,292 people with potable water.

Projects for flood and river control costing P14,586,413 have been carried out in various provinces.

For the maintenance and improvement of our ports and the construction and expansion of port facilities, we have spent about P19,500,000. These improvements have gone far in promoting foreign and inter-island trade.

Impetus has been given to coastwise navigation which constitutes the principal means of communication between the different parts of the archipelago. Nine new steamers, 19 motor ships, and more than 1,000 sailing vessels and motor launches were put in operation. Most of these steamers and motor ships were built specially for tropical use and are provided with comfortable accommodations for all classes of passengers.

The Government has given special attention to the entry of Philippine shipping firms in the ocean-going trade. It has extended credit and other facilities to several Philippine firms which enabled them to acquire ten steamers and motor vessels with a total gross tonnage of 57,236. One of these companies also chartered twelve foreign vessels which, under Filipino management and control, carry a considerable portion of our overseas trade.

With the completion of the Tayabas-Legaspi section of its main Southern Line, the Manila Railroad Company has been enabled to maintain through train operation between Manila and Albay.

To avoid unnecessary duplication of services, the company has entered into joint passenger traffic arrangements with private bus companies so that today practically all important points of Luzon can be reached by the combined train and bus lines. Wherever necessary, the company maintains its own feeder bus service. In order to foster tourist trade and to accommodate its patrons and other travellers, the company has adopted plans for the establishment of a chain of hotels throughout the country. Two new hotels are now in operation: one in Tagaytay City and another in Legaspi, Albay.

The construction of radio stations at strategic and important points has received considerable attention. Eighteen stations have been erected at Ilagan, Isabela; Larap, Camarines Norte; Port Holland and Punta Flecha, Zamboanga; Brooke Point and Binalauan, Taytay, in the province of Palawan, and other places.

No efforts have been spared to protect and promote agriculture and commerce.

We have eliminated locust infestation and reduced destruction by other pests. The introduction of dangerous plant diseases into the country has been checked through a rigid plant quarantine service.

Control of animal diseases through quarantine and vaccination has, likewise, been effected. Since 1938 no case of rinderpest has been registered.

Fishing laws and regulations are more strictly enforced. Various fishery stations have been opened and adequate facilities have been provided, as well as personnel to study the propagation of needed fish varieties.

The survey and subdivision of public lands has been expedited to have lots ready for settlers and to insure the equitable distribution of public lands by preventing the acquisition of big landholdings.

Through an extensive soil and agronomical survey now being undertaken, we shall soon be in a position to determine the physical, chemical and biological properties of our agricultural areas and thus secure the data essential to scientific agricultural planning and land cultivation.

The production of gold and silver has been more than doubled and that of base metals has risen from almost nothing to about one—tenth of the total mineral production in 1940.

To insure a continuous supply of timber and help solve the problems of soil protection, water conservation and flood control, new forest reserves, communal forests and national parks have been established and barren watersheds reforested with economically valuable trees.

The Bureau of Science has successfully undertaken experiments on the utilization of the by-products of some of our industries. As a result of these researches, factories for the manufacture of paints, varnishes, roofing tiles and other industrial products from local raw materials have been established.

The National Research Council has stimulated comprehensive projects of scientific research. As an advisory body, the Council has drawn the attention of both the Government and private enterprises to important activities requiring technical knowledge. It has catalogued our scientific and technical resources for use in any intensive scientific work.

Our farmers have received assistance in the marketing of their products. Through the help of the National Produce Exchange, many producers in the different provinces, mostly small individual farmers and cooperative associations, have been able to dispose of their products without passing through middle-men, thus giving them better returns for their crops.

Activities for the promotion of foreign and domestic trade have been intensified. A new Foreign Trade Division in the Bureau of Commerce has been organized to develop foreign markets and promote the sale of Philippine products abroad. Since 1939 National Foreign Trade Week has been observed annually in order to arouse wider public interest both here and in the United States in Philippine-American trade. A direct cablegraphic price quotation service from New York has made possible the daily publication and broadcasting of price quotations on all important staple products of the Philippines. The Bureau of Commerce has also helped our businessmen in establishing new business connections locally and with foreign countries and in getting useful information.

Filipino participation in the retail trade of the country has increased from between 15 to 20 per cent at the time of the inauguration of the Commonwealth to approximately 37 per cent in 1939. Filipinos now outnumber the merchants of other nationalities in the local retail trade and control a greater number of retail stores.

In its desire to broaden the base of taxation and shift the tax load to those best able to pay, the Government has approved a series of measures, now embodied in the National Internal Revenue Code, to create new sources of income by increasing taxes on inheritance, income, and articles of luxury, and by imposing taxes on amusement and other activities. The code has established a more equitable tax system and provided a more adequate machinery against tax evasion or avoidance. Its adoption has resulted in a substantial increase in revenues, which, however, has been upset by present depressed business conditions. The loss of revenues occasioned by the abolition in 1937 of the cedula tax was more than offset by the new taxes.

The trend in public revenues during the last five years is shown by the following figures. The internal revenue collections rose from P46,971,774.93 in 1935 to P73,354,896.60 in 1937, the year of the mining boom; collections fell to P66,301,810.61 in 1938, but rose again to P69,331,641.20 in 1939, and, despite the beginning of hostilities in Europe, reached a peak of P74,858,920.31 for the fiscal year 1940, when the Internal Revenue Code went into effect. Customs collections showed a similar trend. Collections rose from P24,477,176.63 in 1935 to P32,125,389.93 in 1937, then declined to P28,529,012.11 in 1938 and to P25,582,985.21 in 1939. Unlike internal revenue collections, however, which rose to a new high in 1940, customs collections for that fiscal year—which amounted only to P27,270,275.90, because of the paralyzation of our trade with some of the warring nations—fell below the 1937 level.

Provincial and municipal finances have been in sound condition. At the end of the fiscal year 1940, provincial governments had an unexpended surplus of P3,127,204.09 and the municipal governments, P1,104,524.04. Various laws such as the new municipal autonomy act, the new assessment law, and the Internal Revenue Code have further strengthened the financial position of the provinces and municipalities and enabled them to meet their obligations more adequately. The change in the supervision over the finances of our local governments, placing provincial, municipal and city treasurers and provincial and city assessors under the Department of Finance, has resulted in a unified collection service and greater efficiency.

In addition to the resources of the Philippine National Bank, we have made available to the public with the creation of the Agricultural and Industrial Bank P25,000,000 which constitutes its initial capital.

A direct result of the combined operation of these banks has been the scaling down of the rate of interest on loans, which has enabled the small farmer and industrialist to secure the needed protection and encouragement to carry on their operations under adverse conditions.

During the last five years there has been a steady increase in the resources of our banks due mainly to the growth of bank deposits which rose to about P30,000,000.

On the inauguration of the Commonwealth, the total indebtedness assumed by the new government from the old regime amounted to P154,364,700 against which a sinking fund reserve of P59,287,901.73 had been accumulated, thereby leaving a net indebtedness of P95,076,798.27. Since the establishment of the Commonwealth up to December 31, 1940, new bonds in the total par amount of P5,392,300 had been issued, but on August 1, 1939, Public Works bonds issued on August 1, 1909, amounting to P3,000,000, were retired, thereby leaving a net issue of P2,392,300. The sinking fund reserve increased from P59,287,901.73 in November, 1935, to P75,980,484.01 at the end of the calendar year 1940. The status of the public debt as of December 31, 1940, was as follows:

Bonds of the National Government (proper)	P128,450,000.00
Collateral Bonds of the National Government, secured by bonds of the Provincial, Municipal and City Gov- ernments	P17,387,000.00
Provincial, Municipal and city Government bonds er direct issue	P 2,920,000.00
Total bonded indebtedness of all classes	P148,757,000.000
Total sinking fund reserve,.....	P75,980,484.01
Net bonded indebtedness of all classes	P 72,776,515.99

The above figures show that during the Commonwealth régime through December, 1940, the gross and net indebtedness of the Government were reduced by P5,607,700 and P22,300,282.28, respectively.

Besides these bonds of the Government proper, there were also sold P6,000,000 worth of bonds of the National Power Corporation created by Commonwealth Act No. 120, the principal and interest of which are guaranteed by the Government.

The Manila Railroad Company has also outstanding bonds amounting to P28,718,000.00. We have taken steps to enable this company to redeem its outstanding bonds upon maturity. For this purpose the National Assembly last year appropriated P7,000,000 from the Coconut Oil Excise Tax Fund. The present program of the Government contemplates further yearly appropriations from this same Fund until the total bonded debt of the Manila Railroad Company is fully covered.

The currency circulation of the Philippines during this period showed an upward tendency from 1935 to 1938, but began to decline thereafter as may be seen from the following figures:

1935 (Average from November 14 to December 31, 1935) P114,648,486.98

1936 (Average) 164,524,168.76

1937 (Average) 181,203,519.52

1938 (Average) 207,465,286.45

1939 (Average) 199,044,925.28

1940 (Average) 181,251,052.08

The decline in circulation began in 1939, when the present war in Europe started. Owing to the marked increase in freight and insurance rates, and to the prevailing low prices of our export commodities, there resulted a scarcity of export bills which are the main source of supply of the dollar balances abroad of local banks. To replenish depletion of said balances and to cover payments for Philippine imports, local banks had to resort to heavy purchases of exchange in Manila and New York. These sales of exchange affected the monetary circulation of the Philippines for the reason that, under the law, currency tendered for the purchase of said exchange had to be retired from circulation.

The legal minimum reserve requirement has been maintained since the establishment of the Commonwealth as shown in the following statement:

Year (December 31)	Total Government Circulation	15 Per cent Minimum of Government Circulation	25 Per cent Maximum of Government Circulation
1935	125,521,489.49	18,828,223.42	31,380,372.37
1936	152,383,173.68	22,857,476.05	38,095,798.42
1937	167,791,600.05	25,168,740.01	41,947,900.01
1938	197,429,811.57	29,614,471.74	49,357,452.89
1939	196,371,784.86	29,455,767.73	49,092,496.22
1940	186,018,426.65	27,902,764.00	46,504,606.66

The Treasury Certificate Fund constitutes the reserve for the redemption at par of all outstanding treasury certificates. This fund is always maintained to the amount of 100 per cent of all treasury certificates issued and outstanding. The fund is constituted exclusively of Philippine silver pesos, half-silver pesos, and of dollar deposits in the United States. The status of this fund for the period covered by the Commonwealth régime to December 31, 1940, was as follows:

Year (Dec. 31) Total Treasury

Certificates Cash Balance

Outstanding of the Fund

1935	_____	P106,369,706.00	P106,369,706.00
1936	_____	132,155,000.00	132,155,000.00
1937	_____	145,333,275.00	145,333,275.00
1938	_____	174,763,462.00	174,763,462.00
1939	_____	173,611,590.00	173,611,590.00

As early as 1937 efforts were made to readjust our trade relations with the United States through a revision of the economic provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act. The Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs was organized and after two years of continuous work, it submitted a comprehensive report which served as the basis for the Philippine Economic Adjustment Act.

To carry out the main recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, steps have been taken to reorganize the national economy by encouraging modern methods of production; by increasing the yield of land through scientific farming; by extending credit facilities to merchants and producers; by lessening the cost of distribution so as to increase the share of the producer; and by providing gainful occupations for farmers who would otherwise remain unproductive during the greater part of the year.

In the development of our agriculture, we have stressed crop diversification and the adjustment of farm production so as to bring about as much as possible self-sufficiency in articles of prime necessity, and the production of raw materials to develop domestic industries and of products that can be marketed abroad under competitive conditions.

The National Assembly passed Commonwealth Act No. 565 providing for the organization of cooperative associations. Pursuant to the provisions of this Act, all government activities of that nature were placed under the National Trading Corporation. Progress has been made in organizing cooperatives among producers, consumers, and small merchants throughout the country, with a view to improving the economic condition of the masses.

Realizing the need of drawing up a program for the readjustment and rehabilitation of the sugar industry, the Government has provided under Commonwealth Act No. 567 a new method of taxing centrifugal Sugar mills and owners of leased sugar lands. The Purpose of this law is to place the industry in a position to maintain itself despite the gradual loss of its preferential position in the American market; to readjust the benefits derived from it by redistributing them more equitably among the elements concerned; and to give laborers employed in the industry a living wage and improved living conditions. Research is being undertaken to increase the yield, reduce the cost of production, and propagate better varieties of sugar cane, and to utilize its by-products.

Since the retroactive imposition of the tax on leased lands would have caused hardships and difficulties to the taxpayers, the operation of this provision of the law was suspended for the 1939-40 agricultural year. Similarly, I decided to waive the imposition of the additional progressive tax on sugar mills for the same agricultural year, as upon investigation it was shown that the exaction of such tax during that period, would be confiscatory and oppressive.

The National Development Company and its subsidiaries have continued developing new industries. The policy laid down for these companies is not to enter into those fields which could well be left to private capital and initiative.

The National Rice and Corn Corporation has been able to keep the price of rice within the reach of consumers, while at the same time stimulating continued production. In carrying out its activities, the National Rice and Corn Corporation has given preferential attention to regions where its services are most needed.

The National Rice and Corn Corporation has carried on research work on longer storage of rice and the utilization of by-products.

The National Warehousing Corporation has been organized. Warehouses have been built for rice, abaca, copra and hemp in different sections of the Philippines, and it is expected that these warehouses will give farmers an opportunity to store their crops while waiting for favorable prices.

The National Footwear Corporation was established to help the footwear industry. This corporation has entered into a financial agreement with the National Footwear Cooperative Association composed of shoemakers of Marikina and other towns of Rizal, as a result of which, shoemakers and laborers now receive higher wages and are supplied with materials at reasonable prices.

The Cebu Portland Cement Company has been operating profitably. This company had completed plans to establish a factory for the manufacture of cement-asbestos roofing to replace galvanized iron. This project, however, has been suspended in view of the offer made by a private company to establish and operate such a factory.

The National Development Company has also helped in the financing of a cellulose factory for the production of cellulose from sugar-cane bagasse. It is believed that the successful operation of this factory will help in the readjustment of the sugar industry besides producing an article which now finds a ready market in many parts of the world.

The Cotton Textile Factory was established in 1939. At the beginning it operated 10,000 spindles and 104 looms. Recently, the factory has been expanded and is now operating 20,000 spindles and 500 looms, together with a finishing plant for bleaching, dyeing, printing and finishing work.

The National Food Products Corporation has now under way the establishment of a cannery in Capiz, in addition to the cannery previously set up in Guagua. The Corporation is financing the construction of 5,000 hectares of fishponds under contract with private landowners.

In order to improve interisland shipping and to aid in the establishment of a Philippine ocean—going merchant marine, the National Development Company has financed the construction of a modern coastwise vessel and three ocean-going ships. These vessels are now in the service and the commitments of the operators concerning interest and amortizations of the money invested by the Government have been fully met.

One of the many activities of the National Development Company during the last two years has been to effect the exploration of mineral deposits in the Philippines in cooperation with the Bureau of Mines. With the aid of experienced geologists from the United States some known petroleum-bearing areas have been explored as well as areas containing strategic minerals and other minerals needed for our industrial requirements.

I have authorized the expenditure of P500,000 for the drilling for oil in several places.

The exploration of the Surigao iron deposit has been completed. In relation to this deposit, the National Development Company has had experiments made in the United States and Europe to determine the best process that should be adopted for the most economical utilization of the ore. Exploration of coal deposits has shown that several sections can be commercially operated. The Cebu Portland Cement Company is now exploiting the Uling coal mine in Cebu to its advantage.

The National Development Company is working a coal mine in Malangas in the Province of Zamboanga. With the output of this mine and of the Uling mine, it is believed that all the requirements of the Cebu Portland Cement Company and the Manila Railroad Company would be met eventually.

To increase the local consumption of sugar and to stabilize the market for refined sugar in the Philippines, the Government has acquired the refineries of the Insular Sugar Refining Corporation and the Malabon Sugar Company.

Pursuant to laws passed by the National Assembly, the National Abaca and Other Fibers Corporation, the National Coconut Corporation, and the National Tobacco Corporation have been duly organized and are now in operation.

With the increased appropriations authorized by you last year, the office of the Resident Commissioner in Washington has been reorganized and now counts with a competent staff to handle all matters affecting our interests in the United States. The work of Resident Commissioner Elizalde in reorganizing that office and in developing it to its present efficiency is worthy of commendation.

The consolidation of the auditing and accounting services of the National Government was effected under the General Auditing Office. Whether or not this arrangement is conducive to greater efficiency or economy and should be made permanent, is as yet difficult to determine. Supervision by the General Auditing Office has been extended to public service companies and charitable institutions, and this has redounded to the public good, since through its findings, the Public Service Commission was enabled to scale down public utility rates to fairer levels.

Since the inauguration of the Commonwealth, the constitutional precept requiring a civil service based on merit and fitness has been adhered to. This policy has been extended to embrace almost all positions in the public service.

To better insure uniformity of action, the determination of administrative cases has been placed in the Bureau of Civil Service and the Civil Service Board of Appeals.

Although the work has not yet been completed, considerable headway has been made in the classification and standardization of positions in the civil service in accordance with Commonwealth Act No. 402.

To provide some measure of economic security for government employees, the Government Service Insurance System has been established.

The growth of the System may be seen from the increase in the total amount of insurance from P45,919,713 in 1937 to P69,150,418 in 1940. The income for the first year was P2,419,544.06 as against P3,891,574.15 in 1940. The reserves of the System have likewise grown from P2,108,136 in 1937 to P9,851,604 in 1940.

The System was able to declare and distribute among its members dividends in the total amount of P1,152,402, notwithstanding the fact that the reserves have been computed on the most conservative valuation standard known in actuarial science.

The creation of the Budget Commission as authorized by Commonwealth Act No. 5 has been justified by the results attained. The National Government has been able to maintain the principle underlying sound budgetary system that the ordinary operating expenses of the Government must be kept within its current income, except when a grave national emergency or a serious financial difficulty arises.

The Commission has been instrumental in effecting economy in the expenditure of authorized appropriations and special funds, in the coordination of various administrative services, and in avoiding the employment of unnecessary personnel.

The work of the Census Commission, for which the Assembly set aside a total of P3,600,000, is now almost completed. Some 35,000 persons cooperated in the task of compiling the data on the population of the Philippines. According to the result of the census, the population of the country on January 1, 1939, was 16,000,303. All reports on geography, agriculture, lands, forests, fisheries, mines, manufactures, construction, commerce, transportation, communication, and services are now in process of printing.

Control over immigration has been strengthened by the creation of an independent Bureau of Immigration, and the enactment of appropriate measures regulating the entry of aliens into the country. The port of Manila is now the only unlimited port of entry in the Philippines.

To increase the water supply, the Metropolitan Water District added the Ipo Dam to the Angat System at cost of P800,000, and also the Bicti-Novaliches Siphon Aqueduct costing P467,550. The water service was extended to Las Pinas which necessitated the construction of a 200,000-gallon elevated tank at Paranaque, Rizal, costing P31,000.

The District has completed the construction of a high pressure reservoir which safeguards filtered water from pollution. With the new Santa Ana Steel bridge, the dangers of a subaqueous pipe under the Pasig River have been eliminated.

To improve fire protection in Tondo, Caloocan, and Malabon, a 30-inch feeder main from Pureza street, to Antipolo street, Manila, was laid at a cost of P178,518.

The sewage system has been improved with the initial execution of a ten-year program for the extension of pipes all over the city as far as Pasay, Rizal. The laying of a network of storm drains and the improvement of esteros have been undertaken with an appropriation of P2,000,000.

With the general reduction of the water and sewer rates and the elimination of the service maintenance charge, our rates are now among the lowest in the world.

The rapidly increasing population of the City of Manila-and the highly unsatisfactory conditions in the districts where the laborers live have constituted a problem which for a long time needed attention. To solve this problem, as well as to give an impetus to scientific community planning, Quezon City has been created, adjoining the City of Manila, and is now being developed as a model community.

The Government owns about one third of the 7335 hectares that comprise the City and can carry out this plan without the necessity of acquiring lands on a large scale for public purposes. Sites for parks, schools, markets, and other public buildings have been reserved and streets have been plotted wide enough to meet the needs of traffic. The new Capitol is now under construction at the end of a formal avenue 60 meters wide.

Government lands have been subdivided and are being sold to government employees and to the public for homesites on reasonable terms.

A zoning plan is in preparation under which business districts will be established in places planned for them, with adequate space for traffic and parking.

A new campus for the University of the Philippines has been laid out. It contains 490 hectares, large enough to meet the needs of the institution.

Buildings are now under construction in Quezon City for a proposed exposition. These buildings will serve to house agricultural and industrial exhibitions in the future.

A comprehensive study of the park and recreational problems of the Philippines is being made under the direction of the adviser on national parks assigned from the United States National Park Service. This study will include an inventory of the national scenic, historic and scientific resources of the country. From this inventory a selection will be made of those areas which offer the greatest recreational and inspirational values.

The national park office is cooperating with the Bureau of Forestry and the Bureau of Public Works in the preparation of master and layout plans to control the development of the park areas.

The national park office is encouraging provinces and municipalities to develop their own park and playground systems in order to take care of local recreational needs. All possible planning assistance will be offered to local authorities. Cooperative studies are now being made of a park and playground system for a greater Manila.

The economic repercussions of the present World War are being felt more and more acutely in the Philippines. Our trade with many nations has been reduced, prices for our export commodities have gone down, and freight and insurance rates have increased more than two hundred per cent. The result has been a decline in national income and purchasing power.

We are experiencing a marked decrease in our revenues, particularly in customs collections. But a drastic reduction of government expenditures at this time might not be advisable because it would tend to aggravate business conditions. It will be necessary, however, to readjust our expenditures and make use of our surplus reserves in order to prevent a deficit at the end of this fiscal year. I shall furnish you more details on the subject when I submit the budget for your consideration.

The depressing effects of the war on our economic and social conditions have been aggravated by the failure of the rice crop due to the drought in many sections of the country. The Department of Agriculture and Commerce and the National Rice and Corn Corporation have estimated a fall of about 20 per cent in our normal rice harvest.

We are thus confronted with the necessity of insuring a sufficient supply of rice and of helping people in our agrarian areas to find work which will tide them over until the next harvest. While before we could import the rice needed from Indo-China, Burma, and Thailand, we now encounter difficulties in obtaining rice from those countries. Fortunately, the National Rice and Corn Corporation has a carry-over stock of approximately 550,000 cavanos of rice which will be sufficient to cover the shortage in our stock for several months. I believe that any subsequent deficiency could well be filled by inducing our farmers to make a second planting of rice, particularly in those areas that can be irrigated.

Upon the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, I have authorized the expenditure from relief funds of the amount of P100,000 for the purchase of seeds to be loaned to farmers who want to plant rice, corn, mungo, and other food products. This plan, if it receives the cooperation of the people, will insure an adequate supply of rice and corn, and will provide tenants with work and means to carry on until next year. I have also authorized the granting of crop loans to these tenants from the emergency fund to defray the cost of planting and for the maintenance of their families until harvest time.

To give employment to those who have suffered from crop failures and to others who may need work, I have ordered the acceleration of public works projects already authorized. I feel that in times of stress, like the present, when private business and initiative are forced to limit the employment of laborers, the Government should take up the lag by expediting public works construction.

In order to reduce the harmful effects of droughts, I have directed the Department of Public Works and Communications to speed up irrigation projects.

Except for the adverse circumstances I have noted, the general conditions prevailing in the Philippines are satisfactory. We have been free from epidemics and other contagious diseases; peace and order has been maintained; litigations are being decided by the courts with greater speed; the school problem has been effectively met; and the relations between capital and labor are gradually being established on a more equitable basis. The people are showing confidence and faith in their Government and are making greater efforts to pay their taxes. We have, therefore, every reason to be gratified at the progress we have so far attained, in spite of the disturbing effects of the international situation.

In view of the present state of our revenues, I found it necessary to order the suspension of some projects not considered urgent. I have also approved the policy of restricting the filling of vacancies in the service and prohibiting increases in salary in the same position in the upper grades. I believe the time is not opportune for expanding the existing services or establishing new ones. There are, however, some pressing needs which it is my duty to bring to your attention.

The frequent failure of crops resulting from droughts demands that we construct more irrigation systems. Such constructions will provide employment for laborers during this period of widespread economic stress. In order to improve our fishing industry, I again recommend that the present Division of Fisheries of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce be converted into a Bureau of Fisheries and that a school of fisheries be established under the bureau.

We are feeling more than ever the need of bringing science to the aid of industry. I desire to reiterate my recommendation made at your last session to consolidate all the scientific research activities of the Government into one research institute.

To effect a more equitable distribution of land, the Public Land Law should be amended so as to prohibit any owner of one or more parcels of land from acquiring lands by homestead and free patents the total area of which, added to that of his own land, shall exceed 144 hectares.

I believe that it would be conducive to greater efficiency and economy to place all credit institutions under a supervisory agency in the Government. I, therefore, recommend that the duties now assigned to the Bureau of the Treasury relating to insurance companies, mutual aid associations, and trusts, be taken over by the Bureau of Banking and that you authorize the transfer to this Bureau of all the personnel of the Bureau of the Treasury assigned to those duties.

For some time we have been having difficulty in obtaining certain government supplies and materials from abroad at reasonable prices. In view of this, the Division of Purchase and Supply should be authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to purchase in advance of requisitions, supplies and materials that are regularly needed.

The Constitution provides that all educational institutions shall be under the supervision of, and subject to regulation by, the State. Commonwealth Act No. 180 places under the supervision of the Office of Private Education only private schools granting diplomas and certificates. I recommend that this Act be amended to conform fully to the provision of the Constitution by requiring that all private schools, irrespective of whether or not they grant diplomas or certificates, be supervised by the Office of Private Education.

I am informed that the Commission on Elections will submit for your consideration a proposal for the amendment of our election laws. I ask you to give careful consideration to this proposal, particularly in relation to the appointment of election inspectors. The present system, whereby election inspectors are appointed upon the nomination of political parties, does not insure an impartial attitude on the part of the inspectors in the performance of their duties.

The constitutional amendments shortening the Presidential term from six to four years and prescribing the tenure of the members of the Congress—four years for Representatives and six years for Senators, with one-third of the members of the Senate to be elected every two years—require the setting of a definite schedule for the holding of elections so that, including the election for provincial and municipal officials, they may not occur more than once every two years. To this end, I recommend that the term of office for elective local officials be changed from three to four years, effective after the next election.

The constitutional amendments recently approved require executory legislation, which, I trust, you will pass in due course. In this connection, I desire to invite your attention to the provisions of Article VI, Section 17, and of Article VII, Section 11 (2), of the Constitution, which contains inhibitions affecting members of the Congress and certain officers of the Executive Department. I recommend that proper legislation be passed at this session to implement these constitutional provisions and provide sanction against their violation.

Conditions all over the world have changed since the outbreak of the present war. This change is bound to retard our progress towards some of the economic and social objectives that we have set. But we cannot abandon these objectives. We must pursue them with greater determination even if their achievement should entail added sacrifice.

We cannot now foretell the situation that will arise in the world after the war and it inadvisable to adopt economic plans based on future conditions that might never materialize. In the meantime, we should continue to minister to the health and welfare of our masses, intensify our efforts to solve the unemployment problem, speed up the execution of our program of national defense, stimulate the increase of our national income, insure a sufficient supply of food and clothing for any eventuality, promote social justice, push forward the extension of our educational facilities and the advancement of our cultural life, and safeguard for all our people the proper exercise of individual rights.

Gentlemen of the National Assembly, these are fateful days in which we live. Vital forces are reshaping political and social institutions the world over. Fear and want are afflicting the human race. Men and women everywhere are scanning the future for security and a more promising life. In the midst of this great crisis, our duty is clear. By a solemn covenant with America, the advent of our national independence is assured. We must prepare for it; we must not procrastinate; we must not falter. Trusting in Divine Providence, we must move forward firmly and courageously to achieve our long-cherished ideal—the establishment of the Philippine Republic—and to secure for our people prosperity, happiness and freedom under the shelter of peace and democracy.

CREATION OF TWO TOWNS

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 1931, entitled “An Act to create the new municipalities of Isabela and Lamitan in the Province of Zamboanga.”

I had occasion to veto a similar bill (No. 1247) passed in your second session because of a certain defect in the bill. Although this defect has been eliminated from Bill No. 1931, I am constrained to veto the bill because of its adverse effect on the interests of the inhabitants living in the Island of Basilan.

It has been brought to my attention that the amount annually spent by the City of Zamboanga for the administration of the Island of Basilan and the necessary public improvements therein far exceeds the tax collections from the island. This shows that the revenue of Basilan is not sufficient for its proper administration and development. With the separation of the island from the City of Zamboanga through the creation of the municipalities of Isabela and Lamitan, a portion of the realty tax collections of the municipalities will have to go to the Province of Zamboanga, thus further adversely affecting its finances and jeopardizing its progress and welfare. At the present time, the City of Zamboanga has funds amounting to P160,000 borrowed from the Market and Water Works Board, of which some P30,000 has been allocated for the improvement of the waterworks in Isabela, in the Island of Basilan, which the island stands to lose upon its separation from the City of Zamboanga.

As the City of Zamboanga has only recently been created, it is still premature to determine the advisability of reducing the territorial limits of the city. If the Island of Basilan were separated from the City of Zamboanga with a view to restoring the two municipalities of Isabela and Lamitan, it would be preferable that the City of Zamboanga be dismembered altogether and all the former municipalities composing the city restored to the Province of Zamboanga.

Respectfully,

On the reduction of toll schedules

[Released in Manila, June 13, 1941]

REDUCTION OF TOLL SCHEDULES

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

I have today disapproved Bill No. 2217, entitled "An Act to further amend section one of Act Numbered Thirty-five Hundred," in view of the fact that the extension of the period for reimbursing the cost of construction of toll bridges from twenty to forty years would seriously affect the program of constructing revolving fund bridges under Act No. 3500. A proposed reduction by at least 50 per cent of the present schedules of tolls, as intended in the bill, would decrease proportionately the collections, and consequently it would permit only to a limited degree the construction of additional bridges which are financed from the accruals coming from toll collections. Furthermore, the increase in the period from twenty to forty years within which to reimburse the cost of bridges constructed under the said Act would only tend to increase the resulting cost of these bridges to the motoring public, because, by extending the period of collection, the total cost of such collection, as well as the total interest charges, would necessarily be increased. I find, therefore, no necessity for disturbing the twenty-year period prescribed in the present law which I consider to be a very liberal basis for financing revolving fund bridges.

RESTORATION OF OLD NAME

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

I have today disapproved Bill No. 2708, entitled “An Act to restore to the municipality of Luzuriaga, Province of Oriental Negros, its old name of Nueva Valencia,” for the reason that changing the names of municipalities would only create confusion in the records of real properties registered under the Land Registration Act and the Mortgage Law, as well as in the minds of the general public.

PUBLIC LAND ACT AMENDMENTS

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

I have today disapproved Bill No. 2788, entitled “An Act to amend sections sixty-seven and seventy-nine of Commonwealth Act Numbered One hundred and forty-one, commonly known as ‘The Public Land Act.’ “

Although I am in sympathy with the intention of the proposed amendment which is to benefit persons who have been occupying for residential purposes small parcels of public lands, it is believed that the approval of the proposed measure would only have the effect of legalizing the status of squatters on such lands. The practice of squatting on public lands has been found to be a fertile source of public land controversies, and I can not, therefore, give my approval to a bill that would encourage such a practice. On the other hand, vigorous measures should be taken to put a stop to this practice which, if tolerated, would only mean further delay in the prompt settlement of claims to public lands and cause the Government to incur unnecessary expenses in the administration thereof.

At any rate, I do not find any necessity for the approval of the proposed amendments, as the present Public Land Law contains ample provisions to safeguard the rights and interests of bona fide occupants of public lands, especially the applicants for small parcels of the public domain.

BONDS FOR MINDORO

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

I regret to inform you that I have today disapproved Bill No. 2237, entitled "An Act authorizing the Province of Mindoro to issue bonds for the purpose of providing fund for permanent improvements in said province."

This bill is one of those that I certified for the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution, upon the assumption naturally that before approving the bill, the National Assembly would bear in mind the net paying capacity of the Province of Mindoro. I am informed, however, by the Secretary of Finance, the Commissioner of the Budget, and the Treasurer of the Philippines that the net paying capacity of the Province of Mindoro is very much below the amount of P200,000 sought to be borrowed by the said province and for which bonds are intended to be floated to cover the loan.

In view thereof, I cannot give my approval to the proposed measure.

BONDS FOR CAGAYAN

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

Although I am in sympathy with the objective of Bill No. 2988, entitled "An Act authorizing the Province of Cagayan and the municipalities of Aparri, Lal-lo, and Camalaniugan to issue bonds for the purpose of providing funds for the construction of a water system in the said municipalities," I am constrained to veto it in view of the information furnished me by the Secretary of Finance, the Commissioner of the Budget and the Treasurer of the Philippines that the total net paying capacity of the Province of Cagayan and the municipalities of Aparri, Lal-lo, and Camalaniugan, after considering their present outstanding loans, and on the basis of their financial operations during the last four and one-half years, is very much below the amount of P520,000 sought to be borrowed by the entities through the issuance of bonds.

In this connection, it may be stated that although this is one of the bills that I certified for the purposes of Article VI, section 12, paragraph (2), of the Constitution, I did it under the assumption that the net paying capacity of the Province of Cagayan and the municipalities of Aparri, Lal-lo, and Camalaniugan would be taken into consideration by the National Assembly before approving the bill.

The following Message of His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon, President of the Philippines, was delivered over the radio from Malacañan Palace, Manila, on the occasion of the observance of Loyalty Day on the birthday of Jose Rizal, June 19, 1941:

MY FELLOW CITIZENS AND FRIENDS:

We have set aside this Loyalty Day to express the wholehearted and unswerving loyalty of all the elements of our population to the United States of America and to the Philippines, as well as to the great principles of liberty and democracy which are cherished by Americans and Filipinos alike. This enthusiastic demonstration is doubly significant because it is held upon the initiative of our laboring masses and their leaders who, in this manner, have sought to prove that their loyalty to our country is above their loyalty to any class, and to prove also their condemnation of communism and other political philosophies which are subversive of the present order under our Constitution. No more fitting day could have been chosen for this purpose than the anniversary of the birthday of Rizal, for the ideals and way of life for which he strove and died are the same as those for the defense of which we are ready to sacrifice our lives and our all.

I wish to speak to you today about the grave national emergency that we are facing. Events that are fast happening beyond our borders are rapidly and deeply affecting our lives and our fate. Nearly two-thirds of the peoples of the world are at war in three continents and the remaining one-third, including ourselves, is in some way already involved in the conflict. No greater ordeal has afflicted the human race since the dawn of civilization than that which it is going through now. Most of the democracies of Europe are already under the iron heels of military conquerors.

And the onward march of military conquest is proceeding relentlessly and with unabated speed. Britain remains alone fighting gallantly against tremendous odds to stave this march and to maintain the flame of liberty in those lands where western civilization was born and where it attained its highest development. Liberty itself and all the principles which we ourselves cherish and which are the foundations of our culture and political ideology are in the throes of agony threatened with extinction from the face of the earth.

The United States, faithful to her traditional policy of noninterference in the affairs of other continents, followed a course of strict neutrality at the beginning of the war. She not only adopted a policy of nonintervention but, through the Neutrality Act passed by Congress, took the necessary precautions to avoid incidents that might drag her into the conflict. Gradually, however, the people of America have sensed from the trend of world events a grave threat upon the security and future welfare of the western hemisphere. They have seen that the course of conquest undertaken by the totalitarian powers is designed to effect the domination of the whole world, to uproot democracy wherever it may be found, and to destroy the free way of life of the common man. This program was at first considered too astounding to merit serious concern, but not now, for later events have proven that the dictators are capable of achieving what many believed impossible, and even today are pursuing a course which clearly points to that goal.

President Roosevelt great and inspired leader with an unquenchable love for peace and liberty, fully comprehending the dangers which the totalitarian march of conquest has brought upon the western hemisphere and all the territories under the American flag, and to democracy everywhere, has aroused the American people to a keen consciousness of these dangers. With the approval of Congress, he has proclaimed the United States the arsenal of democracies fighting to maintain their liberties. In a recent address, he informed the peoples of America and of the whole world of the policies which the United States will follow in the present emergency, and the reasons for such policies. This address will go down in history as one of the most fateful documents of all times, and the decisions enunciated therein will, I believe, affect the destiny of mankind. No one who has read or heard that address can doubt the motives of America. No one can question her unselfish devotion to peace and democracy.

Now, my countrymen, what of the Philippines? What is our duty at present? What line of policy should we follow? What direction should the national efforts take? What is our stake in the present war?

We owe loyalty to America and we are bound to her by bonds of everlasting gratitude. Should the United States enter the war, the Philippines should follow her and fight by her side, placing at her disposal all our man power and material resources to help her in achieving victory, for the cause for which America would fight is our own cause.

The United States seeks to defend the principles which we cherish and without which we could not live as a free nation. She is striving to preserve liberty and democracy and individual freedom, and these are things for which we, too, would fight and die. The United States is struggling to prevent the domination of the world by dictators and we, too, would fight and die against such masters. The United States wants to uphold the rule of right and justice in international relations and to safeguard the independence of small nations, to free them from the fear of aggression and subjugation by military powers,—and we, too, would fight and die to save our country from such threats and perils. And so, if the United States decides to enter this war, it will be our war as much as the war of the United States, and her decision will be our decision. In such event, she will find all the people of this country to the last man on her side, fighting under her banner and praying to Almighty God for the victory of her arms.

Our stake in this war is more than the continued existence of democracy and individual freedom in the world. It is more than the maintenance of a free economy and free commercial intercourse among nations, and an unregimented social life. Our stake in this war is our own future independence and the assurance that that independence may endure.

I have endeavored to the full measure of our resources to hasten the execution of our national defense program. The United States, I am happy to inform you, is also doing everything to strengthen the military defenses of our country. I trust that very soon it will be possible for the Government of the United States to send us more planes and more guns and ammunition to increase our power of resistance against invasion. We only need more equipment and more supplies, for we have abundant man power. We have strong, intelligent young men who are eager to join the ranks for our defense and to uphold the principles which President Roosevelt has proclaimed to the world.

For the safety of our civilian population I have, jointly with the High Commissioner of the United States in the Philippines, established the Civilian Emergency Administration and called upon the men of the Philippines to enlist as volunteers to protect our homes, to track down spies and saboteurs, and to help minimize the damage and destruction which the enemy might inflict upon us. I urge upon our women the duty of coöperating in this civilian effort and to train themselves properly to give first aid to the wounded and those that may receive injury of any sort by enemy action.

These are times of stress and great danger. Every Filipino should awaken to the realities of the situation confronting us. Our first concern should be to insure an adequate food supply. The Government is trying to build up stocks of food that may be used to relieve shortages of such commodities. But these will not be sufficient, if our lines of communication with the United States are disrupted. We can only insure an adequate food supply at all times and in any emergency, by producing in our country all our requirements. This we can do. This we should do. I call upon all the people to bend their every effort to increase their production of food articles, particularly rice and corn, to avoid hunger and suffering among our population. Housewives should also look forward to the danger of shortage and, even now, should build up individual stocks in their homes to meet their needs in an emergency, and begin to avoid waste and economize on these supplies.

Labor and capital should likewise comprehend their duties and responsibilities in the present crisis. They should avoid conflicts that will stop production. Strikes are wasteful and I hope they will not be resorted to except in extreme cases and only after giving the agencies of the Government an opportunity to settle the controversy.

In order to finance our defense preparations, I have requested the President of the United States to make available to our Government the funds derived from the excise tax on Philippine sugar, as well as the funds accruing to our Government from the devaluation of the American dollar. I have assurances that this request is receiving sympathetic consideration by the American Government and I trust that favorable action will be taken thereon in the near future. Your Government has also been taking steps to obtain equipment and war materials from the United States under the Lend-Lease Act. It is my expectation that supplies will be given us through this method in increasing quantities.

The Commonwealth Government has been working in intimate collaboration with the United States High Commissioner and American military and naval authorities in the Philippines in relation to our national defense program, and I wish to make public my appreciation of the splendid spirit of coöperation which has been patent in all our dealings. Above all, I wish to express our gratitude for the interest which President Roosevelt and the American Government as a whole have shown in the defense of the Philippines.

I wish to close this address with the words of President Roosevelt in his proclamation declaring an unlimited national emergency, for these words convey the same call to duty which I should like to urge upon my fellow countrymen:

“I call upon all loyal citizens * * * to give precedence to the needs of the nation to the end that a system of government that makes private enterprise possible may survive. I call upon all loyal workmen, as well as employers, to merge their lesser differences in the larger effort to ensure the survival of the only kind of government which recognizes the rights of labor or capital.

“I call upon loyal local leaders and officials to coöperate with the civilian defense agencies of the United States to ensure our internal security against foreign-directed subversion, and to put every community in order for the maximum productive effort with a minimum of waste and unnecessary friction.

“I call upon all loyal citizens to place the nation’s needs first in mind and in action to the end that we may mobilize and have ready for instant defensive use all of the physical powers, all of the moral strength and all the materials and resources of this nation.”

GENTLEMEN OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY:

On December 8, 1941, the Congress of the United States declared a state of war to exist between the United States and the Imperial Government of Japan.

On behalf of our Government and people, I have on repeated occasions assured the President of the United States of our loyalty to America and our determination to place at her disposal all the man power and resources of our nation.

I now urge you to enact all the necessary legislation to meet the existing emergency. I particularly want you to appropriate all the available funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the care and protection of the civilian population which constitute our prime duty in the present emergency, for while the military defense of the Philippines is primarily the responsibility of America, the care and protection of the civilian population are the duty of the Government of the Commonwealth.

Let us lift our hearts to Heaven and place our trust in Him who rules over the destinies of nations.

The Constitution of a nation is the depository of the rights of the people.

So long as the letter of the Constitution is strictly adhered to, so long also may the people rest assured that their constitutional rights are properly protected.

A deviation from the letter and spirit of the Constitution is a violation of the faith of the people reposed in their constitutional representatives.

It is the primary duty of every public official to give the most careful consideration to the written provisions of the Constitution, and in case of doubt, that doubt must be decided in favor of a strict adherence to its provisions.

Letter of President Quezon to Honorable Pedro Magsalin, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the National Assembly, December 18, 1935

MALACAÑAN PALACE
MANILA

December 18, 1935

Hon. PEDRO MAGSALIN
Chairman, Judiciary Committee
National Assembly, Manila

MY DEAR ASSEMBLYMAN MAGSALIN :

In connection with the bill creating the Court of Appeals which is now the subject of study by your Committee, I wish to state that in order to permit a more thorough and careful selection of the members of that Court, I believe it wise, and therefore recommend, that the effectiveness of the Act be postponed until February 1, 1936. It should be clearly understood, however, that aside from this I see no other valid reason for postponing the effectivity of this law, since my own personal investigation of the condition of the docket of the Supreme Court has convinced me that the administration of justice will not suffer in any way if said law were made effective on January 1, 1936. On the other hand, it will bring about sooner the needed reform in our judiciary system so long felt and acknowledged by every one interested in the proper administration of justice in these Islands.

It should be remembered that in providing for the judicial department of the Government, the Constitution requires that a member of the Supreme Court must be a citizen of the Philippines for at least five years. Notwithstanding this provision, by virtue of section 4 of the Transitory Provisions, the American members of the Supreme Court may continue in office until the President shall appoint their successors, if such appointment is made within a period of one year from the date of the inauguration of the Commonwealth. The President, therefore, by his failure to make that appointment may even permit the American members of the Court to continue as such until they shall have reached the age limit provided by the Constitution. It is evident, however, that this provision has been embodied in the Constitution for one purpose only, and that is, to secure the normal functioning of the Government which otherwise might be seriously affected should the constitutional provisions be given immediate effect. Upon the President is placed the sole responsibility of determining how long should compliance with the letter and spirit of the basic provisions of the Constitution be suspended. As soon as the President shall have found that such application shall not result to the detriment of the public interest, it becomes his plain duty to enforce the Constitution to its fullest extent.

The Constitution of a nation is the depository of the rights of the people. It is the foundation of all constitutional forms of government. So long as the letter of the Constitution is strictly adhered to, so long also may the people rest assured that their constitutional rights are properly protected. A deviation from the letter and spirit of the Constitution is a violation of the faith of the people reposed in their constitutional representatives. Wherever any government has dared to deviate from the rules laid down in the Constitution for its operation, it has been found that the very existence of a constitutional government has been placed at great peril. It is, therefore, the primary duty of every public official to give the most careful consideration to the written provisions of the Constitution, and in case of doubt, that doubt must be decided in favor of a strict adherence to its provisions: As the first Chief Executive of this Commonwealth, my action in this respect will eventually serve as a precedent to my successors, and having pledged myself to defend and support the Constitution, it shall be my purpose in all my official actions to keep a strict observance of its letter and spirit.

It is for this reason that I have recommended to the National Assembly in a separate message the repeal of section 683 of the Administrative Code which makes it possible for the Chief Executive to make appointments without regard to civil service rules. While this provision which has been written in the Administrative Code for many years might be of useful application in some cases, the good which it may do is more than offset by the possible abuse that may result therefrom, and, not being clearly within the spirit of the constitutional provisions regarding the civil service, I have deemed it my duty to recommend its elimination from our statute books.

Having reached the conclusion, therefore, that the exercise of the discretion granted to me by the transitory provisions of the Constitution to retain the American members of the Supreme Court has ceased to be necessary to the public interest, I will be failing in my duty if I did not recommend strict compliance with the basic provisions of the Constitution. This being so, only personal considerations to the American members of the Supreme Court can justify their retention in the service. I do not believe that such personal considerations should be placed above the express mandate of our Constitution, especially as in their case, our Government has accorded them a generous treatment which no other government in the same financial condition as ours would have done to any of its officers or employees. As much as I appreciate the past services of these members of the Supreme Court, I have to recommend that their personal interest be subordinated to the weal of the nation.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Letter of President Quezon on Clerical Hire of National Assembly, January 2, 1936

LETTER OF THE
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON CLERICAL HIRE OF NATIONAL, ASSEMBLY

MALACAÑAN PALACE
MANILA

January 2, 1936

MY DEAR ASSEMBLYMAN MARABUT:

I have received your letter of December 24, 1935, together with your statement to the press regarding Bill No. 139, entitled "An Act to amend section two, letter B, of Act Numbered Four thousand one hundred eighty-seven as authorized and amended by section one of Act Numbered Four Thousand two hundred thirty-one, and for other purposes," and I am pleased to inform you that I have today signed the bill including the item which appropriates the sum of P294,000 for clerks of the members of the National Assembly.

I have noticed the criticism to which the Assembly has been subjected because of this item and I see that this criticism is founded upon a wrong premise—that this amount so appropriated for clerical hire means in effect an increase in the salary of the members of the Assembly. I suppose this is because there exists the impression that in the past, the appropriation for salaries of employees of individual members of the Legislature was not paid to employees, or if paid, only a very small part of it, the rest being retained by the members themselves.

I have signed the bill with this item knowing that this will not be the case hereafter, because the amount appropriated will have to go directly to the employees of the members of the Assembly and not a cent thereof may be diverted for other purposes, much less paid to the Assemblyman himself or retained by him. The Constitution of the Philippines and the very bill which I have signed, now Act No. 19, would be violated if any of this amount is retained by a member of the Assembly and the Assemblyman so acting would be subjected to criminal prosecution. I have approved, therefore, this item because I know that this money is going to be paid to the secretaries and other employees of the members of the Assembly and because I am convinced that in order that these members of the Assembly may perform their duties properly they need such help.

If our people want a democracy they must realize the importance of the legislative department. They must have confidence in the men whom they select to represent them in the National Assembly until by their own acts they lose the right to their confidence and trust. It is to the interest of the people that the legislative department do its work properly. It must be borne in mind that now we have only one House constituting the whole legislative department of the Government, and it is a tremendous responsibility that the members of the Assembly are carrying upon their shoulders. They must, therefore, have all the help that they need. Under the new organization of the House where the leadership has been transferred from the Chair to the floor and the committees, the need for steady and diligent work on the part of the members of the House is apparent. I am sure that it is not the intention of the members of the Assembly to circumvent the law and the Constitution by increasing their salaries through indirect means. If any such attempt were made there is power in the Executive to prevent it. Regardless of what we think of the salary now being provided by law for members of the Assembly, it is the duty of all to uphold the Constitution and not to permit its violation.

It is with the above understanding that I have given my approval to the bill.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on benefit payments to sugar planters of the Philippines affected by the Sugar Limitation Act of the United States Congress

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On benefit payments to sugar planters of the Philippines affected by the Sugar Limitation Act of the United States Congress

[Released on January 11, 1936]

My dear Mr. High Commissioner:

I am informed that several thousands of sugar planters have not yet received the full amount of benefit payment to which they are entitled the contracts which they have signed with the United States sugar authorities, in connection with the reduction of sugar production in the Philippines. The amount involved, I understand, is around $3,000,000 and the number of planters affected close to 15,000. While the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States may have affected the validity of the collection of the processing tax, it is believed that there exists a binding obligation on the part of the United States Government to reimburse all these planters with the losses which they have suffered by reason of the reduction of their crops in the amount which has been fixed by the United States Government itself. I would, therefore, urgently request that proper representation be made to your Government so that the rights of these planters may be properly protected.

With assurances of my highest esteem, I beg to be, Sir

Letter of President Quezon upon offering Judge Pedro Concepcion the Presidency of the Court of Appeals, January 30, 1936

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
UPON
OFFERING JUDGE PEDRO CONCEPCION THE PRESIDENCY OF THE COURT OF APPEALS

[January 30, 1936]

My dear Judge Concepcion:

Although I know that you already have decided to engage in your profession, and for which reason you have presented your resignation as Judge of the First Branch of the Court of First Instance of Manila, I consider your services in the judiciary still necessary, and I write you this letter to ask you to accept the appointment that desire to offer you.

My first intention was to appoint you to the Supreme Court, because for a long time now I have been of the opinion that you would constitute a valuable element in said Court, but upon finding myself confronted with the necessity of selecting a person to preside over the Court of Appeals that would not give rise to discussions on the wisdom of the designation, I have thought that I should select you, having in mind that the prestige you have acquired in the public esteem is sufficient guarantee to make the acceptance of the appointment unanimous. The importance of the Court of Appeals in our judicial organization is great. Many of the cases which before reached the Supreme Court will be finally decided by the Court of Appeals. The duties of the President of the Court of Appeals have, during the initial period, at least more importance than those of a mere justice of the Supreme Court, and for that reason I think you will be able to render a service of greater transcendence to the administration of justice as President of the Court of Appeals than if you formed part of the Supreme Court as one of its members.

This is the reason why I have thought of you for this post, and I would be grateful if you should consider its acceptance a duty. I understand that you are making a sacrifice by returning to the judiciary, but knowing your public spirit, I do not hesitate in thus calling upon you. As soon as your services in the Court of Appeals would no longer be necessary, you will be able again to apply for your retirement, or if there is an opportunity and you desire to go to the Supreme Court, I shall be greatly pleased to appoint you to said Court.

Cordially yours,

Letter of President Quezon on the termination of the contract between Manila Harbor Board and Manila Terminal Company, February 3, 1936

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the termination of the contract between Manila Harbor Board and Manila Terminal Company

[February 3, 1936]

My dear Secretary Quirino:

With reference to your action ordering the termination of the contract of the Manila Harbor Board with the Manila Terminal Co., which has been brought to my attention both by you and by the Manila Harbor Board, I wish to state that, after due consideration of the matter, I have come to the conclusion that you are absolutely right in deciding terminate that contract. The question here is not whether the Government should undertake the “arrastre” work again or not, nor whether the Manila Terminal Co. has rendered efficient service, but is one of general policy. It is wrong for the Government to renew contracts without submitting them again to public bid. Not to do so places the Government and the officials concerned in a vulnerable position; it gives occasion for the charge, however unfounded, that the Government is playing favorites or that the officials concerned are being influenced by considerations other than those of the public interest. In this connection, I shall today issue an executive order prohibiting the automatic renewal of contracts, unless there are special reasons in a given case, in which event a contract may be renewed after the Auditor General, the Secretary of Justice, and the Secretary of the Department concerned have been consulted and the approval of the President has been secured beforehand.

By terminating the contract with the Manila Terminal Co., two alternatives will be left open to the Government; one is for the Government, either through the Bureau of Customs or any of its instrumentalities or agencies, to undertake this work; the other is, if the Government should find that it cannot do the work efficiently, to call for new bids and give the service to the company offering the best terms under sufficiently guaranty of ability to fulfill the contract. If the Manila Terminal Co. should offer the best terms, naturally it would continue handling the work, as heretofore, during the time stipulated in the new contract.

In order to avoid the question of whether or not you have the legal power, under the terms of the contract between the Manila Harbor Board and the Manila Terminal Co., to give notice of the termination of that contract, I request you to instruct the Manila Harbor Board to pass a resolution giving the Manila Terminal Co. such notice, first, however, securing the advice of the Department of Justice as to whether the contract may be terminated on the 31st of May this year or on the 31st of May next year. Whatever the opinion of the Department of Justice may be on this matter should be followed.

Copy of this letter is being sent to the Manila Harbor Board, in view of the fact that said Board has also presented this question to me.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Judge Francisco Enage's declining an appointment to the Court of Appeals,
February 5, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

JUDGE FRANCISCO ENAGE'S DECLINING AN APPOINTMENT TO THE COURT OF APPEALS

[February 5, 1936]

Dear Judge Enage:

I have received your letter, and although I deeply regret that I cannot dispose of your services for the Court of Appeals, I should acknowledge that from your viewpoint you are fully justified in declining at present the appointment which I offered and which you accepted previously.

I am all the more sorry that I cannot count on you for the new Tribunal as your attitude in refusing to accept the appointment, for the noble and the high motives you have stated in your letter, is further confirmation of the high conception that I have always held of your sense of duty, the integrity of your character and the firmness of your convictions. You already showed these when you refund the post of Speaker under the circumstances in which it was offered to you, and your stand then was what induced me to consider your name for the Court of Appeals.

It seemed to me then, as it seems to me now, that a person who declines a post with high honors and substantial compensation, solely because he considers it incompatible with his sincere convictions, offers the highest example of public decorum, integrity and independence, qualities which if necessary in the discharge of any government post, are more so in judicial functions.

There is a point in this matter, however, on which I wish to make my stand clear to prevent future misunderstandings over the true motives that have induced me to accede to your wish not to be appointed to the Court of Appeals. This question refers to the constitutionality of your appointment.

As you very well said in you letter, when I offered you a post in the Court of Appeals, I declared that I was sure that your appointment would not infringe any precept of the Constitution, because the Secretary of Justice, who had previously been consulted by me, had this opinion, and with which insofar as I am concerned I am in full accord. The part of the Constitution pertaining to the case is section 8, paragraph 1, of Article VI which treats of legislative power. The said section reads:

No member of the National Assembly may hold any other office or employment in the Government without forfeiting his seat, nor shall any such Member during the time for which he was elected be appointed to any civil office which may have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased while he was a member of the National Assembly.

The substantial difference between the two articles is very evident because according to the Constitution of the Philippines, the post to which an assemblyman cannot legally be appointed is that which was created or whose emolument was increased when he was a member of the said Assembly, whereas under the American Constitution of the Jones Law it is enough that the post should have been created or its emoluments increased during the term for which the senator or representative was elected for him to be banned from occupying it, without taking into consideration whether at the time the post was created or its emolument increased he was or had ceased to be a member of the Legislature.

This difference of concept and phraseology was not due to a neglect on the part of those who drafted our Constitution; it was, on the contrary, a deliberate act in obedience to a well-defined purpose.

In the original draft of the Constitution prepared by the so-called subcommittee of seven of the Steering Committee of the Constitutional Convention, the language used in this regard appeared to have been literally copied from the Constitution of the United States and the Jones Law.

But, when it was discussed by the Committee on Style, after the Constitutional Convention had approved the constitutional draft in principle, and as I had feared that the subject under discussion was still phrased as in the original project, I called the attention of the President of that Body now Associate Justice Claro M. Recto, who also presided over that committee, to the fact that such a clause, if kept in its form, might prejudice the public service in the establishment of the new Government of the Philippines.

I declared then to President Recto that if it might happen that among the delegates elected to the National Assembly there were persons whom the Chief Executive might consider needful in other departments offices or activities of the government created by the National Assembly, and if the language of the Constitution of the United States or the Jones Law were approved, such persons who were elected to the National Assembly would no longer be available for those new offices.

President Recto was in agreement with me in that it would be convenient to give the Chief Executive a free hand in the reorganization of the government to that he might get the best men available, although they might be members of the National Assembly, for whatever posts in the Government of the Philippines, and to this President Recto agreed with me declaring that the language used, in respect to the provision in question, by the American Constitution would be modified into the text that now appears in the Constitution of the Philippines, so that if in the opinion of the Chief Executive a member of the national Assembly should be named, he could be beforehand ask this member of the Assembly to tender his resignation before the legislation creating the post to which he could be appointed would be approved by the National Assembly. This change was approved by the Committee on Style which, as everybody knows, revised the original text, and adopted finally by the Constitutional Convention.

Even from the ethical point of view, your appointment should not raise any doubt, it being known to me, and my knowledge of this matter is personal and direct, that you neither initiated yourself nor exercised any influence whatsoever in the approval of the law creating the Court of Appeals. The Constitution Assembly had already recognized the need of creating this tribunal, and the President of the Supreme Court and all the Filipino justices as well as the Secretary of Justice were the ones who took special interest in the immediate approval of the law which provides for its creation, considering it absolutely necessary for the improvement of the administration of justice in the Philippines. It was, therefore, by reason of those authorized opinions and legitimate influences, and not for any other reason, that the measure was promptly enacted into law.

With all this, I recognize the difficulty of removing completely the doubt that has been created in the public mind regarding the legality of this appointment, which even some prominent lawyers share, and it would not be strange at all that in cases to be submitted to the Court of Appeals, in those disposition you would participate, they would discuss the constitutionality of your appointment and the question might reach, as it very well could, the Supreme Court of the United States, a step that would mean a considerable delay in the final disposition of such cases resulting in prejudice to the expeditious and prompt administration of justice. In this case, the Executive, knowing there circumstances, will have no justification to provoke with your appointment such a question with the consequences I have already mentioned. On the other hand, even admitting that in your appointment the Constitution has been respected, there would not be lacking those who would believe that you had actually exercised certain influence in the approval of the above-mentioned law, since you had occupied the post of floor leader of the National Assembly when the measure was endorsed to the corresponding committee, the public not having been acquainted with all the minor details regarding the interior deliberations of the National Assembly.

Letter of President Quezon on appointing Secretary Elpidio Quirino as Secretary of the Interior

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
Upon appointing Secretary Elpidio Quirino as Secretary of the Interior

[Released on February 8, 1936]

My dear Secretary Quirino:

I am appointing you today Secretary of the Interior vice Secretary Sison. The Department of the Interior, as the ranking Department of this Government, is daily confronted with the practical problems dealing in the majority of cases with important political and administrative matters which require tact and statesmanship of no ordinary type in order to secure the cooperation of the provincial and municipal officials. I am confident that I am placing the Department of the Interior in very competent hands.

There is in your case a distinct advantage in assuming the portfolio of the Interior. With your experiences as a successful Secretary of Finance, you will no doubt be in a position to properly supervise and control, as well as advise, the officials concerned in matters affecting provincial and municipal finances.

In giving you this new appointment I want to express to you my appreciation of the able and efficient manner in which you have performed your duties as Secretary of Finance. You have been courageous and impartial in your decisions. Under your administration you have been able to keep the budget balanced in spite of the urgent and extraordinary expenditures attendant to the establishment of our new government and in the face of the falling revenues and the economic depression.

With the assurances of my high esteem, I am

Letter of President Quezon on accepting Mr. Joaquin M. Elizalde's resignation as President of the National Development Company

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On accepting Mr. Joaquin M. Elizalde's resignation as President of the National Development Company

[Released on February 9, 1936]

My dear Mr. Elizalde:

In deference to your insistent request, I am accepting with regret your resignation as President of the National Development Company, in which capacity you have served the Government without pay for nearly two years. Under your presidency of the National Development Company the Cebu Portland Cement Company has increased both the volume of its sales and the amount of its profits. The cost of Production has also decreased. The Sabani Estate which for years had been practically left in the hands of private individuals who used it for their own profit, is now being Parceled out among the tenants and is not only repaying cost to the Government, but what is equally important, it is also providing homes and land for a large number of families. Your resignation, therefore, is a real loss to the Government, since it has in all respects profited by your leadership and experience in business. I realize, however, that it would be unjust to you and to the interests you represent if I were to insist upon your continuing to serve the National Development Company as its President, and for this reason I am compelled to accede to your wishes.

Thanking you for your unselfish service and cooperation, and assuring you of my high esteem and personal regard, I remain.

Letter of President Quezon on enforcement of Civil Service Procedure in Administrative actions against the personnel of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes, February 19, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

ENFORCEMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE PROCEDURE IN ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION AGAINST THE PERSONNEL OF THE PHILIPPINE CHARITY SWEEPSTAKES

[February 19, 1936]

Sir:

The question before me involves the prerogative of the Board of Trustees of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office to dismiss the personnel it has the power to appoint, and the right of the Auditor General to maintain at all times his constitutional control to audit and supervise the accounts of all Government agencies.

While the trite rule of construction has been invoked in this case that “the right of removal resided in the appointing power” which for the present I do not desire to decide, I believe that the nature of the duties of the appointee in its bearing upon the exercise of curtailment of Government control and check should be of paramount consideration in the exercise of the power to dismiss as a corollary of the power to appoint.

As the personnel of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office has been, since January 1, 1936, the date when Executive Order of the President went into effect, subject to all Civil Service requirements under the Constitution, it follows that all disciplinary action thereunder should conform with the Civil Service procedure established for the purpose. This is guaranteed by the Constitution which provides that “no officer or employee in the Civil Service shall be removed or suspended except for cause as provided by law” (Art. XI, section 4, Philippine Constitution). Therefore, if there are sufficient grounds upon which to base administrative action against the Auditor of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office, the Board of Trustees should follow the regularly established Civil Service rules and procedure.

In the meantime, the authority of the Auditor General or his representatives over the accounts and disbursements of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office should be respected without prejudice to the Board of Trustees appealing to the President any specific decision objected to by them as provided in Article 10, section 3, of the Constitution.

Copies of this decision have been furnished the Auditor General and the Director of Civil Service for their information and guidance.

LETTER

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

PREPARATORY MILITARY TRAINING IN ALL PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SCHOOLS

[February 19, 1936]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

Under the provisions of Article VII Title III, of the National Defense Act, preparatory military training will be given in all public and private schools.

The Chief of Staff of the Army has prepared a course of instruction for male teachers which will be given between April 13 and May 9, 1936, inclusive, at the provincial capitol of each province. You will, therefore, cause the Director of Education and the Commissioner of Private Schools to send two male teachers from each elementary and high school or vocational school to the training center for teachers no later than noon of April the 13th next.

The Army authorities have already prepared to carry on the above instructions as required in Title III of the Act; and the Chief of Staff has been instructed to authorize the necessary transportation and subsistence allowances for all teachers reporting for this training.

Letter of President Quezon on placing the office personnel of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes under Civil Service Rules, February 19, 1936

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

UPON

PLACING THE OFFICE PERSONNEL OF THE PHILIPPINE CHARITY SWEEPSTAKES UNDER CIVIL SERVICE RULES

[February 19, 1936]

Sir:

I have given very careful study and consideration to the record submitted in which the status of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office is thoroughly argues.

It appears that when the Office of the Sweepstakes was created under Act No. 4130, section 2 thereof provided in part that "the Board of Trustees may make the appointments without taking into consideration the Civil Service Law and Rules." Under this exemption the appointments to the Sweepstakes Office were made without regard to examination requirements.

With the inauguration of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, the Constitution went into full force and effect and that there could be no possible misinterpretation of its provision with special reference to appointments in the public service, I issued Executive Order No. 8, effective January 1, 1936.

It is evident, therefore, that except for the exemptions provided in Act No. 4130 the Civil Service requirements would have been invoked from the very beginning; for, unlike the Philippine National Bank, the National Development Company and other similar companies which are not performing strictly governmental functions, the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes was organized to provide funds for the care, in the main, of public welfare activities of the Government such as social work, hospitals, dispensaries, public recreation, etc.

The continuance of the exemption from Civil Service examination requirements in the appointments of employees of the Sweepstakes Office is, therefore, repugnant to the Constitution and to Executive Order No. 8, as may be seen from Article XV, section 2, of the Constitution, which I quote in its pertinent part:

"SEC. 2. All laws of the Philippine Islands shall continue in force until the inauguration of the Commonwealth of the Philippines; thereafter, such laws shall remain operative, unless inconsistent with this Constitution * * *."

In view of the foregoing and of the very clear provisions of the Constitution, I hereby decide that effective as of January 1, 1936 as stated in Executive Order No. 8, which I issued enforcing the Civil Service requirements of the Constitution, the personnel of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes was ipso facto placed within the scope of the Civil Service mandate and the Board of Trustees of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes is hereby directed to guide itself accordingly.

Copies of this decision have been furnished the Auditor General and the Director of Civil Service for their information and guidance.

Letter of President Quezon on Appointment of Justices of the Peace, March 16, 1936

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Appointment of Justices

[March 16, 1936]

My Dear Floor Leader Romero:

I am very glad to receive your telegram of March 12th, wherein you assure me that in calling a caucus of the members of the Assembly today it was precisely your "intention to dispel misinformation and explain that their recommendations (in reference to justices of the peace) are being and will be considered although final selection lies with the Executive."

I confess that when I read in the newspapers the report that some members of the National Assembly claimed the right not only to be consulted by the Executive in making appointments for justices of the peace, but also to demand that only men of their choice be appointed to said positions, I felt very much disturbed. I am, therefore, gratified to learn that such newspaper report is unfounded.

The members of the National Assembly are too well informed of the provisions of the Constitution to assert that they have any right thereunder to propose who are to be appointed justices of the peace, much less to claim that only men of their choice be appointed. You and the other members of the National Assembly who were members of the Constitutional Convention, know that the Constitutional Convention wanted the Chief Executive to be free from political influence in making appointments, especially for the Judiciary—high and low. The members of the Convention had seen the evil effects of the old system whereby senators were practically allowed to dictate who should be justices of the peace in their senatorial districts. For this reason they changed the wording of the Constitution of the United States regarding appointments in incorporating the same into ours, and required not the advice but only the confirmation of the Commission on Appointments.

If there is anything that permits of no doubt as to the purpose of the Constitution, it is certainly in its intent to establish an independent judiciary, absolutely and completely divorced from politics. As a matter of fact, I know from personal and direct information that many members of the Constitutional Convention were interested in this subject more than in any other, and, strange as it may seem, some such members were farmers—not lawyers. These men were so bent upon giving the country an independent judiciary that they even opposed any intervention of the Commission on Appointments in appointments to judicial positions. Moreover, our platform commits every one of us to the same principles and ideals promulgated by the Constitution in this respect.

There is no use talking of improving the administration of justice if the justices of the peace are to be appointed through political patronage. For ninety per cent of our population, the justice of the peace court is the only court to which they can appeal for the protection of their rights and the redress of their grievances. So long as the justice of the peace knows that his appointment and retention in the service depends upon the good graces of some influential politicians, so long will he be subservient to the will of these politicians. In a way, it is more important to have good and independent judges in the justice of the peace courts than in the Courts of First Instance. The litigants that go the Courts of First Instance have the mean to take up their cases to the highest tribunal of the land. If they suffer from the incompetence or dismissal honesty of a Judge of the Court of First Instance, they can get redress from the higher courts; but the poor man who is the victim of an incompetent or dishonest justice of the peace has usually no other recourse but to suffer the injustice or abuse of which he is a victim.

Under these circumstances, I would be the most faithless Chief Executive were I to permit that my appointments to the judiciary be subjected to political pressure in any way.

I have done what I could properly do to show the members of the National Assembly my regard for their views and my desire to give to their recommendations due weight. Before finally making my appointments to the Court of Appeals I called in the members of the Commission on Appointments present in Manila and asked them if they had any valid objection to the men I was considering to appoint, or, if they could suggest better men. In personal conference with members of the National Assembly, I requested them to make to me or to the Secretary of Justice some suggestions as to who are the present justices of the peace in their districts that should, or should not, be retained, and who should be appointed in their places. I made it plain to them that I was not interested in any one person, but in finding the best man in every case. I have sought equally the advice of provincial governors, provincial commanders of the Constabulary, prominent citizens, provincial fiscals, members of the Bar and, of course, the judges of the Courts of First Instance and even justices of the Supreme Court in an effort to get every possible information before making appointments. But it is one thing to have the views of the members of the National Assembly, and give them such consideration as in my own judgment they deserve, and entirely another thing for them to claim that I may only appoint those whom they recommend. Were I to recognize such right I would not only violate the Constitution, but also my determination to give the country the best possible judiciary might easily be frustrated. This I will not permit to happen.

Life, property rights, the very happiness and welfare of our people, will depend largely upon the kind of men I appoint to the Bench. The responsibility for all appointments is mine as Chief Executive, and of no one else, and God helping me, I shall perform it to the best of my ability without fear or favor. The Commission on Appointments has the right to reject my appointments. When the time comes for the Commission to perform its duty, I feel confident it will perform it in the same manner and spirit as I propose to perform mine.

Thanking you for your telegram above alluded to, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Sir:

In a conference I held today with members of the National Assembly, I was informed of the need that is being felt by the committees and members of the said Body for technical advice on the bills that are prepared by them or are presented for their consideration. I was also informed that many of these bills are being referred to the executive departments of the Government for their comment and recommendation.

In order that the bills before the National Assembly and the committees thereof may be acted upon with due promptness, I wish to request that any bill which may be referred to your department by the National Assembly be returned to the same with your action thereon within a period of not more than six days from the date of the receipt thereof by your department.

Letter of President Quezon on recommendations of the League of Provincial Governors on appointment of Mr. Maximino Noble as Governor of Camarines Sur, July 26, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE LEAGUE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNORS ON APPOINTMENT OF MR. MAXIMINO
NOBLE AS GOVERNOR OF CAMARINES SUR

[July 26, 1936]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

The resolution of the League of Provincial Governors which you forwarded to this office, recommending the appointment of Mr. Maximino Noble, member of the Provincial Board of Camarines Sur, as Governor of the province has been submitted to me. Please inform the Provincial Governors that I consider their action not very much to credit of their League. It is evident that this recommendation could not have been based upon full knowledge of the facts connected with the administration of the Province of Camarines Sur and which would justify an expression of the League's opinion as to who is the best qualified for the position of Governor of the province. The resolution would give the public the impression that the League of Provincial Governors has been organized for the purpose of promoting personal or political interests among its members. The League would certainly be a helpful organization if instead of approving resolutions of this nature it devoted itself to the study of ways and means whereby the Provincial Governors could help one another and the National Government in the promotion of the public weal.

Perhaps this would be a good opportunity for me to say that, while I welcome recommendations and suggestions from any quarter in connection with appointments to public office, I shall not be guided or influenced by the simple consideration as to who is asking the appointments or what organization is behind them; that in every case, the recommendations will be only useful if made upon the basis of the personal information of the persons or organizations making them relative to the qualification and fitness of those considered for appointment which would justify the Executive in giving weight to the recommendations.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Confirmation of Appointments, July 3, 1936

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Confirmation of Appointments

[Released on July 3, 1936]

My dear Mr. Chairman:

My attention has been called to Article XV of the proposed rules of the Commission on Appointments wherein following paragraph appears:

“When three members state in writing the ground of their objection to an appointment before it is brought up for consideration by the Commission, the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of Commission shall be necessary to confirm such appointment.”

It is my opinion that the rule above quoted is in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution in that it requires in a given case two-thirds vote of all the members of the Commission on Appointments to confirm an appointment. The Constitution only provides that the Commission on Appointments shall consists of twenty-one members and that the appointments made by the President shall be subject to the confirmation of the Commission on Appointments. The Constitution does not require a two-thirds vote in any case for the confirmation of an appointment. It is a well-established rule that when the law grants power to a body composed of more than two members and does not specify the votes required for the exercise of that power, the power is to be exercised by the majority of the members composing that body. Thus, in the case of the National Assembly, the Constitution in conferring all the legislative power upon that body, does not specifically state by what vote that power is to be exercised, except in the case of overriding a presidential veto when it expressly requires a two-thirds vote. Under the general accepted principles of law all bills, in order to pass the Assembly, have to be approved by a majority of the members of the National Assembly, and no more. You will agree with me, I am sure, that it is beyond the power of the Assembly to provide, through its rules, that a bill, in order to become a law, has to be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Assembly if and when a certain number of the members of the Assembly so request. If any such rule were to be approved by the Assembly, it would be null and void, for whenever a majority of the members of the Assembly agree to pass a bill, that bill unless vetoed by the President, becomes a law. By analogy since the Constitution does not require two-thirds vote of the Commission on Appointments for the confirmation of appointments, a majority of the members of the Commission on Appointments is all that is required, and not more, to confirm an appointment.

In further justification of this view, I may add that when the Constitution requires a specific number of votes in excess of the usual majority, it expressly so provides. In granting the power of impeachment to the Commission on Impeachment, it expressly requires a two-thirds vote of the Commission for the exercise of that power, so that a majority of the members can not impeach or can not exercise the power of impeachment.

I hope neither you nor the Commission on Appointments of the National Assembly will consider this letter as an undue interference on the part of the Chief Executive in the exercise of your power of confirmation. The power of confirmation affects the exercise of the executive power of appointment, and in order to avoid any possible conflict in the future as to the interpretation of the acts of the Commission on Appointments over appointments made by the Chief Executive, I feel justified in making this representation to you and, through you, to the Commission. I can easily conceive of a case where three members of the Commission on Appointments may submit in writing their objection to a given appointment, and that when the appointment is put to a vote, a majority of the members present confirms the appointment. Under the rules referred to, the Commission on Appointments would not consider the action of the majority in approving the appointment as sufficient to confirm it, for under the rules, two-thirds vote would be required. In such a case when the appointment is returned to the Chief Executive with the information that it has not been confirmed because the required two-thirds vote did not concur in the appointment, the Chief Executive would have to consider the appointment as confirmed under the Constitution, and would, therefore, feel constrained to issue the commission in view of the fact that a majority of them, not two-thirds, have concurred in the appointment. It is only in the desire of cooperating with the Commission Appointments and avoiding any possible misunderstanding that I am placing my view before the Commission.

With assurances of my personal and official regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Letter from the President of the Philippines to Hon. Apolonio D. Curato: Powers of the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu

Office of the President

Malacañang

Letter from the President of the Philippines to Hon. Apolonio D. Curato
Powers of the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu

[July 28, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Curato:

In reference to the bill now in your Committee to abolish the Bureau of non-Christian Tribes, there seems to be some misunderstanding as to my attitude on the subject. A few days ago Assemblymen Cabili and Ombra came to see me and asked me if I had any objection to the granting of powers to the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu to act without the necessity of previous consultation with Manila, and I expressed the opinion that I did not have any objection thereto; on the contrary, that the purpose sought by the Administration in recommending the creation of this post of Commissioner for Mindanao and Sulu was to have a responsible official stationed in Mindanao, who could act and carry out the program for the development of Mindanao as conceived by the National Government without unnecessary delay. However, my attention has been called to the amendment which has been introduced to the bill and I find serious objection to that amendment, for it means the creation of a new department in the Government and the establishment in Mindanao of a government different from every other government established in the rest of the Archipelago. I think the government of Mindanao and Sulu should continue under the Department of the Interior as every other government in the Islands is under the existing laws. But the Commissioner may be given powers through administrative policy to act without the necessity of constantly having to seek the approval of the authorities in Manila for everything that he does or of making previous consultation before taking any action at all.

If your Committee so desires I shall be very glad to have a conference with you and the members of the Committee formally or informally, either in my office at the Executive Building or in my office at the Legislative Building, at the Committee's convenience; the date and time for the conference to be previously agreed upon between us.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on allowance for clerk hire of assemblymen, July 28, 1936

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
ALLOWANCE FOR CLERK HIRE OF ASSEMBLYMEN

[July 28, 1936]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

There have appeared in the local press from time to time some articles insinuating, and even asserting directly, that the members of the National Assembly are not only receiving the salary provided for them in the Constitution, but are also receiving the allowance for their clerks. I have required of the Auditor General to give me a memorandum as to the facts in the case and I take pleasure in enclosing herewith the memorandum of the Auditor, which is self-explanatory.

It is not only because I have assumed a joint responsibility with the National Assembly in approving the appropriation for clerk hire for members of that Body that I am interested in placing these facts before the public; but it is also for the purpose of doing justice to the members of that Body and to maintain in the public esteem the high regard and respect which is due the members of one of the three coordinate branches of the Government.

Democracy is doomed to failure whenever the people feel no respect for their own representatives in the Government. And it should be remembered that it is less a reflection upon the officials themselves as it is upon the electorate, if the character of said representatives is not what it should be, for it is the electorate that choose them. Public officials deserve more respect and deference from the people in a democracy than in any other form of government, for the authority of these officials emanates from the people themselves.

These thoughts occur to me as I see with misgivings indications that we are beginning to follow the practice in other countries of speaking disparagingly of the members of the legislative branch of the Government. It does not kid fair of the future of democracy in the Philippines if we were to adopt this practice, and it is time that we should call a halt thereto, if it is our conviction that democracy is the best form of government so far devised by human ingenuity, and it is our desire to perpetuate it in our country. Let the people be jealous and vigilant of the conduct of their public servants. Let them bring to the bar of justice or of public opinion every official or employee who falls short of the requirements of his position. But so long as these officials and employees are equal to their trust, they deserve every consideration from the public.

Very respectfully yours,

Letter of President Quezon on refusing to grant pardon to a prisoner, July 30, 1936

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
REFUSING TO GRANT PARDON TO A PRISONER

[July 30, 1936]

My esteemed Governor:

I have personally read the record of criminal case No. 7029, of the Court of First Instance of against Miguel Suayan and Rafael Suayan. I am absolutely convinced that the witnesses for the defense did not testify the truth. I am also convinced that Rafael Suayan was the aggressor and that his brother, Miguel Suayan, although he caused the death of Aurelio de la Luna, took part in the affray only in order to help his brother.

I promised you I would pardon Rafael Suayan when you assured me that the case had been decided against Rafael Suayan by five against four justices in the Supreme Court, being under the impression that in this case five justices had held that Rafael Suayan was guilty while the other four had maintained the contrary. This, however, is not the case; the justices were unanimous in judging the differed as to whether Rafael Suayan was guilty of homicide or merely of injuries. After studying the case, I have come to conclusion that this difference of opinion is a mere legal technicality, as to me it appears evident that, while it cannot be affirmed that Rafael Suayan, when he began to assault the deceased, intended to kill him, yet, when Rafael Suayan struck the deceased with a club although he was already wounded, it was his intention to kill him. If Rafael Suayan is not guilty of the crime of homicide, he is, in my judgment, at least guilty of frustrated homicide, a crime to which a more severe penalty attaches than to the crime of which the dissenting opinion of the Supreme Court finds him guilty, and that Penalty would require a longer period in prison than that which he has already served.

It is the duty of the Chief Executive, in granting pardons, to consider details and circumstances attending the commission of a crime which courts cannot consider under the law. The pardoning power is conferred upon the Chief Executive in order that the supreme interests of justice may be served when, in a concrete case, the law has not been able to serve them. How could the pardon of Rafael Suayan be justified in the present case? What moral purpose, what reason of equity could prompt the Chief Executive to pardon him?

The record of the case shows that the deceased suspected Rafael Suayan of having participated in the abduction of the daughter of the deceased. Rafael Suayan's conduct towards the deceased, from the moment that he learned that Aurelio de la Luna suspected him, and his assault upon the latter on the day of the crime, show that Rafael Suayan is a citizen who is a menace to society, and that it is necessary that he be made to feel the full weight of the law in order that he may mend his ways and become a peaceable and orderly citizen.

In view of these circumstances I regret to have to deny the pardon requested by you, at least for the present.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Letter of President Quezon on Establishment of Minimum Wage for Laborers of the Government, August 5, 1936

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
ESTABLISHMENT OF MINIMUM WAGE FOR LABORERS OF THE GOVERNMENT

[August 5, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Magalona:

Your letter recommending that I order the immediate establishment of a minimum wage for all laborers employed on works of the national, provincial, and municipal governments has just been submitted to me, and in reply thereto, I desire to inform you that I have had this matter under consideration for quite some time and that on my last trip to Davao, in answer to a petition of the laborers of that city, I assured them that I would establish a minimum wage for all laborers of the National Government its political divisions and dependencies. However, so far it has not been possible to establish a minimum wage, because I do not believe that the same minimum wage can or should be established for all provinces or localities of the Archipelago nor for all work in which such laborers are engaged. Many factors have to be taken into consideration in establishing the minimum wage such as the cost of living in each locality, the financial situation of each province, and the work which the laborer is doing. As to the rest, I am absolutely in favor of a minimum wage affording a decent living to the laborer. Since I have assumed the office of President I have considered it as one of the inescapable duties of this Government to secure reasonable wages for the laborers.

Letter of President Quezon on Payment of Inheritance Tax by religious organizations, August 10, 1936

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On payment of Inheritance Tax by Religious Organizations

[Released on August 10, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Kalaw:

Regarding the inheritance tax bill, information has come to me to the effect that there is the impression amongst some members of the National Assembly that I am interested in having exempted from the payment of inheritance tax legacies or donations mortis causa to charitable, educational or religious corporations. I wish to inform you that I have not authorized anybody to speak for me in this respect, and moreover I see no reason why there should be made exceptions. As you know, the Government of the Philippine Islands appropriates funds for charitable and educational institutions, and, therefore, the taxes levied on the inheritance that go to charitable or educational institutions are in fact devoted to the same kind of institutions when they are paid to the Government, the only difference being that when the tax is paid to the Government no money is spent without discrimination in favor of any one particular institution.

Now as for the inheritance tax that may go to a religious organization: The religious organizations are already exempted from the payment of taxes on their properties that are devoted exclusively to worship, but religious organizations may and do have properties that are not exclusively devoted to worship, and to exempt these donations from the payment of inheritance taxes we may exempt religious organizations from paying tax on the property which is not primarily devoted to worship. Then again, if it is devoted to worship, once the donation has been devoted to this end, from that time it will be exempted from taxes.

Letter of President Quezon on Creation of a Department of Public Health, September 2, 1936

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

CREATION OF A DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH

[September 2, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Villarama:

Although I have been informed that your Committee on Public Health has already agreed to report favorably on the bill creating a Department of Health, and although the Secretary of Public instruction has advised me that the report of the Survey Board was read to the Committee when he appeared before it in connection with the said bill, I feel that I should let you have a copy of the report in order that you may give it further consideration. Should you find it convenient, copies of the said report may be furnished to every member of your Committee.

I have noticed, after carefully studying the report of the Survey Board, that it does not give sufficient emphasis to the advantage of having the Bureau of Education and the Bureau of Health under the same Department and I should like to elaborate further on this phase of the question.

The ultimate success of the work of the Bureau of Health will depend upon how effectively we may instruct our people so that they may practise in their daily conduct sound principles of personal and community hygiene. The prevention of a disease can only be accomplished if the individual is taught the means or the manner whereby such disease may be avoided. This instruction can be given most effectively in the schools. Instruction concerning health and sanitation must be given in the early years of the individual, so that he may practice what he learns and this practice may become a habit. In this connection, I may state in passing that I know personally of a case where a public health officer despite his theoretical knowledge did not live in accordance with the ordinary requirements of hygiene. This is certainly due to the fact that he had acquired certain improper habits in his youth which all the knowledge that he had learned could not eradicate. If the Secretary of Public Instructions is in charge of and is responsible for both education and health, his interest in the health activities will be at least as great as his interest in the other activities of his Department and he will naturally see to it that the schools through the instruction given to the pupils on health and sanitation give as much support as possible to the health work. If and when a separate Department of Public Health is created, no matter how earnestly the Secretary of Health is created, no matter how earnestly the Secretary of Health may appeal to the Secretary of Public Instruction for his cooperation, it will be very hard, considering human nature, to find in the Secretary of Public Instruction the same interest in this work that he would naturally have if he were responsible for its success.

I wish to be candid with the Committee and state frankly that at one time I considered the advisability of creating a separate Department of Health. When two years ago, we knew that a new government was to be inaugurated in our country under the control of a Filipino Executive, those government activities that may directly or indirectly have some effect in our international relation drew my immediate attention and interest for I felt that the new government could not afford, in any way, to fail in the administration of the bureaus concerned without giving occasion to serious criticism that would affect the good name of the new government abroad. So I thought that since the question of keeping the Philippines in perfect sanitary condition was a matter that, in a way, may affect our international relation because of foreign travel in these Islands, I had the idea that perhaps the way to exercise effective control over public sanitation was through the creation of a separate Department of Health.

Since assuming my office, however, I have given this matter continued study and have had exhaustive discussions with the Chairman of the Survey Board. I have further observed as carefully as I could the manner in which the different branches of our Government are functioning and I am now convinced that the Secretary of Public Instruction can properly attend to the activities concerning health and sanitation without affecting adversely the performance of his duties in connection with public instruction.

It should also be remembered that we are committed to the policy of establishing an economic and simple government, and this commitment makes it imperative that we do not increase the present number of departments unless it is clearly seen beyond question that it would be in the interest of the public service to create a new department. As a matter of fact, I feel that if we reduce the number of the departments, we would only be performing our pre-election pledge, but I have very serious doubts whether this can be done at this time without imposing upon the Secretaries of Department responsibilities that are beyond their physical capacity to meet.

I hope that with the foregoing considerations I may convince you and your Committee that action on the bill creating a new Department of Health should be at least deterred so as to give this new Government time to show conclusively that the present arrangement of having both the Bureau of Health and the Bureau of Education under one department is entirely satisfactory and can accomplish what is sought by your Committee through the creation of a new department.

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Nondesignation of Undersecretaries as Acting Secretaries of Departments

[Released on September 2, 1936]

My dear Chairman Aquino:

A member of the Commission on Appointments has inquired as to the reasons why Under-Secretary De la Cruz has not been appointed Acting Secretary of Public Works and Communications, with a view to ascertaining whether this was due to my lack of confidence in Mr. De la Cruz. In answer to the query I stated, and I hereby state for your information and that of the Commission, that as a matter of policy I do not intend to designate as Acting Secretaries of Department the Under-Secretaries whenever there is a vacancy in the post of Secretary of Department, because this is a political post and it should not be filled by non-political appointees. The Secretaries of Department are a part of the policy-determining body of the Executive, while the Under-Secretaries are purely and exclusively administrative officials. The law authorizes the Chief Executive, in case of a vacancy in the position of the Department Head, either to assume for himself the portfolio or to designate one of the other Secretaries of Department as Acting Secretary for the vacant Department.

As far as my confidence in Under-Secretary De la Cruz is concerned, I desire to inform you most emphatically that he enjoys my full and complete confidence.

Letter of President Quezon upon Signing a Bill amending the Public Land Law, September 8, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

UPON

SIGNING A BILL AMENDING THE PUBLIC LAND LAW

[September 8, 1936]

Sir:

I wish to inform you that I have today signed Bill No. 86, entitled "An Act to amend sections thirty-four, thirty-six, and thirty-seven of Act Numbered Twenty-eight hundred and seventy-four known as "The Public Land Act," which was passed during the present session of the National Assembly. As this measure proposes, among others, to liberalize the provisions of the Public Land Law by increasing the area which may be leased for grazing purposes from 1,024 hectares to 2,000 hectares, it is with reluctance that I have signed the bill, firmly believing in the limitation requirements of the Public Land Law which restrict public landholdings to areas of limited sizes are, in my opinion, wholesome, as the spirit animating the enactment of public land legislation has always been to encourage the distribution of the great portion of our public domain to the greatest number of our people, and to prevent the concentration of big landed estates in the hands of a few individuals. However, taking into consideration the fact that greater impetus must be given towards the development of the cattle industry in this country by allowing it greater areas for expansion, and also considering that the disposition of the lands contemplated in the bill will be made by lease only and not by permanent alienation of the land to the grantees, it is believed that the advantages to accrue from the enactment of this bill into law would offset any objection that may be raised against it.

In enforcing the provisions of this law, it is desired that you take into consideration the instructions issued by this Office on July 29, 1936, to the effect that small land-holdings be interspersed between large areas of public land which are applied for for pasture purposes either under the Forest Law or the Public Land Law. As states in those instructions, the reason for following such policy is to prevent the pasture permittees or lessees from extending their holdings, thereby avoiding the clandestine occupation of big areas of public land in violation of the area requirements of the Public Land Law and the Forest Law, and also to provide available areas for small pasture land-holdings.

It is also desired that, as a matter of principle, persons who have violated any provision of the Public Land Law or the Forest Law should not be allowed to be benefited by the provisions of this Act. However, in the event that a pasture permittee or applicant has unknowingly or unwillfully violated any provision of the Public Land Law or the Forest Law, or in cases where the principles of equity may be invoked, no pasture applicant or permittee should be held or occupied by him excess of the area originally allowed under the Public Land Act, until and unless the said applicant or permittee has first paid to the Government all the back rentals corresponding to the period of his occupation of the excess area.

Letter of President Quezon on Effectivity of the Chinese Bookkeeping Law, September 14, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

EFFECTIVITY OF THE CHINESE BOOKKEEPING LAW

[September 14, 1936]

My dear Mr. Speaker:
With reference to Bill No. 67 of the National Assembly, entitled—

“An Act to amend section two of Act Numbered Thirty-two hundred and ninety-two, as amended by section one of Act Numbered Forty-one hundred and seventy-six, by requiring that the entries in journals and ledgers kept in a language other than a native language, English or Spanish shall be translated into a native language, English or Spanish, by the bookkeeper or manager who shall certify under oath as to the correctness of said translation,”

I beg to inform you that after the bill had been finally passed by the National Assembly, the Chinese Chamber of Commerce addressed me a request that the taking effect the said bill be postponed so as to give them time to comply the requirements of the law without unnecessary and unreasonable burden upon the Chinese business community. After hearing the views of the Secretary of Finance, I am of the opinion that it will be a gracious, if not a fair act on the part of the National Assembly to grant the petition of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and I so earnestly recommend to your honorable Body.

It is well known that the Chinese business community has in the past fought strenuously former attempts of the Legislature to enact similar legislation, and at one time, they even took the matter up to the Supreme Court of the United States and succeeded in having that Court declare unconstitutional the law passed by the Legislature. I do not entertain the slightest doubt as to the constitutionality of the bill which has been approved by the Assembly and to which I have referred, and I am pleased to see that contrary to their former attitude, the Chinese community now recognizes the need of this legislation from the standpoint of the Government and, therefore, justifies it. Thus, they are showing a very commendable spirit of cooperation with the Government of the Commonwealth.

It is my belief that a wise policy for any government to adopt is that of tempering firmness with reasonable regard for the sentiments and views of those affected by a given legislation whenever it may do so without detriment to public interest. It is not only the right but also it is the duty of the Government of the Commonwealth to make sure that its laws are obeyed and the taxes that it imposes are paid by those under the law to pay them. This is the objective of the bill I am discussing. Whether true this country that some Chinese merchants are able to evade the payment of certain taxes by keeping their commercial books in Chinese, and it is not only the interest of the Government but also in the interest of the Chinese business men themselves that such an impression be definitely erased, and I am glad to find that the Chinese community has taken this view of this question.

I can see, however, the difficulties that may arise in certain cases where it may be beyond the power of the parties concerned to secure the personnel necessary to translate into English or Spanish the commercial books as required in Bill 67, and for this reason, I shall be agreeable to an amendment of this bill, making it effective one or two years after passage. Should the Assembly be willing to take this same attitude, I hope it may find it convenient to withdraw the bill from me and reconsider it and insert therein that suggested amendment. I am suggesting this procedure for if I were to return the bill without petition on the part of the Assembly, that would mean that I have vetoed this measure, which I cannot do.

Letter of President Quezon on Replacement of Coastwise Vessels in the Philippines, September 15, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

REPLACEMENT OF COASTWISE VESSELS IN THE PHILIPPINES

[September 15, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Kintanar:

I beg to enclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed to me by the representative of the Compañía Tabacalera in Manila, which is self-explanatory. As far as this Office is concerned, we find no valid objection to the petition of the assistant general manager of said company. It is the present policy of the Government of the Philippines, which is undoubtedly a very good policy, not to allow any vessel to engage in the coastwise trade unless it is owned by Filipinos or/and Americans or by corporation, 75 per cent at least of the capital stock of which is owned by Filipinos or/and Americans. This policy is in line with that of most of the progressive countries in the world today.

However, I do not see that the request made by the Compañía Tabacalera, if granted, would contravene the intents and purposes of section 1172 of the Administrative Code, as amended by Act No. 3084, defining the ownership of vessels for the coastwise trade, as the Compañía Tabacalera, under said Act, has the right to salvage the hull of "ISIDORO PONTS" and rebuild it and place it again in the coastwise trade. What the Tabacalera proposes is in the public interest, for it simply requests that, instead of salvaging the hull of "ISIDORO PONTS," it be allowed to substitute said vessel with another newly constructed boat to be so fitted that it may be used by the Government in case of need for transportation of troops and supplies. And besides, this substitute boat, being new, would afford greater comfort and safety to the travelling public and cargo.

Everybody knows that inter-island shipping in this country is not as it may be desired. Our ships, in a large majority of cases, are old and lack modern conveniences and devices that would not only insure safety but also afford comfort in sea voyage. I would not place myself in a position of laying obstacles to the improvement of our inter-island service. If the Tabacalera were asking for the building of a new ship in addition to its present fleet, I would oppose it for it would violate not only the letter but also the spirit of our shipping laws. Such is not the case, however, as stated before.

Furthermore, we should take into consideration that under the present law, we cannot prevent the Tabacalera from salvaging the hull of the "ISIDORO PONTS" and rebuilding it, in which case the result will be that instead of having a new ship that would be in a position to render the Government a good service in time of need and improve the inter-island shipping, it will only mean one more addition to the old ships that we have in the coastwise trade. Perhaps it would also be well for the shipping interests in the Philippines who are now enjoying the privilege of the Protection afforded them under our shipping laws, to know that we will only be very rigid in our stand against such requests, as made in the accompanying letter of the Tabacalera when those companies enjoying protection under the law have made every effort within their means to provide the country with more appropriate ships.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Disposition of certain Mining Claims, September 26, 1936

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN MINING CLAIMS

[SEPTEMBER 26, 1936]

My dear Judge DeWitt:

I have read your letter of September the 25th

Since to a large extent, perhaps, I am responsible for the attitude taken by the majority to the Members of the Committee on Mines, with reference to the mines that were located, but not patented before the inauguration of the Government of the Commonwealth, I desire to express succinctly the reason for my position.

I deem it the duty of the Chief Executive, and in fact of every one of the three branches of this Government, as well as of every official thereof, to carry out and execute faithfully not only the letter but also the spirit of the Constitution, and whenever there is the slightest doubt as to the scope of any of its provisions, to solve that in favor of the plain intent, or the known intent, of the makers of the Constitution. Although I have not been a member of the Constitutional Assembly, I can truthfully say that I am as well informed as anybody else of the purposes and objectives and the reasons behind the important provisions of the Constitution. I am positive that the Constitutional Assembly wanted to reserve to the State the ownership of all mines of every kind in the Philippines and that they would have given retroactive effect to that provision, even in the case of mines which have been patented, had they been sure that this could be done without violating well known and accepted principles and rules regarding property and vested right in a society, generally known as capitalistic. It is because every member of the Constitutional Assembly believed in property rights as one of the basic foundation of organized society and enlightened government, that every section in the Constitution which deals with property, whether belonging to the state or to an individual, contains a saving clause that vested rights be respected.

Now, the question to which your letter refers is a question which has been dealt with by the Constitution in accordance with the above principles, and in my opinion it is for the courts to determine, not for us—either the Executive or Legislative Department—what, in the case of mineral lands, have passed out of the public domain and therefore no longer subject to the provisions of the Constitution as to their disposition. In reference to those mining claims already patented, there is not the slightest question that they have become private property, and under the saving clause of the Constitution they are not included among those mining properties of the State which can only be leased. But as to the mines that have not been patented, despite your very illuminating memorandum, I am not prepared to say that the provisions of the Constitution do not reach them. I am sure that the makers of the Constitution did intend to reach them if they were not subject to vested rights that the Constitution could not deprive them of. It is, therefore, for the courts to determine whether or not mining claims which have not been patented may be disposed of as the Constitution provides in the same manner as those which have not been located prior to the establishment of the Commonwealth.

Neither the Executive nor the Legislative Department of this Government desires to deprive anybody of rights granted him by the Constitution. But neither the Executive nor the Legislative Department of this Government, I hold, ought to recognize or grant rights which the Constitution did not intend to grant. After all, no irreparable damage could be done in this case if the Assembly should take the stand we propose to take, for those who would feel that their rights have been violated may go to the courts. It is the courts, of course, that should settle the question.

But supposing that, the Assembly provided that such mining claims which have been located prior to the approval of the Constitution, but which have not been patented, belong to the locators, and six years hence a new Chief Executive and a new Assembly opine just the opposite, and they order the Department of Justice to institute proceedings against the locators of the mines, and the courts decide that the law which granted them these rights was unconstitutional, for under the terms of the Constitution those mines could only be leased. Then, if that be the case, an irreparable harm and damage may be done to the locators if the Government, in taking possession of those mines, should demand, in leasing them out, such conditions as will compel the locators to give up entirely the working of those mines, with the consequent loss of the improvements that they have built thereon. You will see, therefore that in taking the stand that I am taking, I am inspired not only by my determination to be faithful to the purpose of the Constitution, but by my desire as well to prevent those who have invested in the Philippine Islands in good faith from suffering irreparable harm in the future by reason of such short-sighted legislation as we may enact.

Very sincerely yours,

[Delivered on October 2, 1936]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

I am enclosing herewith a letter from the Secretary the Interior, recommending that the Assembly enact a law postponing the elections of the provincial governors. I am in favor of this measure. We have been having too many elections during the last four years, and I hope that the Assembly may find its way to enact such legislation.

Sir:

Since the general elections of 1934 to date, four elections have already taken place; namely, the general elections of 1934, the elections for the Constitutional Assembly, plebiscite on the Constitution and the Commonwealth elections, all of which have cost the Insular and local governments the total amount of P2,226,690.07. Next April there will be a plebiscite for the woman suffrage in accordance with Commonwealth Act No. 34. Under the present Election Law, the general elections for local officials will also take place next June, and in 1938 there will again be an election for members of the National Assembly, unless the bill now approved by the National Assembly on second reading fixing the date of the regular session of the Assembly to October 16 will effect the postponement of the latter election to probably 1939. If the 1937 elections for local officials are not postponed, there will be another general election for them in June 1940; and in 1941 the presidential elections will take place. Within the next four years, therefore, there will be five successive elections which will mean to the national and local treasuries an expenditure of approximately P3,693,459.60. Adding this amount to the amount of P2,226,690.07 already spent since 1934, we will have spent up to and including the presidential elections of 1941 a total outlay of P5,920,149.67 for elections only within a period of seven years.

From the point of view of the cost of elections, therefore, it would seem that some arrangement should be adopted whereby we could make some of these five elections coincide in order to effect economies both to the national and to the local treasuries. As a measure of immediate economy, it would be more convenient to postpone the general elections of 1937 to coincide with any other subsequent election, say, with the next elections for members of the National Assembly, and thereby eliminate the two general elections of 1937 and 1940 as separate elections for local officials. This will not only mean a substantial saving in the local funds of over a million pesos which we urgently need for general development work, but will also avoid much of the political and even social agitation incidental to each election. This will also insure, I hope, not only a more stable state of peace in the country, but also peace of mind among our citizens at this period of intense preparation and execution of a great many of our national programs. Wherefore, I respectfully recommend that legislation be urged upon the National Assembly to the end that the general elections for local officials in 1937 be postponed so as to make it coincide with any subsequent election.

Letter of President Quezon to the Secretary of Interior on approval of Bill No. 264, consolidating all taxes in real property and the penalties thereon due but unpaid for the year 1935 and previous year, October 6, 1936

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

APPROVAL OF BILL NO. 264, CONSOLIDATING ALL TAXES ON REAL PROPERTY AND THE PENALTIES THEREON
DUE BUT UNPAID FOR THE YEAR 1935 AND PREVIOUS YEARS

[October 6, 1936]

Sir:

I wish to inform you that I have today approved Bill No. 264, entitled "An Act to amend sections one, two, six, and seven of Act Numbered Four thousand one hundred and eighty-one, as amended, in order to consolidate all taxes on real property and the penalties thereon due but unpaid for the year nineteen hundred and thirty-five and previous years, to provide time and manner of payment of said taxes, and setting aside forfeitures heretofore effected," which became Commonwealth Act No. 35. It is with reluctance that I have signed this bill as I firmly believe that repeated extensions of time for the payment of taxes of any kind are conducive to further neglect on the part of taxpayers to comply with their taxes obligations.

In your memorandum, dated September 24, 1936, you have, however, made representations to the effect that the principal purpose of the bill is not to grant an extension of time in order to give property owners who failed to pay their taxes for 1935 and previous years another opportunity to enjoy the privileges of the consolidated account as to contemplated in the bill, but to correct deficiencies and defects which existed in the original law on account of which many taxpayers failed to take advantage of its provisions without any fault or negligence on their part. I understand that although the original law (Act No. 4181) was approved on December 7, 1934, the actual preparation of the lists of consolidated accounts of taxes covering several hundred thousand parcels of land and the compliance with other requirements consumed several months, as a result of which many taxpayers have not been able to take advantage of the provisions of said Act. I have, therefore, signed the bill in the belief that its approval would enable the carrying out of the policy laid down in Act No. 4181 of giving relief to real-estate owners whose properties have been forfeited to the Government due to circumstances beyond their control. I am informed that the approval of this bill would not adversely affect the present finances of the provinces and municipalities.

I wish to make it clear, however, that this will be the last time that I will sign a bill of this nature extending the time of payment of real property taxes. It is, therefore, desired that all the administrative requirements necessary for the proper enforcement of the law be promptly accomplished, with a view to giving the necessary relief intended in the law so that any failure on the part of delinquent property owners to take advantage of the provisions of this law would not be ascribed to any fault or delay on the part of the officials called upon to enforce it. It is also desired that no delinquent real-estate owner who has willfully violated the provisions of any tax law be given the privilege or right to take advantage of the provisions of the same.

I wish that the contents of this letter be circularized among the provincial governors and municipal presidents.

Respectfully,

My dear Mr. Speaker:

Former Governor-General Francis Burton Harrison has expressed to me his desire to become a Filipino citizen. It appears, however, that under the present Naturalization Law he lacks the required residence to acquire Filipino citizenship.

It is not necessary for me to state that no American has contributed more to the cause of Philippine self-government and independence than the Honorable Francis Burton Harrison and that he deserves the eternal gratitude of our people. I feel that it would be a very gracious act on the part of the National Assembly if it should confer Filipino citizenship upon former Governor-General Harrison by special act, and I hereby beg to recommend that you preset this matter to the Assembly.

On decree of General Amnesty to Political Offenders

[Released on October 9, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Perfecto:

In answer to your letter of October 7th, which I have before me, I have to say that I cannot at this juncture solicit from the National Assembly its concurrence to a decree of general amnesty to what might be called political offenders. You know that I have announced publicly a month ago my intention to grant amnesty to all who have committed such violations of our laws as may be termed political prior to the inauguration of the Commonwealth and solicit the concurrence of the National Assembly thereto. The events of the last few days which disclose the existence of concerted action on the part of some individuals to cause a general destruction of property by setting fires hereto with the use of bombs or otherwise, make me feel that the lawless elements of the community should be made to realize that the Government cannot countenance any such open defiance of its authority. The granting of a general amnesty at this time may be construed by these lawless elements as a tendency to treat leniently offenses of this nature, if not an indication of weakness, and for this reason, much to my regret, I am constrained to defer action on my announced intention to grant such general amnesty.

Letter of President Quezon on the contemplated dissolution of the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the Contemplated Dissolution of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

[Delivered on November 10, 1936]

Dear Madam:

My attention has been called to a news item published in a morning paper regarding a contemplated meeting of the Board of Directors of the S. P. C. A. to discuss the question of the dissolution of the Society upon the assumption that my approval of the bill recently passed by the National Assembly, withdrawing from the Society the power to appoint agents with authority to make arrests of violators of the law for the protection of animals and consequently reverting to the treasury all fines imposed for violations of said law, implies withdrawal of official support from the Society. I earnestly hope that the Society will not be solved just on this account.

I cannot understand why the Society, and for that matter anyone else, should imply from the enactment of this law, that official support has been withdrawn from the Society. In a public statement, I have explained why I felt it my duty to sign the bill. It is wrong in principle and dangerous in practice to leave in the hands of any private institution the enforcement of any law, especially when there is a punishment for the violation of said law. It is confession of either weakness or indifference, or both on the part of the Government not to enforce its own laws. The fact that similar laws exist in the United States and in England does not justify its existence here. That which is fundamentally wrong is not made right because first-class powers do it. The evident reason why it had to be done in America and in England is because cruelty to animals is a comparatively new moral concept amongst civilized peoples and the community in general has not been sufficiently educated to react strongly against it. Of course, this is true in the Philippines, more so than in England or America. But the remedy does not lie in placing the responsibility for enforcing the law in the hands of a private society, but rather in making the officials of the Government charged with the duty of enforcing the laws, comply strictly with their sworn duty, regardless of the indifferent or even hostile attitude of the general public.

As Chief Executive, it is my first and most important duty to execute the laws. And I shall enforce every law regardless of the attitude of the public thereto as long as they remain in the statute books. I cannot admit that any private society will be more interested than the Executive Department of this Government in the enforcement of our laws, including the one for the protection of animals.

I see that the Society has rendered other services besides capturing violators of the law, such as the maintenance of a hospital for taking care of sick animals. This is a service that the Society can and should continue to render. The Society can and should continue to render. The Society can also help Government agents to detect infractions of the law and bring offenders to the courts for punishment. And, most important of all, the Society's aims could best be served by disseminating information to the public so as to educate the people and inculcate in them that nobility of sentiment which insures the humane and kind treatment of all animals.

In closing I can assure you and your associates that with or without the Society I shall see to it that the law for the prevention of cruelty to animals is enforced in all its rigor: but I do hope that the Society will continue to cooperate and help the Government in this humane enterprise.

Very truly yours,

Letter of President Quezon detailing Public Safety Commissioner Leon G. Guinto to the United States to study American police methods, November 24, 1936

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

DETAILING PUBLIC SAFETY COMMISSIONER LEON G. GUINTO TO THE UNITED STATES TO STUDY AMERICAN POLICE METHODS

[November 24, 1936]

My dear Commissioner Guinto:

Commonwealth Act No. 88 provides for the organization of a state police covering the entire country out of the listing provincial, city and municipal forces. I wish this organization to be not only efficient and competent in the prevention and detection of crime as well as in the, arrest of offenders against the law, but also as a human institution that will be considered by the people as their friend in the administration of justice and the protection of their rights and property.

Having selected you for the important task of organizing and building up this new national agency for peace and order, I want you to thoroughly equip yourself for the work, and for this purpose I want you to go to the United States to study and acquaint yourself with the organization, training and equipment of American police forces, especially those in New York and Pennsylvania. You should, therefore, proceed without delay to Washington, D. C., reporting upon arrival to the Resident Commissioner and to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, who have been notified of your appointment as Commissioner of Public Safety and your assignment to the United States.

It is my desire that you attach yourself to duty with the police force of New York City for such period of time as may be necessary and afterwards proceed to Philadelphia to study the police system there. After you have made a thorough study of the subject you should return directly to the Philippines. It is not my desire to put a time limit on your detail in the United States, as I feel that you realize how important it is for you to be back as soon as possible in order that you may proceed with the task that has been entrusted to you. Upon your arrival here you should submit your recommendations in writing as to the type, strength, organization, pay and other pertinent data for the State Police of the Commonwealth.

Letter of President Quezon on disapproving Bill regarding salaries of officials and employees of the City of Baguio, November 29, 1936

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
DISAPPROVING BILL REGARDING SALARIES OF OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE CITY OF BAGUIO

[November 29, 1936]

My dear Assemblyman Jose:

In connection with the National Assembly bill, entitled "An Act to amend Act Numbered Twenty-seven hundred and eleven, known as the Revised Administrative Code, by inserting between sections twenty-five hundred and forty-five and twenty-five hundred and forty-six, a new section to be known as section twenty-five hundred and forty-five-A, regarding salaries of officials and employees of the City of Baguio," I have read your letter dated October the 30th and your telegram to Secretary Vargas dated November the 23rd. I am very sorry to see that you have chosen to make this an issue between you and the Municipal Council of Baguio did not of its own accord express any opinion on the bill in question, but it felt obliged to do so, in view of the fact that my office asked for their opinion. It is to be presumed that every public official is acting in the public interest and therefore that you as a member of the National Assembly in presenting this bill, have done it honestly, believing that you were serving the interests of the City of Baguio, as well as of its inhabitants; so also may we presume of the members of the Municipal Council, in expressing their objection to the approval of the bill. The members of the Municipal Council did not impugn your motives or make any statement derogatory to your character, while you in your telegram to Secretary Vargas and in your letter to me have attacked the good name of the members of the City Council of Baguio. I have decided to disapprove the bill on the following grounds:

(a) Because I have approved already those bills in which you are interested that without any question were in the interest of the service, such, for instance, as the creation of the office of city attorney for Baguio and the municipal court for Baguio. It was evident that the growing importance of the City of Baguio demanded that it have its own city attorney independent of the provincial fiscal of the Mountain Province and that it have also a municipal court, instead of the justice of the peace court, with a jurisdiction and a salary greater than those the justice of the peace now has.

(b) Had you merely increased the salary of the Mayor, the City Treasurer, and the Auditor, I would have also approved the bill. But instead you have gone further and created new positions which, in my opinion, are not necessary for the present at least and would mean an unnecessary added burden to the city. Every one of these positions may be required three, four or five years from now and then if it appears evident that it is so required, the necessary legislation may be enacted. In spite of these objectionable features, I should have not vetoed the bill if the effects of the provision therein that no employee or laborer of the city will receive less than P30 a month had been nullified by the veto. Since this matter is covered by laws and executive orders already in force, the City of Baguio will pay not less than P30 a month for each of its employees and laborers even though I vetoed the bill.

It is needless for me to say, for everybody knows it to be so, that you are one of the members of the National Assembly on whose support I have greatly depended and whose cooperation I have greatly valued. You enjoy my entire confidence and whenever possible I have given your recommendations due consideration. I hope, therefore, you will not take the veto of this bill as an evidence of lack of confidence in you or as supporting the City Council against you. I have considered the matter on its own merits, as clearly stated in this letter. It is well known in Baguio that I supported your candidacy and I have no cause to repeat it. But for the reasons above stated I simply feel that I can not authorize an added burden on the city treasury beyond what I have done in approving the bills which were presented by you and to which I have adverted.

Very sincerely yours,

[November 29, 1936]

Sir;

I have allowed Bills Nos. 2332 and 2350 to become laws without my signature. As the application of their provisions may, in some cases, involve a violation of the provisions of Article VII, section 13(1), of the Constitution, Squiring that all money collected or any tax levied for a special purpose shall be treated as a special fund and paid out for such purpose only, you are requested to obtain in each particular case the opinion of the Department of Justice whether or not the transfer of any funds under the authority of said laws would result in a violation of this particular provision of the Constitution.

Letter of President Quezon on vacancies in the College of Medicine and the Philippine General Hospital

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On vacancies in the College of Medicine and the Philippine General Hospital

[Released on December 23, 1936]

My dear Mr. Vice-President:

With reference to the vacancies now existing in the College of Medicine and in the Philippine General Hospital due to the resignation of Dr. Calderon, who was at the same time Dean of the College of Medicine, University of the Philippines, and Director of the Philippine General Hospital, I desire to make some statements that may be of help to you and to the Board of Regents of the University.

Under the law creating the University the deans of its different colleges are appointed by the Board of Regents. I do not wish, therefore, to have anything to say regarding the selection of the Dean of the College of Medicine. However, the appointment of the Director of the Philippine General Hospital is by law vested in the President and at this writing I do not desire to commit myself in any way as to whether the dean so chosen by the Board of Regents should be appointed by me as Director of the Philippine General Hospital.

As you know, we have been discussing the question of whether or not, in the interest of efficiency, both of these portions, that of Dean of the College of Medicine and that of Director of the Philippine General Hospital, should be held by the same person, as it has been in the case of Dr. Calderon, and we have not come to any conclusion regarding this matter. Up to this moment my mind is still open and I might be convinced to adopt one or the other policy.

In connection with the selection of the Dean of the College of Medicine, I wish the Board of Regents to feel perfectly free to act as in its opinion would seem best in the interest of the University. Under the law, the Board of Regents is charged with the administration of the University of the Philippines as well as with the adoption of the policies of the Institution, and while the power of appointing certain members of the Board is vested in the President, these members, once appointed, should exercise their own discretion in expressing their opinion and casting their vote on every question that is before the Board. This, of course, is understood to be subject to the powers vested in the Board of Visitors to exercise its jurisdiction if and when questions before the Board of Visitors require such action. Of course, on matters of policy that may affect the policies of the national Government with reference to education in general, it goes without saying that the Board of Regents is bound to bear in mind the policies of the Government as may be enunciated through acts of the national Assembly or executive orders of the Chief Executive. Otherwise I hope the Board will assume full responsibility for the selection of all the personnel of the Institution which under the law it is in duty bound to appoint. While the President of the University is appointed by me, what I say with reference to the members of the Board of Regents is applicable to him; that is, he will assume full responsibility for his acts and the Board must consider the recommendations of the President and act thereon according to the merits of the case as judged by the Board.

I hope I have made my attitude perfectly clear with regard to the prerogatives of the Board of Regents as well as with respect to the manner of selection of the University personnel by the members of the Board of Regents.

With warmest regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Letter of President Quezon on Contemplated Dissolution of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, November 10, 1936

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Contemplated Dissolution of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

[Released on November 10, 1936]

Dear Madam:

My attention has been called to a news item published in a morning paper regarding a contemplated meeting of the Board of Directors of the S. P. C. A. to discuss the question of the dissolution of the Society upon the assumption that my approval of the bill recently passed by the National Assembly, withdrawing from the Society the power to appoint agents with authority to make arrests of violators of the law for the protection of animals and consequently reverting to the treasury all fines imposed for violations of said law, implies withdrawal of official support from the Society. I earnestly hope that the Society will not be dissolved just on this account.

I cannot understand why the Society, and for the matter anyone else, should imply for the enactment of this law, that official support has been withdrawn from the Society. In a public statement, I have explained why I felt it my duty to sign the bill. It is wrong in principle and dangerous in practice to leave in the hands of any private institution the enforcement of any law, especially when there is a punishment for the violation of said law. It is a confession of either weakness or indifference, or both, on the part of the Government not to enforce its own laws. The fact that similar laws exist in the United States and in England does not justify its existence here. That which is fundamentally wrong is not made right because first-class powers do it. The evident reason why it had to-be done in America and in England is because cruelty to animals is a comparatively new moral concept amongst civilized peoples and the community in general has not been sufficiently educated to react strongly against it. Of course, this is true in the Philippines, more so than in England or America. But the remedy does not lie in placing the responsibility for enforcing the law in the hands of a private society, but rather in making the officials of the Government charged with the duty of enforcing the laws, comply strictly with their sworn duty, regardless of the indifferent or even hostile attitude of the general public.

As Chief Executive, it is my first and most important duty to execute the laws. And I shall enforce every law regardless of the attitude of the public thereto as long as they remain in the statute books. I cannot admit that any private society will be more interested than the Executive Department of this Government in the enforcement of our laws, including the one for the protection of animals.

I see that the Society has rendered other services besides capturing violators of the law, such as the maintenance of a hospital for taking care of sick animals. This is a service that the Society can and should continue to render. The Society can also help Government agents to detect infractions of the law and bring offenders to the courts for punishment. And, most important of all, the Society's aims could best be served by, disseminating information to the public so as to educate the people and inculcate in them that nobility of sentiment which insures the humane and kind treatment of all animals.

In closing I can assure you and your associates that with or without the Society I shall see to it that the law for the prevention of cruelty to animals is enforced in all its rigor; but I do hope that the Society will continue to cooperate and help the Government in this humane enterprise.

Very truly yours,

Letter of President Quezon on President's participation in the XXXIII International Eucharistic Congress, January 9, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

PRESIDENT'S PARTICIPATION IN THE XXXIII INTER—NATIONAL EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS

[January 9, 1937]

Your Grace:

With reference to the proposed program for my participation in the XXXIII International Eucharistic Congress, which, at first glance, I thought referred to my personal participation therein and therefore expressed my approval thereof, I have noticed upon further consideration that what is intended in the program is that the Papal Legate shall be officially welcomed by the President of the Philippines in behalf of the Government of the Commonwealth, on one hand, and as the Head of the Nation and in behalf thereof, on the other.

In the first place, I desire to inform Your Grace that I find it absolutely necessary for me to leave for the United States, and to arrive in Washington, D. C., by a certain definite date, for the purpose of conferring with the President of the United States on very important affairs of State; and in order to make sure that I do not fail to be present at the conference at the appointed time, I shall have to take the Empress of Canada from Hongkong on the 26th of this month, leaving Manila on the Victoria on the 23rd in order to connect with the Empress. Much to my regret, therefore, I shall not be present in Manila during the Eucharistic Congress.

In the second place, I am informed by competent authority that the Government of the Philippines may not render His Eminence, the Papal Legate, honors that might in any way be construed as a recognition of him as a representative of a foreign State; that the Papal Legate should be regarded as an ecclesiastic of high rank without any official status, and should not, therefore, be accorded official honors which cannot properly be accorded to other distinguished non-official visitors to the Philippines.

The wording of the program as to the participation of the President of the Commonwealth in the ceremonies in honor of the Papal Legate may be construed as an official participation of the Government of the Commonwealth in these ceremonies. I must, therefore, request that all references to the President, or to the Government, of the Commonwealth be eliminated from the program of the Eucharistic Congress.

I hope I am a good practical Catholic. As such, in my individual capacity, there is nothing that I shall not be glad to do to give added solemnity to the celebration of the Eucharistic Congress. I am also most anxious, as a private individual professing the Catholic faith, to render honors and pay tribute to His Eminence, the Papal Legate; but, as the President of the Philippines, I am not in a position to do what your program calls for. There are many things that I have done, stretching very much my authority, in an effort to make the Eucharistic Congress a great success. Of this Your Grace is well informed.

The invitation to the Papal Legate to be my guest at Malacañan stands; and in view of my forthcoming absence from the Islands, I shall designate some one who will see to it that everything is done to make the stay of His Eminence as pleasant and comfortable as my resources will permit. Mrs. Quezon feels that, in view of my absence, she had better go and live in one of our private houses during the stay of the Papal Legate in the palace.

I am instructing the Mayor of the City to provide the Papal Legate with an appropriate police escort that will insure not only his safety but also his prompt and timely arrival at the places where His Eminence may have or desire to go.

I am also giving instructions to have one of the coastguards in readiness for the use of the Papal Legate in visiting some cities of the southern islands. I shall not assume the responsibility of sending His Eminence to the northern part of the Archipelago during this northeast monsoon season.

One of my automobiles will also be at the disposal of the Papal Legate during the time he is in the City.

Respectfully,

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES ON

RESIGNATION OF INSULAR COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS ALDANESE

[January 20, 1937]

Dear Mr. Aldanese:

In reply to your letter of resignation as Insular Collector of Customs, effective at the convenience of the Government, and which I have had in my hands for a long time now, I am accepting the same with great regret, effective at the close of business, January 31, 1937.

As I examine your record of service I find that your first appointment as a mere clerk in the Cebu Customs Service dates as of April 4, 1899, a very long time ago; that you have steadily risen through the various intervening grades in the Customs service until, early in 1918, you were promoted to the very difficult and important post of Insular Collector of Customs, the trying duties of which you have loyally, efficiently, and graciously discharged to the benefit of the public.

I want to give public recognition to your splendid performance and I am sorry indeed that in fairness to you I feel I must not keep you any longer in the service.

I wish you health and success in all your undertakings.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on absence during the XXXIII International Eucharistic Congress, January 23, 1937

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
ABSENCE DURING THE XXXIII INTERNATIONAL EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS

[January 23, 1937]

My dear Cardinal Dougherty:

I regret, more than I can say, my inability to be present in Manila during the XXXIII International Eucharistic Congress to greet and extend to Your Eminence my most hearty welcome. I hope and pray that the Congress may be a great success and that Your Eminence and the other prelates and visitors may have a pleasant visit here.

Although I shall be absent, my invitation extended to Your Eminence to be my guest at Malacañan stands, and everything will be done to make Your Eminence feel the warmth of Filipino hospitality. It is my pleasure to say that although we have maintained strict noninterference, either on the part of the State with the affairs of the Church, or on the part of the Church with those of the State, as commanded in the Constitution, my relations with the dignitaries of the Catholic Church in the Islands have been most cordial, and the Archbishop of Manila, whose See is at the capital, has cooperated in every possible way that is within his province for the success of the new Government and the welfare of our people.

The selection of Manila as the place for the celebration of this International Eucharistic Congress has doubtless contributed to place this new nation before the eyes of the world, and so, even leaving aside considerations of spiritual character which I would not care to discuss in this letter, in this respect alone I feel that we should be deeply appreciative, as we actually are, of this distinction given us by His Holiness. The designation of Your Eminence as the Papal Legate has been particularly thoughtful and happy for it affords the Filipinos the opportunity of showing Your Eminence that the memory of our past relationship, when Your Eminence was the Bishop of the dioceses of Nueva Segovia and Jaro, remains fresh in our hearts.

With assurances of my respect and high consideration, I beg to be Very faithfully yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Filipinization of the Archbishopric of Manila, September 8, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

FILIPINIZATION OF THE ARCHBISHOPRIC OF MANILA

[September 8, 1937]

Sirs:

I have before me your letter of July 22, 1937, in which you ask me to request His Holiness to Filipinize the position of the Archbishop of Manila. In answer to your petition, let me inform you that under the Constitution, the Government of the Commonwealth cannot interfere with purely ecclesiastical affairs and the principal duty of the President of the Philippines is to obey and enforce the clauses and provisions of the Constitution. I am, therefore, constrained to deny your petition to intercede in favor of the immediate Filipinization of the Archbishopric of Manila.

It would not be superfluous to remind you that the prohibition in the Constitution regarding any interference in ecclesiastical or religious matters has for its motive not only the protection of the right of the citizen to profess the religion that his conscience dictates him to follow, but also to protect any religion from any attempt on the part of the civil authorities to meddle or control the affairs that pertain to the Church. It is of utmost importance to the Church itself, and no less to the State, that the separation of their powers, as well as the independence of one from the other within their respective spheres of action, be held inviolate. In denying then, your petition, I should want it known that the policy of this Government is to follow strictly the letter and the spirit of those precepts of the Constitution which prohibit the interference by the State in ecclesiastical matters, and which likewise imply the firm stand of the State in not allowing the ecclesiastical authorities from meddling in purely State matters.

Very respectfully,

Letter of President Quezon on Father Edwin Ronan as Organizer of the Philippine Army Chaplain's Service, September 17, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

FATHER EDWIN RONAN AS ORGANIZER OF THE PHILIPPINE ARMY CHAPLAIN'S SERVICE

[September 17, 1937]

My dear General Santos:

While in the United States, I designated Father Edwin Ronan as my adviser in the organization of that branch of the Army known as the Chaplain's Service. I selected Father Edwin to advise me in this work because of his unusual qualifications.

During the World War, the American Expeditionary Forces had in Europe a corps of chaplains composed of Protestants, Catholics, and Jews. This corps was headed by the late Bishop Brent of the Episcopal Church—one time the Bishop of that Church in the Philippines. Under Bishop Brent, Father Edwin, as head of the Catholic chaplains of the American Expeditionary Forces, acquired invaluable training, experience, and understanding, which qualify him preeminently to advise in this work. So far as I know, no Catholic priest or other minister of a faith or creed residing in the Philippines has ever had any assignment comparable to this rich and broadening experience.

It is very important in a service where representatives of different religions, creeds, and churches must work in cooperation, that any possible friction growing out of religious intolerance be absolutely avoided. Not only this, but it is of the utmost importance that religious tolerance be insured amongst priests and ministers who are called into the service.

Father Edwin had occasion, not only to see, but also to practise in Europe during the World War and among the American Expeditionary Forces, this essential principle. As I pointed out before, he served under a Protestant Bishop and as head of the Catholic Chaplains' Division he mingled and dealt with the respective chaplain heads of the other faiths and religions. I feel confident, therefore, that Father Edwin, acting as my adviser and placed under you, will do very valuable work in the organization of the Chaplain Service of the Philippine Army. With his great tact and ability, his tolerance for other people's opinions and beliefs, he will be a living example of what we expect from the chaplains of the Philippine Army.

The large majority of the Filipinos profess the Roman Catholic Faith; a minority, but a substantial minority, belongs to what is known as the Independent Philippine Church. Still a great number, running to hundreds of thousands, are Mohammedans; a small minority are Protestants. It is my purpose to have Roman Catholic, Aglipayan, Mohammedan, and Protestant chaplains in this service, and you are hereby directed and authorized to proceed at once with the organization of the said service.

Father Edwin, I am sure, will be of great help to you. I am not giving him a commission in the Philippine Army for he may not be commissioned—being an American, not a Filipino citizen. But as my adviser, and for the purpose of insuring the effectiveness of his help in this work, I am authorizing him to use the uniform of the Army if and whenever necessary with the insignia of major. I am giving him the salary and emoluments corresponding to this rank.

I am very much interested in the organization of a Chaplain's Service not only because the National Defense Act so authorizes, but also because I am deeply convinced that religion is a moral force of incalculable value for good, and I am determined to take every precaution that will guarantee to our Army the whole benefits contemplated by the creation of this service. Let me avow publicly the firm conviction that faith in God and the practice of one's religious belief keeps a man, perhaps more than any other consideration, within the bounds of law and helps him in the performance of his duties. This is not to say, of course, that an atheist or a man without religion may not be a good citizen. It is, however, true that a people who profess collectively some religion and who honestly and intelligently practise that religion which they profess, are in little danger of social disorder and disintegration.

Therefore, in organizing the chaplain service, it is my desire and command that officers and enlisted men in the Philippine Army be given the opportunity to attend to the practices of their respective churches or religions and at convenient times to be enlightened in the principles, rules and dogmas of their respective faiths. No proselyting will be tolerated in the Army on the part of any church; each officer and soldier will be asked his religious preference. When in camp or garrison, the chaplain of a given church or religion says mass, holds service, or conducts preaching, there must be no interference with the freedom of choice on the part of the officers and men as to which one they shall attend.

Father Edwin has been instructed to report to you and to do such work as you may direct.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on suppression of lawlessness in Lanao, September 20, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

SUPPRESSION OF LAWLESSNESS IN LANA O

[September 20, 1937]

My dear General Santos:

I am in receipt of reports, including official ones from Assemblyman Cabili and others, that unwise and ineffective policies have been pursued by the authorities in their attempts to suppress lawlessness in Lanao. According to these reports it has been the practice to permit Moros, when they have real or fancied grievances against the Government, to assemble in some outlying district, where they build a cotta to be used as a protected operating base in defying and resisting the representatives of the law. Only after the recalcitrants have been afforded time for deliberate preparation of their defenses has it been the habit of responsible government officials, either provincial or Constabulary, to appear upon the scene and to attempt to pacify the outlaws, or to dissuade them from projected resort to armed resistance. The immediate result has invariably been an intensification of efforts on the part of the Moros to strengthen their defenses, while the eventual one has been the precipitation of a battle between the Constabulary on the one hand, and the misguided Moros on the other. Moreover, it appears that, upon surrender, even after offering armed resistance to the forces of the law, Moros have frequently been allowed to go free without prosecution in the established courts.

The situation represented in these reports is an intolerable one; one that, if allowed to continue, will breed increasing difficulty and embarrassment for orderly and efficient government.

You will immediately direct all military officers in the Moro regions to observe the following instructions in dealing with lawlessness and with groups known to be preparing for armed resistance against the Government:

Every individual in the military service, whether or not serving in a Constabulary unit, will report immediately to his next superior any information coming to him of actual or projected law violation, and such information will be promptly and fully transmitted to the Constabulary official responsible for maintenance of law and order in the locality.

Every responsible official, upon learning of a gathering of Moros in large number and without proper permission, will immediately proceed to the place of assembly with sufficient force to meet any unexpected resistance and to protect against ambush. If such groups are found to be armed they will, before approaching them, be ordered to surrender all weapons. When this has been done the officer in charge will, tactfully but firmly, make exhaustive inquiry into the reasons for the assemblage. Careful explanation will be made of the offenses involved in conspiring to offer armed resistance to the Government, or of building cottas in preparation for such armed resistance. They will be informed of the punishment attaching to conviction of such offenses, and will be carefully warned that, if found at another time gathered for the same purpose, they will be arrested. They will then be ordered to disband immediately. Should such assemblages refuse to disband, or after a reasonable time it should be found that they are gathered in the same or another place for illegal purposes, such as the building of cottas, they will be arrested and brought before the courts.

At any time that a military detachment discovers any unlawful assemblage, particularly when a cotta has been built or is in the process of building, and, upon proper demand, the surrender of weapons therein is refused, the place should be attacked and demolished as quickly as sufficient force is at hand to assure success. From the beginning of any such untoward and unfortunate incident the full force of available military units will be brought to bear to bring it to an end expeditiously and effectively.

In no case may any officer of the Army or the Constabulary assume the right to neglect his duty to prosecute those who offer armed resistance to, or otherwise violate, the law. All information at his command will be immediately furnished to officials responsible for the conduct of such prosecutions, and full and complete report of the incident itself and of the information furnished will be promptly forwarded to the next military superior.

No member of the Constabulary or of the Army, from the Chief of Staff down to the last soldier, at any station in the Philippines, is vested with any power or right to enter into an agreement with any violator of the law whereby such offender is guaranteed or promised freedom from criminal prosecution. To do so is to assume, in effect, the right of granting pardons, a power that by constitutional provision is exclusively vested in the President. Where any officer believes that such pardon should be granted, his recommendations, with reasons therefor, will be forwarded through his military superiors to the President, after he has discharged his full official duty in assuring the prompt prosecution of the offender. The principle that in the courts alone, subject to the pardoning power of the President, resides the authority to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused, and to fix the degree of punishment for law violation, must be rigidly observed by every member of your command. Proven disregard of this principle by any individual will result in his immediate separation from the service.

Every cotta now existing in the Moro region will be immediately destroyed, except such, if there be any, which, for its historical interest should be preserved. In this case the cotta may be preserved under the supervision and control of the military authorities. With this exception, all cottas in every section of the territory inhabited by Moros will be promptly demolished. Should any lack of personnel or available funds impede the execution of this order you will make, without delay, a full report of all the facts to this office.

Sincerely yours,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

BARREDO-CUEVO CASE

[September 23, 1937]

My dear Mr. Chief Justice:

Although I have already given out a statement that when I expressed publicly my opinion on the Barredo case I had not been informed that it was pending before the Supreme Court for adjudication, my writing you directly on the subject will perhaps serve a good purpose.

Let me state first—to show how I feel generally about discussing a question sub judice—that at the same press conference in which my opinion of the Barredo case was asked, I declined to comment on Judge Vera's decision on the Cu Unjieng case, upon the ground, as I then stated, that it was pending before the High Tribunal for decision.

I take it, knowing you and every member of the Court— and so I feel certain thereof—that either the Court collectively or its members individually, in arriving at a conclusion on the Barredo case, will in no way be influenced by either what I have said or by what the people may think of their decision. I am confident, too, that you and your associates will, on your part, feel as certain that I would expect you to ignore entirely what I have said on the subject.

If you and the Court believe that it will be in the public interest to have this letter published, please feel at liberty to do so.

Letter of President Quezon on Balatoc Mining Company Test Case, September 25, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

BALATOC MINING COMPANY TEST CASE

[September 25, 1937]

My dear Judge Haussermann:

Secretary Yulo has gone personally into the Balatoc Mining Company test case and he has reported his findings to me. The Secretary is convinced that this case is not the proper case to be submitted to the court for a determination of the rights that are protected by the Constitution with reference to mining claims. In this case there are questions of fact that must be determined first by the courts, facts that, according to the evidence in the possession of the Government, vitiate any alleged rights that the Balatoc Mining Company may have. Indeed, I must tell you that the evidence in the possession of the Government places the Balatoc Mining Company in a light that I feel sure you would not wish the company to appear and that you yourself will be interested in having the facts thoroughly presented to the courts for adjudication. Under the circumstances, I have authorized the Secretary of Justice to go ahead and conduct this case in a manner that will compel the presentation of the facts in controversy to the court and its decision as to what the facts are, as verified from the evidence of either side.

I hope I need not reiterate in this letter what I have stated in your presence and in the presence of your lawyers, DeWitt and Recto, as well as in the presence of the Solicitor-General and Assistant Attorney Concepcion. The statements that I then made I repeated to Secretary Yulo upon his return, first in a conference I had with him when no one else was present, and in a conference that we had together with Justice Recto, namely, that I am still desirous to have the court decide what is intended by the Constitution when it safeguarded acquired rights in mining claims. I still am prepared to get the Government to cooperate with the mining industry in an effort to have this matter settled amicably and fairly to both sides. But this particular case which we have at hand does not appear to me the right case for an amicable settlement. The Government must protect its rights and must not be placed in a position where it would seem to tolerate an open defiance or violation of the law, done with the full knowledge that the law is being defied or violated.

PRESIDENTIAL SUPPORT OF ASSEMBLYMEN'S REELECTION

[September 29, 1937]

My dear Assemblyman Quimpo:

I have read in the "Kasarinlan" my telegram addressed to you, dated September 8, 1937. I want to say that you have no right to publish that telegram, and you have given me reason to doubt whether I should support you in your campaign for reelection. You know that the sending of that telegram expressing my support of your reelection is not due to my special interest in your case, but a fulfillment of the promise I had made to all the members of the National Assembly that I would, regardless of his loyalty to the party or to me, give my support to every member seeking reelection, who, judging from his records, has shown, not only patriotism and ability, but also knowledge of the problems confronting the Government and a determination to contribute his part to carry out policies that will promote the general well-being of the people.

You will remember, I am sure, that when I made that statement, I took special pains to impress upon the members of the National Assembly that my concept of their worth to the country and my willingness to support them for reelection did not depend upon the fact that they voted for every measure that I recommended to the National Assembly; and that if and when a member of the National Assembly should have any objection to any measure recommended by me because in his own conscience he could not support my recommendation, that fact should not prevent me from supporting him, as I would consider it an evidence of his worthiness to continue in his position as a member of the National Assembly. I did say, however, that I deem it my duty to fight any member of the National Assembly seeking reelection, if and when I find that he opposed my recommendation to the National Assembly and did that only to show to the people that he could defy me, for in such a case I thought that I had the right to test whether the people were with the National Assembly or with me; that no member of the National Assembly had the right to secure my support and at the same time appear before the people, making it his issue that he has fought the policies of the administration or of the President.

Letter of President Quezon on Clean and Orderly Elections, September 30, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

CLEAN AND ORDERLY ELECTIONS

[September 30, 1937]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

The coming general elections being the first to be held under the Commonwealth Government, I am particularly desirous of taking every precaution that will prevent, as much as human ingenuity will permit, the commission of any act in violation of the Election Law, with a view to inspiring confidence among the people in the high purposes of the National Government, and avoiding suspicion that it is permitting, directly or indirectly, any undue influence to be exerted in the election of a particular candidate, especially to the position of provincial governor.

I, therefore, request you to take every step that is necessary: (a) to enforce, not only the letter but also the spirit of the law, so as to guarantee to the minority proper representation in the polling places (colegios electorales); (b) to prevent government officials, who, under the law are prohibited from directly or indirectly taking part in election campaigns, from supporting directly or indirectly any candidate in the coming elections; and (c) to use the legal means in your power to stop, without unnecessary or unavoidable delay, any illegal act that may be committed.

In this connection, I have given very serious and deliberate thought to the question as to whether the governors now in office should be allowed to continue in their present positions if they are candidates for reelection. Commonwealth Act No. 199, passed by the National Assembly at its last session, provides that provincial and municipal officials shall continue in office even after the expiration of their term, unless the Chief Executive decides to replace them prior to November 15th, 1937. I have adopted the policy of leaving all provincial and municipal officials in office until they should cease by operation of law. I deem this to be the only safe procedure to follow in order to avoid the commission of either injustice or mistakes. Presently, however, I am confronted with the practical question of whether or not I should allow provincial governors who are candidates for reelection to remain in office and thus enable them to have this advantage over their opponents. It should be borne in mind that these provincial governors have already been benefited by the provisions of Commonwealth Act No. 199, when they were allowed to continue in office beyond the expiration of the term for which they had been elected. Considering that the Chief Executive is responsible under the law for determining whether or not they should remain in office, to permit them to continue therein, whether they are candidates or not, would be, in a way, to give them, by choice of the Chief Executive, an advantage over their opponents. I desire to adopt the policy of complete neutrality in these coming elections, in order to inspire greater confidence in the people that the Executive departments of the Government will enforce the Election Law in its integrity. I have to come to the conclusion that I can in no better way show that impartiality than by deciding to appoint acting governors in all those provinces where the present incumbents are candidates for reelection. I, therefore, request you to write at once to all provincial governors, asking them whether they are candidates for reelection, and to inform them that if they are, the Chief Executive shall designate acting governors to act until the elections are over. Perhaps it would be better if I designate in each case one of the provincial officials to act as governor, and thus save money for the province and at the same time avoid having to choose the acting governor from the party that will take part in the coming elections. However, I want you to consider this matter and to submit your recommendations to me.

In the case of municipal officials, I do not deem it of sufficient importance to justify a wholesale change, in view of their great number, and as it would be practically impossible to find nonpartisan substitutes in most cases or to make new designations with some reasonable assurance that such appointed officials would discharge their duties well.

Respectfully,

Letter of President Quezon on Electoral Campaigns by Civil-Service Employees and on fair and orderly Provincial and Municipal Elections, October 7, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

ELECTORAL CAMPAIGNS BY CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES AND ON FAIR AND ORDERLY PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

[October 7, 1937]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

As you well know, for I have repeatedly stated not only in the sessions of the Cabinet but also in my conferences with you, it is my desire and plain purpose to have these coming elections—the first general elections under the Commonwealth—conducted in full compliance with existing laws. It is of general knowledge that in the past, officials and employees of the Government who are subject to Civil Service rules and regulations have been taking part in the elections directly or indirectly in violation of such rules and regulations. This condition must not continue, so please instruct the officials under your Department to take immediate action and investigate every complaint directed against public servants engaging in electoral activities, and if there is reasonable ground for administrative action, please refer the matter at once to the Department concerned. All officials and employees of the Government should know that drastic action will be taken against them for participating in electoral campaigns in violation of Civil Service rules and regulations. The time has come for a due and full enforcement of the Civil Service law.

These early years of the Commonwealth Government constitute the proper time for laying the foundation of a real and lasting democracy in the Philippines and for discarding all practices tending to frustrate the will of the people in the choice of their public servants. Particularly the justices of the peace, the police, and the school teachers must be impressed with the necessity not only of not taking any part in the elections other than to exercise their right to vote, but also of not giving any ground for suspicion that they have partisan leanings.

Of course, Secretaries of Department are under the law given the privilege to take active part in the electoral campaigns and I would not deprive them of this privilege unless in a given case I should feel that public interest so requires or that their intervention in the campaign may be construed as an evidence that I myself am interested in the victory of any given candidate.

I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to say to the people that provincial and municipal elections are of no concern to me personally or to my administration except to see to it that they are fairly and orderly conducted. The provincial and municipal governments have no direct voice or control in national affairs and they cannot in any way be an obstacle to the execution of the policies to which my administration is committed. Of course, we would need the cooperation of provincial and municipal officials, and the law wisely places in the hands of the Chief Executive effective means whereby he can compel local functionaries to cooperate with the National Government in the execution of its policies as determined by law. It is for this reason that it is futile for candidates for provincial and municipal offices to discuss national issues or national policies, which they have no right or power to define, direct or control, unless perhaps it is used as an opportunity to educate and inform the people as to the meaning and import of such policies and to create public opinion for or against them, which is one of the plausible objectives of an electoral campaign. But it is well to remind these candidates for provincial and municipal offices at this time that their main concern should be directed to what they can do in the interest of their respective provinces and municipalities or cities. For otherwise, that is to say, if they should go out of their own field of action, they are liable to find, once they are elected, that they are impotent to carry out their implied or expressed promises to their electors.

I hope that these provincial and municipal elections, which the National Assembly purposely decided to hold separately from the national elections, precisely to separate local from national issues so that the vote of the people may be given its proper interpretation and meaning, will be utilized in the discussion of those problems which vitally affect their respective localities.

Copy of this letter will be sent to every Secretary of Department.

Very sincerely yours,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Letter of President Quezon on Three-point Policy for Mindanao and Sulu, October 8, 1937

Letter*
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Three-Point Policy for Mindanao and Sulu

[Released on October 8, 1937]

Sir:

I have the honor to inform you that your letter of the 2nd instant, addressed to His Excellency, the President, in which you comment on his "three-point policy" on the affairs of Mindanao and Sulu, has been received. In this connection permit me to call your attention to the fact that in his memorandum to the Secretary of the Interior dated September 20, 1937, His Excellency does not seek to interfere with the use of titles by Moro sultans or datus so long as it is clearly understood that a title carries with it no official rights or privileges. What the President desires to emphasize is that there are no privileged classes under this Government and no authority vested on any individual not occupying an official position. In other words, the President is determined to consider and to act towards the Mohammedan Filipinos as he considers and acts towards the Christians, precisely because he agrees with you that the so-called Moro problem is a myth.

His Excellency appreciates your kind interest in his administration, particularly in matters affecting your district, and he wishes me to inform you that your recommendation for the retention of Major Leon Angeles as Provincial Governor of Sulu for the time being, will be given due consideration.

PRESIDENT

Excellency
PHILIPPINES
Palace

Dear Mr. President:

1. In recent issues of the local dailies, I read with deep interest the released copy of Your Excellency's Memorandum, addressed to the Honorable, the Secretary of the Interior, in which Your Excellency's "Three-Point Policies," defining how affairs in Moroland are to be administered, was embodied. As Your Excellency's loyal supporter, I cannot let the news pass without commenting on the policies, especially in their relations to my district.

2. The policy of giving a free hand to the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu on all plans he may deem fit to execute is indeed plausible and commendable, and it could not have been otherwise. As a matter of fact, I joined Assemblymen Fortich and Cabili in endorsing that policy to Your Excellency when the measure was yet pending the action of the National Assembly.

3. As to the non-recognition of the various titles, a practice still adhered to by the various Mohammedan elements in Mindanao and Sulu, I think, Mr. President, the policy as released covering this subject was most unnecessary, as the non-recognition has already taken effect since the abrogation of the Bates Treaty and the implantation of the Civil Government in the regions referred to. In the agreement concluded between the Sultan of Sulu and Frank Carpenter, then Secretary of the Department of Mindanao and Sulu, the former is recognized as a temporal head of that region and as such his office is confined to religious activities. In the light of these facts the Government, I think, Mr. President, has no right to interfere with them so long as no law or order is infringed. The religious titles ever since in vogue in the Mohammedan regions are akin to religious titles enjoyed and practiced by the different Christian sects.

4. The policy of suppressing the practice of appointing army officers as governors in Moro provinces is one thing about which I beg to be allowed to discuss at length and with liberty. The administration dating back to the early American administrators, had initiated various policies principally intended to maintain peace and order, but lamentably never promulgated policies to effect universal improvements in those regions. As a result of this uncomprehensive plan, the accomplishments were nothing more than the blowing out of the Moro cottas and enactment of other bloody dramas. Judging from the records of the past, it seems that questions of efficiency of administration in Moroland depend in a large measure, upon the personal ability, integrity and far-sightedness of the local administrator rather than by imposing rigid obedience to mutable policies.

5. Regarding the present incumbent, Major Leon Angeles, his administration since his appointment is one worthy of praise and commendation. His experience and adeptness in understanding conditions obtaining in the province, make him the most logical man to remain in the position for sometime until Your Excellency think otherwise. He is the most capable Filipino governor ever appointed to that position. I believe that in justice to the incumbent, Your Excellency should allow him to remain for sometime in order that he could accomplish the projects he has just started.

6. Talks of Moro problems, both of the past and the present, have been the topics deafening the ears of the public. The Moros, myself included, are ignorant of the so-called Moro problems, and we emphatically deny its existence.

7. In passing, I beg leave to state that in Mindanao Your Excellency has two groups of supporters: the first are those who readily yield assent to what Your Excellency say, and the second, those who study Your Excellency's policy and offer constructive criticisms and suggestions to the end that the country may be benefited. I am happy that I belong to the second group so that if I express myself openly and frankly, it is because it is my honest and sincere belief that in doing so, I am helping and coöperating with Your Excellency to perfect a policy conducive to the general welfare of my people.

Respectfully yours,

NONPARTICIPATION IN PROVINCIAL, AND MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

[October 8, 1937]

This letter is intended for the provincial governor and members of the National Assembly from Iloilo.

Conformably with the policy I have already enunciated to you in person, I desire to reiterate the position I have taken in regard to the coming elections that I shall take no part nor interest in the election of any candidate for any provincial, city or municipal office and that the Nacionalista Party cannot have an official candidate unless one is so selected by agreement between the "Anti" and "Pro" factions who have joined the new Nacionalista Party in a given province or locality, as agreed upon at the recent national convention.

Letter of President Quezon on Disinterestedness in Local Politics of Cebu, October 23, 1937

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

DISINTERESTEDNESS IN LOCAL POLITICS OF CEBU

[October 23, 1937]

My dear Vice-President Osmeña:

My attention has been called to an article by one Rafael A. Bautista, appearing in the Advertiser, a newspaper published in Cebu, for Thursday, October the 14th, 1937. I understand the paper is owned by José Avila, one of the well known political followers of yours in the province. In this article the agreement held by the Anti and Pro leaders of Cebu regarding candidates for provincial officials in that province is made to appear as a dictation from me. This is not only unfair, but also entirely false, and I think the time has come for me to state publicly that such intervention as I have had in the transactions had between Anti and Pro leaders in Cebu, has been due mainly to your own request, and that, as a matter of fact, I have done it, not only reluctantly, but also with great discomfort and displeasure. The same thing is true with reference to anything that I had to do with attempts at fixing conflicting candidacies in other parts of the Archipelago. I have been annoyed every time that I have been approached by either side on matters of this kind, and if and when I have consented to take any part at all, however passive, I have done it only when both parties have agreed to come to me on their own volition and have made it appear to me that it was in the best interest of the province, not only of the newly fused party itself, that some kind of agreement be arrived at.

Let it be known, once and for all, that every time I am approached on purely political matters a disfavor is done to me personally, if not to my administration. The duties of my office are too exacting, and I need all the time I can dispose of for my own relaxation, and not share it with party affairs, which, at least, as far as provincial and municipal elections are concerned, can have no possible effect on national policies. Will you be kind enough to make it clear to the people of your province that neither in the case of the last agreement, nor in the case of my friend, Judge Cui, who was importuned by us, have I been in any way interested in being dragged into the local politics of Cebu?

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Spanish-Fascist Propaganda in San Juan de Letran College, November 10, 1937

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
SPANISH-FASCIST PROPAGANDA IN SAN JUAN DE LETRAN COLLEGE

[November 10, 1937]

Esteemed Father Rector:

The statement attributed to you which appeared in the "Herald" of the 8th of this month has impressed me disagreeably. You do not appear to give the proper importance to the unfortunate incident which provoked my public disapproval in the address I made at the alumni banquet of the College of San Juan de Letran in the presence of yourself and other authorities of that institution.

I believed that what I said on that occasion would be sufficient to make you and the rest of the Spanish residents of the Philippines realize that this Government does not, and cannot, approve of the Philippines being converted into a theater of propaganda for the sympathizers of the contending parties in Spain in order to further their interests. As I said in my address, we Filipinos have no reason to take sides in that contest one way or the other. Our interest must be limited to a desire to see peace reestablished in Spain and to have that country, with which we are united by historical ties, once more engage in the pursuits of peace and progress and occupy its place in the concert of nations.

Your explanation, according to the "Herald," that the Spanish Fascist march was played in honor of my friend, the Marquis of Mellin, is a reiteration of your belief that within the Letran College Spaniards who are partisans of General Franco have a right to give public recognition to the government of the latter. Furthermore, you evidently consider yourselves entitled to make propaganda for that government in the college, as shown by the fact, to which my attention has been called, that a pamphlet containing an article by Douglas Jerrold, and the Letran News, a publication of the Letran students an entire page of which was dedicated exclusively to General Franco, were distributed among the guests on the day of the banquet.

The Letran College is a school established in the Philippines and recognized by the Government. So long as the United States do not officially recognize General Franco's government as the constituted government of Spain, I consider it improper for a school recognized by the Philippine Government to serve as theater of propaganda to either of the parties at present warring in Spain. This includes the so-called loyalist government, although it is still the government recognized by the United States.

The Constitution imposes upon the Philippine State certain duties with reference to education. Interpreting the spirit of that document, unless you guarantee that the Letran College will cooperate with my government in its policy of absolute neutrality in the present conflict in Spain, I shall, much to my regret, be constrained to take such action as may in my judgment be proper for the protection of the youths of the Philippines attending that institution. I hope you will not place me in the necessity of taking such a step, which would cause me great distress because of the great affection which, as everybody knows, I cherish for the Letran College.

Letter of President Quezon on sale of books and notes by Professors in the University of the Philippines,
November 18, 1937

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
SALE OF BOOKS AND NOTES BY PROFESSORS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF THE PHILIPPINES

[November 18, 1937]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

Complaints have reached me to the effect that certain professors of the University of the Philippines practically compel their students to buy books or mimeographed notes that they themselves have written on the subjects they teach. I am told that this practice has been tolerated for many years, even during the administrations preceding President Bocobo's.

I consider such practice as fundamentally wrong, especially as some of these books and notes appear to be mere compilations and do not seem to have contributed anything new to the subjects with which they deal. A professor can have no reason to expect his students to read what he publishes unless he can offer them something new and meritorious or which is not readily available in authoritative publications. I understand, too, that the prices exacted for such books or mimeographed notes are, if not exorbitant, entirely out of proportion to their worth to such an extent that mere profit, it is alleged, seems to be the animating purpose.

I request you to ask the Board of Regents to order an investigation of this question, and to take appropriate action. A professor should always bear in mind that his example no less than his teaching should serve as a guide for his pupils to follow. Obviously, knowledge of subject-matter is an essential requirement, but honesty and integrity are, in my estimation, of even greater value. The influence of a dishonest professor over youth, at this impressionable age, is very damaging and its consequences cannot be foreseen. It is my earnest desire, Mr. Secretary, that not only among the professors of the University of the Philippines, but also in the whole teaching service, your Department should insist on the highest standard of conduct and behavior as indispensable qualifications.

It is requested that you give me a report of the findings of the Board of Regents and of the action taken thereon.

Sincerely yours,

ATTITUDE OF THE FILIPINO PEOPLE TOWARD CONGRESSMAN
O'MALLEY'S PROPOSED RESOLUTION ON IMMEDIATE FREEDOM

I shall not place myself in the position of refusing independence under any and all circumstances if and when it be so decided by the Congress. No self-respecting people would do otherwise.

O'Malleys proposed resolution represents an attitude regarding American-Philippine relationship that is not new nor very rare.

Fortunately for the good name of America and the welfare of the Filipino people such an attitude does not represent and never has represented the policy of neither the Executive Department of the United States Government nor of the American Congress.

By taking the Philippines forcibly both from Spain and from the Filipinos themselves America has voluntarily assumed, and it would seem deliberately, moral obligations towards the Filipino people as their guardian and trustee. This self-imposed obligation on the part of the United States has been publicly avowed by the American Government as voiced by McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, and every other President of the United States, including the present incumbent, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who has repeatedly confirmed with deeds his own public pronouncements in this regard. The Congress has adopted as the national policy toward the Philippines those declarations made by American chief executives.

The economic policy of America affecting the Philippines which she promulgated upon her own initiative and responsibility has created an economic situation here that makes imperative the granting of sufficient time for the economic readjustment of this country before the present trade relations are completely terminated, unless the granting of independence is to be made with utter disregard of the economic and financial consequences with all its implications to the Philippines.

The foregoing is our view of American-Filipino relations as established and avowed by acts of the American Congress and of the Executive Department of the American Government.

However, both as the authorized spokesman for our people and as a Filipino, I shall not place myself in the position of refusing independence under any and all circumstances if and when it be so decided by the Congress. No self-respecting people would do otherwise.

My own preference, and I think I represent the consensus in this country, arrived at after mature deliberation, is that it will be equally in the interest of America and of the Philippines if independence were to be granted at the end of this or the beginning of next year and at the same time a trade arrangement between the United States and the Philippines agreed upon substantially in line with the views of President Roosevelt as recently published in the press.

Letter of President Quezon on removal from the service of Provincial Fiscal Blanco and Assistant Provincial Fiscal Debuque of Iloilo, February 14, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On removal from the service of Provincial Fiscal Blanco and Assistant Provincial Fiscal Debuque of Iloilo

[Released on February 14, 1938]

My dear Secretary Yulo:

On January 28th last, José M. Nava, of Iloilo, sent me a telegram setting forth complaints against the action taken by the Provincial Governor and the Provincial Commander in the strike of laborers of the sugar centrals of Janiuay and Barotac in the Province of Iloilo. Among these complaints, there was one based specifically upon the alleged fact that a man, who was not even a striker, had been attacked by Captain Tando of the Philippine Army and others without cause, and confined in the municipal jail of Janiuay for four days with no charges having been presented against him before the courts, and kept handcuffed during the whole time he was detained.

On the same day, I ordered the Provincial Commander of Iloilo to investigate the charges and to report to me immediately. At the same time, I asked you to instruct the Provincial Fiscal of Iloilo to make a similar investigation.

On January 29th, Major Donesa, Provincial Commander of Iloilo, referring to the complaint regarding a man in the municipal jail of Janiuay, reported to me as follows:

“Diaz also stated that leg irons were placed around his legs when in jail from date of arrest to Sunday morning, eight o’clock (from 22nd to the 23rd of January) by order of the Chief of Police of Janiuay. Chief of Police of Janiuay stated he ordered policemen on guard to place leg irons whenever Diaz requested to go out at night for personal necessity as security for, according to the Chief of Police, Diaz is considered one of the bad men in the central.”

On the same day you received from the Acting Provincial Fiscal of Iloilo a report as follows :

It has been definitely established through a preliminary, and later, a formal investigation, wherein the Provincial Fiscal of Iloilo, Mr. Blanco, and his assistant, then acting as provincial fiscal, were present and heard that the said prisoner had been actually placed in leg irons by order of the Chief of Police of Janiuay. It also appears beyond doubts that the telegram of the Secretary of Justice addressed to the Provincial Fiscal of Iloilo ordering the investigation, was received by Fiscal Blanco who, being on leave of absence, referred it to Acting Fiscal Debuque; and that when Debuque sent his report to the Secretary of Justice as hereinbefore quoted, he knew that Leonardo Diaz had been placed in leg irons. It also appears that Fiscal Blanco saw this report before it was sent to the Secretary of Justice, and he also knew at that time that Leonardo Diaz had been placed in leg irons and yet allowed Debuque to send the said report.

Blanco offers as his defense that he was on leave of absence and he claims that the whole responsibility, if any, fell on Acting Fiscal Debuque. Fiscal Debuque, on his part, offers as his defense that he gave no importance to the placing of the prisoner in leg irons and, therefore, made no reference to it in his report to the Secretary of Justice; that he believed that the order of investigation by the Secretary of Justice was intended to determine whether the arrest of Leonardo Diaz was legal or illegal.

It is my opinion, and I so declare, that Fiscal Blanco has been negligent in the performance of his duties as Provincial Fiscal of Iloilo. Granting that he was on leave of absence, yet having himself received the telegram of the Secretary of Justice, he should, even if he did not consider himself in duty bound to make the investigation, have seen to it that the investigation was properly conducted by his assistant, Debuque, then acting provincial fiscal. And above all, he should have caused the report sent to the Secretary of Justice to be a truthful report. If I were to be very strict in passing judgment upon the conduct of Fiscal Blanco, I should declare him guilty as an accomplice of the same offense committed by his assistant, but I think the interest of justice will be served sufficiently by merely declaring Fiscal Blanco negligent in the performance of his duties, and ordering, as I hereby order, that his resignation be demanded with the understanding that upon his refusal to submit it, he would be removed from office.

As for the acting Provincial Fiscal, Mr. Debuque, it is my opinion, and I so order, that he be removed from office at once, and that the matter be sent to the acting fiscal of Iloilo for his study as to whether a criminal action should be taken or not against Debuque.

I am shocked to learn of the defense presented by the fiscals of Iloilo to the effect that they give no importance to the illegal and cruel treatment given to a prisoner accused of only such a crime as carrying a bolo. The conduct of these fiscals and the Chief of Police of Janiway reveals an attitude of mind towards defenseless people who may be arrested for some offense that cannot be tolerated.

You will, Mr. Secretary, demand by telegraph that Provincial Fiscal Blanco should submit his resignation within one week, and inform him that failing to do so, he will be removed from office. You will also telegraph Assistant and Deputy Fiscal Debuque of his separation from the service, effective the day of his suspension.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on dismissal of the Chief of Police of Janiuay, Iloilo, and of a secret service agent of the city of Iloilo, February 14, 1938

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

DISMISSAL OF THE CHIEF OF POLICE OF JANIUAY, ILOILO, AND OF A SECRET SERVICE AGENT OF THE CITY OF ILOILO

[February 14, 1938]

My dear Secretary Quirino:

After careful consideration of the complete report of investigation of the complaint against the Chief of Police of Janiuay, conducted under my instructions by Judge Enage, I have concluded that the facts of the case are as follows:

On January 22nd a strike by laborers was declared in the centrals of Janiuay and Barotac, Province of Iloilo. Upon learning of the strike, the Governor of Iloilo proceeded at once to order the mobilization of the State Police of seven municipalities and requested the Provincial Commander of the province to give him a Constabulary force—all for the purpose, according to the Governor, of maintaining peace and order.

The Provincial Commander of Iloilo gave the soldiers as requested, and these, together with the State Police, were placed around the two above-mentioned centrals. A man who was not one of the strikers, for he was not a laborer in any of those centrals, was found with a bolo and thereupon arrested by Captain Tando, Chief of Police of the City of Iloilo, and a secret service man by the name of Crispin Adelantar. By order of Captain Tando the arrested man, whose name is Leonardo. Diaz, was turned over to Pacifico Abordo, Chief of Police of Janiuay.

While secret service man Crispin Adelantar had Leonardo Diaz under his custody, he struck Diaz twice. After Leonardo Diaz had been turned over to the Chief of Police of Janiuay, he was kept in the municipal jail of Janiuay. By order of Chief of Police Abordo leg irons were placed on him. According to Leonardo Diaz, during the whole time that he was in the municipal jail, he was made to wear leg irons day and night. According to the testimony of the police of Janiuay and admitted by their Chief, the leg irons were used only whenever Diaz was taken out of jail to satisfy a physiological urge.

It is immaterial whether leg irons were placed on this prisoner all the time or only while he was out of the jail. In either case the prisoner was treated with cruelty. The length of time he had on the leg irons is merely a question of the degree of cruelty indicted. The Government cannot afford to have in the service a Chief of Police so inhuman as the Chief of Police of Janiuay proved himself to be.

The same thing is to be said of the secret service man who struck Leonardo Diaz. I am therefore, of the opinion, and I so order, that both the chief of police and the secret service man be immediately dismissed from office. You will please execute this order by telegraph. The acting provincial fiscal of Iloilo will be ordered to look into the matter to see whether criminal prosecution should be instituted or not against Pacifico Abordo and Crispin Adelantar.

I may state that, in my opinion, the Governor of Iloilo allowed himself to be unduly excited by this strike. The mobilization of the Constabulary and the State Police of seven municipalities was unnecessary and ill-advised. The right to strike has not been declared illegal either by the Constitution or by any act of the Legislature. In cases of strikes where public interest is not directly or indirectly affected, an untimely intervention by the armed forces of the Government, even if only for purposes of preventing violations of the law, places the Government in a position that would justify the belief that armed forces have been called in the interest of one or the other side. The Governor of Iloilo should have been on the alert, but he did not have to mobilize the State Police of seven towns as the police of the City of Iloilo and the Constabulary stationed in said city were more than sufficient to maintain order and suppress lawlessness and violence in the region where the strikes were taking place. Knowing the Governor of Iloilo personally, I have no doubt that he acted in good faith. It is his vigor and energy that impelled him to act hastily.

If there is going to be faith in the justice and impartiality of this Government in cases arising between capital and labor, or between the different constituent parts of the community, we must at all times not only act justly and impartially, but also be careful that our actions have no appearance of partiality. Social justice can only mean justice to each and every social group. If my administration is placing special emphasis on the need for ameliorating the conditions of the laboring class, it is not because we are against the capitalists or the rich, but it is because the laboring class in the Philippines has not received its due, and therefore stands in need of the help and protection of the Government in order that its right may be properly recognized and accorded.

It would be national suicide to persecute capital. In our age, capital, and in large amounts, is necessary for the economic development and the social welfare of the people. Capital is entitled to a reasonable profit, and this reasonable profit must not be denied it under any pretext. So long as capital is not unmindful of the social purpose and duties of property, so long will our Government give it wholehearted support and protection, but not otherwise.

In the case of the strikes in Iloilo, especially considering the abuses actually committed by the Chief of Police of Janiuay and a secret service man, as well as the negligence of the fiscals of that province in not properly investigating and reporting these abuses, it would not be surprising if the people of that province came to the conclusion that the Government, before it was established which side was right, had taken the side of the sugar centrals as against the strikers.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on the designation of a Judge as Special Investigator of Labor Conditions, March 9, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the designation of a Judge as Special Investigator of Labor Conditions

[Released on March 9, 1938]

My dear Mr. Chief Justice Avanceña:

In connection with the designation of Judge Moran as special investigator to study prevailing conditions in the sugar industry in order that the Government may take the proper measures to improve conditions of labor in the sugarcane plantations, to my surprise I have noticed varied comments in the press as to the propriety, and even the legality, of such action. You will recall that before I decided to make this designation, I sought your advice as the virtual head of the judicial branch of this Government, and only after you had informed me that there could be no valid objection to such a step, but that, on the other hand, it constituted a tangible proof of the confidence of the Chief Executive in the judiciary, that I decided to approach this difficult question through the intervention of one of the outstanding members of the bench. You will thus see that in spite of the many precedents in the past, where judges were commissioned by former chief executives to conduct similar investigations, and while I myself was of the belief that such assistance from the judicial branch of the Government would be most valuable in giving to an executive act the stamp of an impartial and well considered judgment on the merits of the questions at hand, I had always felt that the independence of the judiciary should be preserved and, therefore, thought it my duty to first seek your authoritative opinion on the subject. For the purposes of record, and to serve as a guide for future action, it may be highly advisable to have an official statement of our exchange of views so that it may never be said that this Government has ever taken a step involving such an important public question, without previous mature and deliberate consideration.

Trusting that you will agree with me in this respect, I remain.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Thirty-fourth International Eucharistic Congress in Hungary, March 21, 1938

Letter

On Thirty-fourth International Eucharistic Congress in Hungary

[Delivered to Mons. M. J. O'Doherty, Archbishop of Manila, and taken to Bucharest, Hungary]

[Released on March 21, 1938]

I am one of those who believe that religion exercises a wholesome influence upon man, both as an individual and as a citizen. I believe this to be undeniably true in the case of my own people. Of course, a man should love and practise righteousness upon its own appeal to his mind and to his heart—that is, to his conscience. And he should perform his obligations because it is his duty to do so. And it is conceivable that there may be men, without believing in God or professing any religion, to be righteous and good citizens. But how hard it must be to practise self-sacrifice to the extent of giving up one's life for his country or his fellow men in a heroic performance of a duty unless he believes in God and has faith in the hereafter.

The International Eucharistic Congress serves to invigorate the faith of Catholics in a loving Providence as manifested in the Blessed Sacrament. The Thirty-third International Eucharistic Congress held in Manila last year was a great gain to our country in every way.

I offer my very best wishes for the Thirty-fourth International Eucharistic Congress in Hungary, and sincerely hope that that country will be showered with blessings from on high, such as we have received in the Philippines.

Letter of President Quezon on the Political Status of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, April, 1938 Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the Political Status of the Commonwealth of the Philippines

[Released on April, 1938]

A country possessing a dominion status as now understood in International Law, is as independent de facto as any independent nation, and more independent indeed than many of the so-called independent nations that have the name, but hardly the substance of the rights and powers of an independent nation. Such status is very far from being the political status of the Commonwealth. Under the Independence Act, the internal autonomy granted us is restricted on many vital aspects.

My dear Tommy:

During your last visit to Manila, I had occasion to ask Secretary Quirino to secure from you a copy of the speech you delivered before the Visayan Institute. This I did because I was told that in said speech you severely criticized both the National Assembly and my administration. I have read the speech carefully and I wish to extend to you my warmest congratulations. You have presented your views in a sober, temperate tone, and you have discussed your subject thoroughly.

I do not care to express my own opinion on the merit, from my point of view, of your stand on each subject you have discussed. Whether I am in accord with you or not, is not important; what is important is that you have given an example of how public officials and responsible citizens should discuss public questions.

There are only two points in your speech I feel justified at this time in making any comment. One, about your opposition to the amendment to the Constitution regarding the reelection of the President. I was, as you know, mainly responsible for the clause prohibiting presidential reelection. I haven't changed my mind on this.

The other point you made which I think I ought not let go unchallenged is where you say, "It should be borne in mind, in this connection, that we are practically under a dominion status now."

This is not so, either in theory or in fact. Dominion status has now a definite meaning in Constitutional Law as well as in International Law, due to the well-established political relationship between Great Britain and its "dominions." The English colonies enjoying this status are self-governing in every respect and such limitations as there may be, if any, in the exercise of their self-government by the dominions, are of their own free will as they may have found it to their own interest to covenant with the Mother Colony, which, in turn, assumes a corresponding responsibility. In other words: a country possessing a dominion status as now understood in International Law, is as independent de facto as any independent nation, and more independent indeed than many of the so-called independent nations that have the name, but hardly the substance of the rights and powers of an independent nation.

Such status is very far from being the political status of the Commonwealth. Under the Independence Act, the internal autonomy granted us is restricted on many vital aspects.

I am bound to make this point clear for it is essential that, in discussing this question, our people be properly informed as to our present status as compared with independence or dominion. I agree with you entirely that any change in our political future should be discussed intelligently, freely, and thoroughly before our people are asked to vote thereon. They, and they alone, have the right to pass finally upon the supreme question of their own future. But their decision should never be arrived at except after a mature, cool, and thorough deliberation.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on the selection of commencement speakers and use of the public schools, April 8, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the selection of commencement speakers and use of the public schools

[Released on April 8, 1938]

I welcome constructive criticisms for they are always helpful, whether the criticism has intrinsic merit or not. And foolish or unjust attacks upon public officials or policies carry the germ of their own destruction.

My dear Dr. Mañalac:

My attention was called some time ago to a news item published in the local newspapers to the effect that Attorney Yamzon had cancelled his engagement as commencement speaker at the Arellano High School on the ground that the school authorities imposed as a condition that in his speech he should make no attack upon the policies of the administration.

I instructed Secretary Vargas to inquire whether said news item was correct or not, and I now have before me a correspondence from the Director of Education relating to this matter.

You will remember that some time ago, I sent for you and for Assistant Director Salvador, and informed you of my wish that the public schools be not converted into forums for the discussion of political questions, but rather of subject matters that would be of immediate value to the students and commensurate with their capacity for absorbing the matters discussed, bearing in mind the instruction so far received by them. The discussion of this subject was brought about by a speech delivered by a member of the Provincial Board of Ilocos Norte, Dr. Damaso T. Samonte, who, according to the papers, in addressing the student body of the Laoag High School, talked on the proposed amendments to the Constitution. Dr. Samonte makes, among others, the following statement regarding that speech:

“It is true I assailed the National Assembly for its attitude on the proposed amendments to the Constitution. I did not only assail it. I attacked it also as much as I could and as savagely as I could make it.”

In view of this apparent lack of sense of responsibility on the part of Doctor Samonte, as judged by his own statement quoted above, and knowing that not infrequently speeches of the same tenor are delivered in the high schools and even in the elementary schools, I deemed it necessary to call your attention and that of the Assistant Director of Education to the need of stopping such practice that, at least, indirectly violates civil service rules which bar political activities from government offices and schools, but worse still serves to misdirect the mind of our youth, if not fill it with wrong and false ideas. I, therefore, advised you and the Assistant Director of Education to instruct the school authorities to be careful in the selection of speakers who will address our schools and, in any event, to inform such speakers that they must not indulge in the discussion of political questions. You then answered me that it would be too late to apply this rule in the case of commencement speakers for this year, for they had already been chosen and invited, and the invitations accepted. In view of your statement I agreed that the rule as laid down by me be deferred till the incoming school year.

From the papers sent to this office by the Director of Education it appears that the principal of the Arellano High School told Attorney Yamzon that in this commencement speech he must not attack the policies of the administration.

I am not informed upon what authority the principal of the Arellano High School made this statement to Attorney Yamzon but certainly the statement does not conform with the instructions I have given you, nor does it express my purpose or objective.

I am not attempting to prohibit criticism of my administration. This is a matter of little concern to me, politically or otherwise. In fact, I welcome constructive criticisms for they are always helpful, whether the criticism has intrinsic merit or not. And foolish or unjust attacks upon public officials or policies carry the germ of their own destruction.

What I am interested in, and very much so indeed, is to avoid making the schools political battlefields, or places for the exhibition of crass ignorance on the part of the orator, or the dissemination of subversive ideas among boys and girls who, because of their immaturity, are not prepared to discriminate intelligently as between what is right and what is wrong, and what is wise and what is unwise.

Under the Constitution, it is the duty of the Government to use the school as the means for providing our country with upright men and women—citizens with high character and noble ideals, devoted to the performance of their duties, lovers of the art of peace and capable of earning their livelihood and contributing to the well-being of the community.

It is to be regretted that the mistake committed by the school authorities should have happened precisely in the case of Attorney Yamzon who is not only known as a first-rate orator but also as a highly cultured person, and certainly a responsible citizen who could be dependent upon to have chosen a subject from the discussion of which the students of the Arellano High School would have benefited.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon to the Speaker of the National Assembly on Nepotism in the Government service,
April 13, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To the Speaker of the National Assembly on Nepotism in the Government service

[Released on April 13, 1938]

Irrespective of any law or regulation, the sense of delicacy should inhibit one from taking official cognizance of any case involving one's relative.

SIR:

Referring to your 6th indorsement of March 31, 1938, on the appointment of Mr. Jose T. Tecson, involving the interpretation of Executive Order No. 111, I find the facts to be as follows:

* * * * *

On January 10, 1938, Acting Director Rodriguez signed the promotional appointment in question of Mr. Jose T. Tecson from clerk at P984 to chief of section at P1,800 per annum—a promotion of almost seven grades at once. The appointment was submitted by Acting Director Rodriguez to the Speaker of the National Assembly, through the Commissioner of Civil Service, together with a rather lengthy letter of laudatory recommendation in favor of the appointee in an attempt to justify the extraordinary promotion. * * *

Upon official inquiry by the Commissioner of Civil Service, it was found out that Mr. Jose T. Tecson is a brother-in-law of Assistant Director Rodriguez of the National Library.

In the meantime an employee of the National Library, who for obvious reason did not want to sign his full name, wrote to the Commissioner of Civil Service under date of January 20, 1938, complaining against the proposed promotion of Mr. Tecson as being an act of partiality of the Acting Director in favor of his own brother-in-law and a preterition (postergacion) of older employees to the detriment of the morale of the service.

The Commissioner of Civil Service held that the proposed appointment falls within the prohibition contained in Rule 1 of Executive Order No. 111, of August 30, 1937. Appeal is now made to the President for a ruling in the premises.

Executive Order No. 111, prohibiting and restricting the practice of nepotism, was promulgated with a view to improving the morale of the public service. It reads in part as follows:

1. All appointments in the National, provincial, and municipal governments or in any branch and instrumentality thereof, whether in the classified or unclassified service, made in favor of a relative of the appointing authority or of the persons exercising immediate supervision over him, are hereby prohibited.
2. When there are already two or more members of one family in an office of Bureau, no other member of such family shall be eligible for appointment to any position therein.

As used in this Order, the word 'relative' and the members of the family referred to herein are those related within the third degree either of consanguinity or of affinity.”

* * * *

In order to give immediate effect to this Order, cases of previous appointments which are in contravention thereof shall be corrected by transfer, and pending such transfer, no promotion shall be allowed in favor of the relative occupying a subordinate position or in favor of anyone of the members of the same family in a Bureau or office. In exceptional cases, where the application of this rule would impair the efficiency of the service or would produce a patent injustice, an appointment or promotion may be made with the approval of the Commissioner of Civil Service.

Rule 1 above quoted prohibits all appointments in favor of a relative of the appointing authority. These include original as well as promotional appointments. To limit the prohibition to original appointments only would contravene both the letter and the spirit of the Order. In the particular case of Mr. Tecson, his proposed promotional appointment, which carries with it an increase in salary of P816 per annum, is more important than his original appointment, which carried with it a salary of only P240 per annum. The proposed appointee being a brother-in-law of the appointing authority, I cannot uphold the appointment without infringing the prohibition under consideration.

It is argued by Assistant Director Rodriguez in his 3rd indorsement that the previous appointment of Mr. Tecson is not in contravention of Rule 1 because it was not made by a relative, nor is it in contravention of Rule 2 because there are only two members of the same family in the same office. Such argument is beside the point. The right of Mr. Tecson to remain in the National Library under Executive Order No. 111 is not questioned. That is questioned is the right of Assistant Director Rodriguez as Acting Director to award an extraordinary promotion in favor of his own brother-in-law. If the promotion had been proposed by Director Kalaw upon recommendation of Mr. Tecson's immediate chief and if his relative were only a chief of another Division and not the Assistant Director, who may exercise general supervision over the whole personnel, it would not have fallen within the prohibition of the Executive Order in question.

Without in any way intending to cast reflection upon the integrity and sincerity of Assistant Director Rodriguez I cannot, as a matter of principle, accept at its face value the representation made by him as to the merits and deserts of his brother-in-law. His opinion on the matter is necessarily vitiated by his relationship, just as a judgment in favor of a relative of the Judge awarding it would be vitiated and would not be regarded with favor by the public, although it may be strictly in accordance with the facts and the law governing the case. Irrespective of any law or regulation, the sense of delicacy should inhibit one from taking official cognizance of any case involving one's relative.

For the foregoing reasons, I sustain the ruling of the Commissioner of Civil Service in this case.

Very respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Letter of President Quezon to Mr. Paez and Secretary Torres on the policy with respect to labor disputes arising in Government-owned Corporations, April 18, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To Mr. Paez and Secretary Torres on the policy with respect to labor disputes arising in Government-owned Corporations

[Released on April 18, 1938]

“MY DEAR MR. PAEZ:

“In reference to the alleged complaint presented by one Felix Cortes on behalf of some employees of the Manila Railroad Company, you are hereby directed to issue a circular to all the employees of the Manila Railroad Company to the effect that as de facto government employees, they should only belong to such labor organization, or associations as they themselves may form for purposes of mutual aid and benefit; that if they have any complaint to make either because of their salaries or conditions under which they work, they have to make their complaint directly to you; that if they are not satisfied with your decision they may appeal to the Board of Directors, and that in case they are not satisfied with the decision of the Board of Directors they may appeal to me; that I shall not tolerate any strike on the part of the employees of the Manila Railroad Company for the reasons stated in the letter which I am writing on this date to the Secretary of Labor, copy of which I am sending to you; that any strike on the part of the employees of the Manila Railroad Company will be taken by the government as voluntary separation on their part from the service of the company, and they will never be admitted again in the service of the company; that the government is ready now and will be ready at any time to replace any employee or group of employees of the Manila Railroad Company just as it is ready to replace all the employees of the Manila Railroad Company if they should all decide to strike; that in case of a strike of great proportion among the Manila Railroad employees, I will use the Army to run the Manila Railroad Company and to protect the Company from any violence on the part of the strikers. It is my desire that the employees of the Manila Railroad be duly informed of my stand on this matter in order that they may not allege lack of knowledge of the consequences of their action if they should violate any of the rules herein laid down.

“The management of the Manila Railroad Company is informed of the policies of my administration regarding the treatment of labor, and your company is expected to give an outstanding example of how a corporation should deal with its employees and laborers. In case, by this time, you have not been able to put into practice the policies of the government in this respect, please take immediate steps to carry them out. And if any complaint that is presented to you by the employees of the Manila Railroad Company is well founded, it is my hope and expectation that you will grant them the proper remedy.

“Very sincerely,

“(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON
“President of the Philippines”

“MY DEAR SECRETARY TORRES:

“My attention has been called to the case brought before your department by one Felix Cortes on behalf of the employees of the Manila Railroad Company, and of which your department has taken cognizance. I am informed by the manager of the Manila Railroad Company that Felix Cortes is a former employee of that company who had been twice separated from its service; that after his separation from the service, following which he had been out of work for some time, the manager of the company yielded to his request to be taken back, but had, subsequently to expel him for cause in the month of November last year.

“As you know, the Manila Railroad Company is owned by the Government and is operated through an agency of the Government. The employees of the Manila Railroad Company therefore are, in fact, if not in law, employees of the government, so much so that the Board of Directors of the Manila Railroad Company generally follows the policies of the Legislature in reference to salaries of the employees of said company. In fact the minimum wage for government laborers which I have fixed by executive order has been complied with by the management of the Manila Railroad Company.

“As the employees of the Manila Railroad Company are de facto employees of the government, and furthermore, as they are in the employ of a public service, enterprise, any attempt at a strike on their part will be met with effective measures by the government to maintain discipline, and to protect the public from being deprived of the essential service of transportation which the Manila Railroad Company is rendering to the public. Moreover, the people of the Philippines have an investment in the Manila Railroad Company worth nearly one hundred million pesos, and it is equally my duty to protect it from undue or preventable loss.

“In view of the foregoing considerations, I request you to inform Felix Cortes; first, that you are directed by me not to recognize Cortes as lawfully representing the employees of the Manila Railroad Company; second, to inform the employees of the Manila Railroad Company who would avow being represented by Felix Cortes, that if they have any complaint to make regarding the salaries that they are receiving, or for any other cause, they should present their complaint to the management of the Manila Railroad Company, and if in their opinion the management of the Manila Railroad Company fails to do them justice they can appeal to me for redress.

“Very sincerely,

On Resolution of the National Assembly expressing goodwill towards and coöperation with the President's administration

[Released on April 19, 1938]

My dear Speaker Montilla:

I feel highly complimented by the resolution adopted by the members of the National Assembly, especially because of the gracious manner in which the resolution was placed in my hands; namely, through your good self and the Floor Leader. I wish to reiterate in writing what I had the pleasure of stating to you and to the Floor Leader when you delivered to me the resolution adopted by the members of the National Assembly that I am deeply grateful for this gesture of goodwill on the part of the members of the National Assembly towards my administration and for their assurances of continued cooperation. As a matter of fact, I was not correctly quoted by the newspapers when in my conference I made the statement that I would support all the members of the National Assembly seeking reelection, for I said more than what was attributed to me. What I said was that the present National Assembly has shown such a high sense of responsibility and has acted with such dignity that the country should reelect everyone of its members. And I added: "The National Assembly has cooperated with my administration wholeheartedly in enacting the legislation to which the Nationalist Party was committed and I feel it my duty therefore to ask the people to reelect all the members of the Assembly."

With assurances of my high respect for you and everyone of the members of the National Assembly and with a reiteration of my appreciation for their proffered continued cooperation, I remain.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on neutrality on the Bill regarding religious instruction before its approval by the National Assembly, April 26, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On neutrality on the Bill regarding religious instruction before its approval by the National Assembly

[Released on April 26, 1938]

My dear Assemblyman Ozamiz:

In view of the current rumors among the members of the National Assembly, both pro and con, that I am favoring either side opposing each other in the consideration of the bill on religious instruction pending before that Body, depending upon which side is using my name, I desire to reiterate my attitude so that you may inform your colleagues accordingly. From the time that a bill regarding religious instruction was introduced in the National Assembly, to every member of that Body who came to me for advice, I invariably expressed my desire to keep aloof from the discussion until, under the Constitution, I was bound to act, namely, if and when a bill approved by the National Assembly came before me for approval or disapproval.

Before such occasion arises, no one has the right to say that I am in favor or against any measure regarding religious instruction that may be considered by the National Assembly. Members of the National Assembly are informed of the administrative regulations that are in force in accordance with existing law as to how optional religious instruction should be given in the schools. The next move on this question pertains to the Assembly, and its members have the right to act according to their convictions. I see no necessity in advancing my views.

I am glad to note that both you and the Speaker have kept your hands off the controversy raging in the National Assembly. The Speaker, as the head of the National Assembly, does well in maintaining neutrality on a subject which might unduly arouse the passions of either side, and you, as the Floor Leader, whose main function should be to exert your influence in the enactment of legislation to carry out our pre-electoral pledges, might jeopardize your leadership were you to be involved in this hectic discussion.

Will you be kind enough to make the contents of this letter public among your colleagues?

Very respectfully yours,

Dear Philip:

I regret very much that pressure of official business, such as the consideration of bills totalling about 100, passed by the National Assembly in its last two sessions, compels me to forego the trip to Sabani Estate with you on the 3rd instant. I hope you will understand and will present my excuse to the people who expect to meet me there on that day.

With regard to the petition of the people of several towns of Nueva Ecija for an irrigation system, please tell them that I am in thorough sympathy with their desire, as I have set forth in a former letter to you.

With respect to the petition of the tenants of Sabani Estate that the Government sell to them on the installment plan their present holdings, you may assure them that their petition meets with my approval, and that I have conferred with Mr. Anonas, manager of the National Development Company, who will give early attention to this subject. Only bona fide tenants will be given preference to have the land they are occupying sold to them.

SIR:

I have today disapproved Bill No. 3585, entitled “An Act to condone penalties on real estate taxes incurred prior to the year nineteen hundred and thirty-eight, provided that delinquent landowners shall pay said taxes without penalty within a period of one year from the date of the approval of this act” on the ground, among others, that the purpose of this bill may be accomplished under the present law through administrative action as under section 58 of Act No. 3395, the President of the Philippines is empowered to remit or reduce the real property tax for any year in any municipality or province if he deems that the public interest so requires.

In this connection, I wish to state that I am willing to remit the penalty for nonpayment of land taxes in those provinces which were hard hit by baguios or where the prices of articles of prime necessity have gone down very low, on condition that the land taxes in arrears are paid by the property owners within a reasonable time.

Respectfully,

Letter of President Quezon before the National Assembly on the Bill on Religious Instruction, July 18, 1938

Bahagi ng Kalatas ng
Kagalang-galang Manuel L. Quezon
Pangulo ng Pilipinas
Sa Batásang-Bansa na ukol sa Bill ng Relihiyón

[Inilabas noong ika-25 ng Hulyo, 1938]

Sa pamamagitan ng pagsang-ayon ng totoong maraming kagawad ng Kapuluhang itó, isáng panukalang batás ukol sa pagtuturo ng relihiyón sa mga paaralang-bayan (Bill blg. 3307) ang napagtibay sa inyong mga huling pagpupulong sa karaniwan. Binetuhan ko ang tinurang panukalang-batas, at ang kalatas ng aking pagkábetó, na násasainyo nang kapangyarihan, ay nagpápaliwanag ng mga katwirang pinagsaligan ko sa pag-papasya ng gayón.

Palibhasa'y nakapagtapos na ang Batásang-Bansa sa kanyang káhuli-hulihang araw ng pagpupulong (sine die) nang betuhan ko ang panukalang-batás sa pagtuturó ng relihiyón, kayâ ang Kapulungang itó'y hindi na nagkapanahóng masuring panibago ang panukalá sa lilim ng mga tadhana ng Saligáng-Batás, bagay na kung nangyari, disi'y naari niyáng napagtibay na mulí ang náulit na panukalá sa ibabaw ng beto ng pánguluhan.

Hindi ko hangad, at di ko rin namán ináakalang makabubuti sa kapakanán ng bayan, ang magkaít sa inyo ng pagkákataóng maikapag-uusap na mulí sa súliranin, kung ang mulíng pagpapasya ay inyong inaakalang katungkulan ninyong gawín, kahit na akó'y may beto at gaanumán ang aking mga matuwíd na pinangháhawakan sa pagkálagdâ nitó. Sa palagáy ko namán, ay hindi ko ilalakíp sa iba't-ibáng bagay na tátaglayín ng aking kalatas sa taníng pulong na idinaraos ninyo ngayon. Binubuksan ko sa inyo ang pinyong laan ng Saligáng-Batás sa pagbabalik sa súliranin, kung talagáng hanġad ninyong iyá'y magpagpasyahán ulí. Minararapat kong gawin ang ganitóng pagtatagubilin, pagka't ang mga pagtatalo't pagkakasalungatang nangyari't ibinunġa ng panukalang iyáng ukol sa pag-tuturó ng relihiyón, ay nagpakalubha't gumamaw na totoo, na tila kailangan at lalong makabubuti sa sambayanan at sa mga tao't kapisanan man namáng kinauukulan, ang iya'y mabigyan na ng kapasyahang pangwakas ngayon at kailanpaman. Ang mga pagtatalo't sálungatang itó'y saganá sa binhi ng mga álita't basang-ulo sa bayan, kayâ nagtitiwalá akóng ang Batásang-Bansa ay tutulong sa aking masidhing pagnanais na máiligtas ang ating bayan sa mahihigpit na pagbabaka-bakang nalikhâ sa mga ibáng bansa ng ganyang mga kadáhilanan o ibâ pang kauring pangyayari. Huwág nating pahintulutang, dahil lamang sa pag-ilag na mápaharáp sa ganitóng mga pangánib, ay magkápalikan-liban ang di-maiiwasang pangyayari ng sigalót, sigalót na pakálinis-linis ma't gaanong kagigiting ng mga layon at matutuwid ng kinásasalalayan, ay waláng-salang máuuwí sa isáng págsipisang pagbabakang ukol sa relihiyón, taglay na ang lahat ng mag sakuná't kasamaáng ibinubunġa at kasama nitóng karaniwan.

Ang panukalang-batás sa pagtuturo ng relihiyón, pagkatapos ng isáng masivasip na pagsusurí, ay napag-tibay sa boto ng dalawáng-katlong bahagi ng kabilanġan ng mga kagawad ng Batásang-Bansa. Ang ganyang karaming botong nagpatibay sa panukalá ay di-maaaring di-makabkla sa aking pag-iisip nang itó'y aking pinagpápasyahán na. Kung akó sana'y nagkaroon ng muntí man lamang pag-aálinlangan tungkol sa pagwatas ng mga tadhaná ng Saligáng-Batás ukol sa súliranin itó, a kayâ namá'y náuukol lamang sa ayos at paraan ang pinag-uusapan, disi'y nilutas ko ang aking pag-aálinlangan nang pasang-ayon sa kuru-kuro ng gayóng nápakaraming mga kagawad na nagpatibay. Subali't nais kong ipahayag sa inyo, na, matapos kong mapag-aralang masusi ang súliranin, ay napagkita kong nápakaliwanag ng aking tungkulin at di ko dapat pag-agam-agaman ang nárarapat kong gawin, sapagka't nápakalilinaw ng mga tadhaná ng tinurang Saligáng-Batás, na walá akóng sukat at dapat magawâ kundí ang panukala'y huwág pagtibayin. Kailanġan din namáng pahalagahán sa pagpapasya ang pangyayaring, katulad ng karamihan ng mga saligáng-batás na kumikilala ng kalayaan sa pananampalataya at ng pagkakáhiwalay ng Iglesya at ng Estado, ang Saligáng-Batás natin ay táhasang nagbabawal ng paggamit na túwiran o di-túwiran ng alinmang relihiyón sa alinmang pag-aari ng bayan. Kailanma't paháhalagahán ang lahat ng mga tadhanang itó ng Saligáng-Batás, ay di maaaring di natin kilanlin ang katotohanang ang tadhanang náuukol sa pagtuturo ng relihiyón ay walang isinasaad na anumáng bawas o takdá sa mga karapatan, na sana'y nalagay sa Saligáng-Batás kung mayroon, mahangá pa'y nagpápahintulot ng isang kaluwagang sana'y wala kung di sadyang isinaad. Kung susundin ang talagang pag-unawá sa mga batás, ay mapípilitan tayong magbigáy ng lalong mahihigpit na pakahulugán sa ganyang mga tadhana. itó ang tapát kong paniniwalá nang betuhan ko ang panukalang-batás, at hindi akó nagbabago ng pagkukuró tungkol sa suliraning iyan. Lubos ngâ ang aking pananalig na ang panukalang inyong pinagtibay ay labág sa Saligáng-Batás. Anupamáng ibang panukalang mapagtibay ninyo na pambago sa kasalukuyang umiiral na batás sa pagtuturó ng relihiyón sa mga páaralang-bayan, ay asahan na ninyong labág din sa Saligán. At kung pagtítibayin pang muli ng Batásang-Bansa ang panukalang akin nang nabetuhan, o magpápatibay siyá ng ibá ma'y kauri o kaisang-layon din, maáasahang bébetuhan kong mulí itó at ipababalík sa inyo upáng magawâ ninyo ang ináakalang marapat.

Hindí kalabisáng ulitin ko na akó'y kabilang sa mga naniniwalang ang pagtuturó ng relihiyón ay di-lamang mabuti, kundí kailangan sa mga kabataang nasagulang ng pag-aaral. Gaya ng sinabi ko na sa aking kalatas ng pagbeto, kinikilala kong ang relihiyón ay isáng malakás na kasangkapan sa pagkátuto't paggawâ nang magalíng. Ang lakás niya'y mabuting panimbang at pampatatag. Mabuti maging sa tao at maging sa pamahalaan't sambayanan. Naniniwala rin namán akóng ang una-unang may-katungkulang magpamulat ng relihiyón ay ang mga magulang, kailanma't ang mga itó'y may sadyang relihiyóng sinasamba. Mangyayari pang dí kabilang din sa mga pang'unang tungkulin ng isáng simbahan ang magturo ng relihiyón sa kanyang mga tagasampalataya. Náhahandâ namán akóng magbigay ng lahat ng tulong at kaulwagan sa pagtuturo ng relihiyón sa kabataan ng ating bayan, sa mga paraang naaalinsunod sa mga batás ng bansa.

Subali't hindí na akó makapadadako pa nang malayó sa riyán. Bunğa ng masusing pag-aaral ang aking pananalig, na, hindí lamang sa bisá ng mga táhasang tadhaná ng Saligáng-Batás tungkol sa bagay na itó, kundí sa linaw man ng mga katwira't pangyayaring sukat mahangó sa pang'ulong simula ng pagkakáhiwalay ng Simbahan at ng Pámahalaan, ay dí na maaari ang Pámahalaan ng Pilipinas na makagawâ hinggil sa pagtuturó ng relihiyón sa mga paaralang-bayan, nang hihigít pa sa nagagawâ na ngayong itinutulot ng batás. Sa katagáng sabi, upáng maipahintulot ng Pámahalaan ang pagtuturó ng relihiyón sa loob ng mga oras na nátatakda sa mga talagáng gawain ng paaralan, na anupa't ilán sa mga gawaing itó ay siyáng mapalitan ng nasabing pagtuturo, ay kakailanganin nang di-lamang baguhin natin, kundí alisin pa ang tadhana ng tinurang Saligán na tahasang nagpapasya ng pagkakáhiwalay ng Simbahan sa Pámahalaan.

Itó rin namán ang pagkukurong ginamit at pinagbatayan ni Taft, nang kanyang sabihing ang pagpapahintulot na máituro ang relihiyón sa mga paaralang-bayan sa loob ng mga oras na ang mag gawain, ay isang tahasang paglabag sa diwa at titik ng Saligáng-Batás na nagkakaloob ng lubos na kalayaan sa lahat ng relihiyón at nagpapaganap ng lubos na pagkakahiwalay ng Simbahan at Pamahalaan. Labis na nating nabatid, na si Taft, sa harap ng mahigpit na pagsalungat ng kanyang mag kasama, ay siyáng dapat managot sa pangyayaring naipasok sa isang karapangan ang pagtuturo ng relihiyón sa mga páaralang-bayan.

Ganyan na lamang ang lakí ng aking pananalig sa pangangailangang maturuan ng relihiyón ang ating kabataan, at mapaghuhuló na kung gaano ang aking pagkágiliw sa panukalang ang Pámahalaan'y makapag-pasigla sa pagpapaturong iyan; subali't dí namán maaaring dí ko ipahayag nang buong pagtatapát, na, kung sa ikapagtatamo ng ganitong layon ay wala nang ibang paraan kundí sumira o lumabag sa simula ng pagkakahiwalay ng Simbahan at ng Pamahalaan, akó'y tahas-tahasang dí makasasang-ayon sa panukala't kaparaanang iyan. At ang ipinagkakaganito ko'y bungang talaga ng aking paniniwala na tungkulin ko ang huwag sa payo ng aking sariling budhi't pananalig. Tango pa sa rito, nakikilala kong ang katungkulang magturo ng relihiyón ay sagutin ng mga magulang at ng Simbahan, at kung magsusutupad silang talaga sa katungkulang itó, ay sapat na't labis pang malunasan ang ganyang mga pangangailangan ng kalulwa ng bayan. Isang pamahalaang nagpapahintulot ng pagpapaturong ng relihiyón sa mga paaralang-bayan, nang ayon sa naiibigang pananampalataya ng mga magulang, kagaya ng ngayo'y ginagawa sa Pilipinas, sa ilalim ng mga hangganang itinatakda ng Saligáng-Batás, ay nakagagawa na ng di-hahamak na pagtulong sa ganyang katungkulan ng mga magulang at ng simbahan. Kung sa mga kaluwagang ngayo'y atin nang ipinagkakaloob sa mga páaralang-bayan, ay hindí pa rin mapalaganap ang pagtuturo ng relihiyón, ang pamahalaan natin ay di-maaaring siyáng bagsakan ng sisi't kasalanan.

Letter of President Quezon to Dr. Jorge Bocobo on the importance of good manners and right conduct, July 30, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To Dr. Jorge Bocobo on the importance of good manners and right conduct

[Released on July 30, 1938]

Good manners and right conduct are as essential to a man who lives in civilized society as intellectual training.

We must reeducate ourselves and drink from the fountain of true Filipino traits. Not all that our forefathers did were wrong; in fact we can learn a lot from them.

My dear President Bocobo:

From this morning's newspapers I have learned of the action taken by the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines in reference to the incident which took place yesterday in the course of my inspection of the university campus and the Engineering Building.

I have taken notice of the fact that soon after the incident, Assistant Professor Albert wrote a letter of apology to the President of the University and he further came to see me in person expressing his regrets.

It is also my understanding, and you have confirmed the fact in our telephonic conversation this morning, that Assistant Professor Albert is one of the most competent professors in his line and heretofore there has been no complaint against him. Moreover, I know of my own knowledge that as far as Assistant Professor Albert himself is concerned, he is a fine gentleman in every respect, with good breeding. The unfortunate incident can happen in an unguarded moment to any man. I am satisfied that with the recognition on his part of the fault he has committed and the reprimand he has received from the Board of Regents, Assistant Professor Albert has been sufficiently punished both for his negligence in exacting from his pupils proper behavior in class and for his own behavior to and in the presence of the Chief Executive.

I request, therefore, that Assistant Professor Albert be reinstated to his position.

I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to stress the need of impressing upon the student body of the University of the Philippines the importance of gentlemanly deportment as a part of their university instruction. Good manners and right conduct are as essential to a man who lives in civilized society as intellectual training. A young man who, in the classroom and during the teaching hours in the presence of his professor and comrades, raises his foot and rests it on a chair, gives evidence of the lack of every notion of courtesy. He shows a great disrespect not only for his professor and his associates but also for himself. He shows his low concept of the task in which a student is engaged when in class, or his utter lack of a sense of responsibility.

It is a misconception of the extent of his duty for any professor to believe that when he has given his lessons he has done enough by his pupils. The young man and the young woman who have gone through a university should be fully prepared to meet and mingle with their peers. Knowledge alone is of very little consequence if one conducts himself like a savage. Our people, I mean the average Filipino in the towns and villages, have been courteous and hospitable all their lives. Why should the boys and girls who attend schools, colleges, and universities be less mannered than their parents and ancestors? There seems to be a growing idea among some of our youth that personal dignity and individual self-reliance and independence are better shown by him who can best exhibit rough manners.

We must reeducate ourselves and drink from the fountain of true Filipino traits. Not all that our forefathers did were wrong; in fact we can learn a lot from them.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on acceptance of Secretary Quirino's explanation on discussion of Executive Order No. 156, August 3, 1938

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On acceptance of Secretary Quirino's explanation on discussion of Executive Order No. 156

[Released on August 3, 1938]

My dear Secretary Quirino:

I hasten to acknowledge receipt of your letter of even date and to say that I am perfectly satisfied with your statement.

I deemed it necessary to write the letter which I wrote you this morning and had it published in the afternoon papers, because the news about the contemplated action of the Secretary of the Interior and the provincial governors had been published in two consecutive days and no denial had come from your Department. When the newspapers take the liberty of publishing unfounded news of a public interest regarding any Department, especially when they concern the relations between a Department Secretary and the President, such news should be discredited at once.

I repeat that I am satisfied with your answer, which definitely disposes of the groundless publication.

Very sincerely yours,

* The following is the letter of Secretary Quirino to which the President replied as above:

August 3, 1938

Dear Mr. President:

Your letter of even date concerning the discussion of Executive Order No. 156 between the governors now in Manila and myself as announced in the local newspapers, was handed to me upon my arrival to attend the session of the Cabinet this morning at 10:15. Up to that time and even at this writing I have not met the governors to discuss with them said executive order. Nor did I have any understanding that I would discuss it with them at any future date. Immediately after the session of the Cabinet, I called up Governor Confesor who, I was told, was waiting for me in my office together with other governors to talk to me about several matters, among which is the new relationship between the governors and my department on police matters, in view of the provisions of Executive Order No. 156. This is the first and only intimation that has been given me by the governors regarding the announced discussion of the subject with them. They were in the midst of their conference when I was able to talk to Governor Confesor and I told them to stop their discussion on the executive order until they have seen the President. I did not, officially or personally, summon or invite them for the purpose of discussing the question with me or any other subject for that matter. I have not uttered a single word to any of them nor to any press representative, much less expressed my views in disagreement with yours on the executive order.

When the governors wanted to express their views on the contemplated abolition of the State Police, I accompanied them to Malacañan so that they may be heard previous to the approval of the bill, which is now Commonwealth Act No. 343. In your discussions with the governors on important matters affecting the national policy on local administration, you have been kind enough to ask me to be present. I never hesitated to come to you for a hearing on similar matters, and on said occasions I have never lacked the courage to present my views even if I happened to disagree with yours. And if there is anything that I would want to say in connection with Executive Order No. 156, I know too well that you would always be ready and willing to hear me on the matter; so that there would be no need of utilizing other agencies as a vehicle of my stand.

So with regard to this Executive Order or to any other matter which has been the object of an executive action, I certainly do not need to avail myself of the organization of the League of Governors to advance my views. At this juncture, I am pleased to inform you that, despite press reports to the contrary, and since the incident with the League of Governors in 1936, the governors have refrained from acting as a body, utilizing their organization to defeat or modify any established policy of the Government. The league is practically dissolved on my suggestion. I do not believe that the governors who happen to be in Manila intend to revive the old organization. Of course, they may want to express their views relative to their powers and jurisdiction toward the local police as defined in Executive Order No. 156. In this connection, I have already told their committee that if this is their wish, they should not hesitate to ask a hearing within the bounds of propriety.

I regret, indeed, Mr. President, that the newspaper reports on the present activities of the governors have given you such concern as has compelled you to write me your letter today.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Plan of Provincial Governors to discuss Executive Order No. 156, regarding the Reorganization of Provincial and Municipal Police, with Secretary of the Interior Elpidio Quirino, August 3, 1938

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

PLAN OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNORS TO DISCUSS EXECUTIVE ORDER No. 156, REGARDING THE REORGANIZATION OF PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL POLICE, WITH SEC-RETARY OF THE INTERIOR ELPIDIO QUIRINO

[August 3, 1938]

My dear Secretary Quirino:

I have been informed that during the last two days the local newspapers have been carrying the news that the provincial governors in Manila are going to discuss with you Executive Order No. 156, regarding the reorganization of the provincial and municipal police, as issued by me.

It is hard for me to believe that any Department Secretary should, in an official way, contemplate discussing with any other official of the Government or private citizens an executive order issued by the President without the previous knowledge and express permission of the Chief Executive, and, therefore, I assume that there is no ground whatsoever for these newspaper publications.

Once upon a time, and in connection with an action taken by the League of Provincial Governors on a matter which I deemed outside their province, I had occasion to call the attention of the League to the need of being careful with their proceedings so that they would be within the bounds of propriety. I then said that the provincial governors could not ignore the fact that, even though the provincial and municipal governments are under the Department of the Interior, under the Constitution and the laws of the Philippines the President has the ultimate control and supervision over all departments, bureaus, dependencies, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Commonwealth, including, of course, the provincial and municipal governments; and that at any time that the President may deem it in the interest of the public service, he has the right and the power to deal directly with any of such departments, bureaus, dependencies, agencies, and instrumentalities, including provincial and municipal governments.

If you, as the head of the Department of the Interior, have anything to say in reference to the executive order to which I have adverted above, it is your right to come to me and present your views, and you know only too well that I am always ready to listen to reasonable representations and I am not possessed of the false pride of refusing to see and correct a wrong or mistake that I have made. On the contrary, recognizing, as I do, the limitations of human nature including my own, I am always willing to right an injustice or to correct a wrong or mistake; but you certainly have no right to express your views in disagreement with mine to anyone else before you have presented them to me. The same thing may be said of the provincial governors; they cannot go to you or to any Secretary of Department to discuss any executive order which I have issued, with any idea of attempting to have me change it. If they have something to say against an executive order issued by the President, which they consider wrong, they should first present their objections to the President himself, and only after they have submitted their views to the President and have failed to accomplish their purpose, may they appeal to such other recourse as under the Constitution or the laws they may have.

Very sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Political Activities of Cabinet members, city mayors, and other appointive officials, August 3, 1938

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF CABINET MEMBERS, CITY MAYORS, AND OTHER APPOINTIVE OFFICIALS

[August 3, 1938]

My dear Assemblyman Aquino:

Information has come to me to the effect that in Manila our Party is about to insist that Mayor Posadas accept his designation as campaign manager for the City of Manila in the coming election. While I have not come to any definite conclusion as to whether or not the mayor of the City of Manila and all other appointive mayors and members of the Cabinet are expressly prohibited by law or civil service regulation from taking active part in partisan electoral campaigns, it is nevertheless the safer course to take, as a matter of government policy, not to allow either Cabinet members or other appointed officials of the Government to engage directly or indirectly in partisan political activities. They may make speeches discussing political issues and governmental policies, but they should not be active members of the political machinery in charge of the electoral campaign. I hope the leaders of our Party will agree with me in this respect and save Cabinet members and appointive city mayors from the embarrassment of having to decline their choice as electoral campaign managers. Even in the United States where it has been the practice for years to consider the Postmaster General as the member of the Cabinet actively engaged in the politics of the Party, if and when the Postmaster General is chosen to be in charge of a political campaign, it is deemed necessary, however, that he should temporarily relinquish his post. But I would not even want to follow that precedent in the Philippines. If a member of the Cabinet or an appointed mayor is considered by the Party so essential in the electoral campaign that the Party must utilize his services as campaign manager, the official concerned should first and definitely resign his position.

Sincerely yours,

So with regard to this Executive Order or to any other matter which has been the object of an executive action, I certainly do not need to avail myself of the organization of the League of Governors to advance my views. At this juncture, I am pleased to inform you that, despite press reports to the contrary, and since the incident with the League of Governors in 1936, the governors have refrained from acting as a body, utilizing their organization to defeat or modify any established policy of the Government. The league is practically dissolved on my suggestion. I do not believe that the governors who happen to be in Manila intend to revive the old organization. Of course, they may want to express their views relative to their powers and jurisdiction toward the local police as defined in Executive Order No. 156. In this connection, I have already told their committee that if this is their wish, they should not hesitate to ask a hearing within the bounds of propriety.

I regret, indeed, Mr. President, that the newspaper reports on the present activities of the governors have given you such concern as has compelled you to write me your letter today.

Very sincerely yours,

My dear Mrs. Anderson:

I am writing you this letter to tell you how deeply shocked I was to learn of the death of your husband.

Mr. Anderson was not only a very dear friend of mine, but he was also one of the best public servants this Government has ever had. In all the positions he filled, he served the people well and faithfully.

I feel that no words of mine can assuage the affliction that must be yours, but at the same time I hope that you will find consolation and support in the thought that the entire community laments the loss of such a noble and generous soul.

My dear President Bocobo:

I have approved Bill No. 3749, entitled “An Act to appropriate funds for the establishment of postgraduate courses and fellowships in medicine in the College of Medicine of the University of the Philippines.” which now becomes Commonwealth Act No. 401, because I am in favor of its purpose. In view, however, of the opinion expressed by the Board of Regents in which I thoroughly concur, I expect the Board not to make use of this appropriation until after the next session of the National Assembly, when we shall have had occasion to ascertain whether this item can be authorized or not as a recurring appropriation.

On employment of laborers in public works

[Released on September 23, 1938]

My dear Jesus:

Rafael has just given me the radiogram of Abellana and your letter commenting on it.

There is only one point in the complaint of Abellana which I consider very serious, and that is the one referring to the employment of laborers in the public works. I consider it a duty of the Government not to utilize public works funds as a means of inducing voters to support a certain candidate by giving them employment; also, as a matter of conscience, this should not be done. It seems inhuman to me not to give work to certain laborers just because they do not belong to the Nacionalista Party, or because they do not support a certain candidate, or to require them, before giving them work, to help a certain candidate. For the same reason, political preferences should not be taken into account in the selection of foremen who are not permanent employees of the Government. I have repeatedly mentioned to you the things I am now telling you in this letter.

I wish that you would make it known to the Engineer in Cebu that I am tired of hearing complaints about this matter, and that I do not wish to hear any more of the kind in the future. Social justice becomes an illusion if we do not give work to those who need it, regardless of the party to which they belong or the candidate they support. I cannot, without a blush, speak of social justice to the people, if the officials of the Government, from the Department Secretaries down to the last employees of the Executive Branch, on their part, do not practise the policies which I proclaim.

I then appeal to you, not only as your superior but also as your friend—the man to whom you have given your loyal cooperation up to now—and I ask you to find a way by which our partymen as well as our political enemies, not only in Cebu but also in the whole Philippines,—in short the whole people,—may see that we practise what we preach.

Letter of President Quezon on acceptance of resignation of Honorable Elpidio Quirino as Secretary of the Interior, September 27, 1938

[Released on September 27, 1938]

September 23, 1938

Sir:

Heeding the call of the Provincial Board of Ilocos Sur and the municipal councils comprising the first assembly district of said province, I have the honor to tender my resignation as Secretary of the Interior in order to be a candidate for Assemblyman in the district which initiated me in public life nineteen years ago.

In offering my services again to represent the district in the National Assembly, please be assured of my continued loyalty and cooperation in the great task before you as the leader of this nation.

Permit me, Mr. President, to avail myself of this opportunity to acknowledge with profound gratitude the reported evidences of your confidence in me in the various capacities in which I have served the Government not only during your administration but also during the past administrations.

It is with pride and satisfaction that I recall the trust which you have always reposed in me during my fourteen years of service in both houses of the Legislature. As Secretary of Finance and later as Secretary of the Interior, I have been afforded exceptional opportunities to acquire a wealth of knowledge and experience in the affairs of State. Certainly, it has been a rare privilege and honor to have been called to serve successively as head of two important Departments of the Cabinet.

Very respectfully,

On acceptance of resignation of Honorable José Yulo as Secretary of Justice

[Released on September 27, 1938]

My dear Secretary Yulo:

It is beyond my power of expression to voice the great sense of loss which I feel in having to accept your resignation as Secretary of Justice, to take effect on the day of filing of your certificate of candidacy for a seat in the National Assembly. You have honored the Department of Justice and won for it the most abiding confidence and respect of the people. None of your illustrious predecessors has left a higher or better record than you have in the service of this Government. You have raised the standard of the personnel of the judiciary and you have been a living example, both in your public and private life, of what is expected of those who are connected with the administration of justice.

Footnote: *The following is the letter of resignation of Secretary Yulo to which the President replied as above:

September 16, 1938

My dear Mr. President:

I have just received official advice that the delegates of our party in the Province of Occidental Negros, in convention held at Bacolod, have unanimously approved my nomination for election as member of the National Assembly for the third district of that province.

This new call to the public service, coming as it does from representatives of the people of my province, offers such an opportunity for constructive and lasting service in a field distinct from that in which I have been engaged since the first time you offered me the privilege to serve our government; and, conscious of my own limitations, I feel it my duty to answer the call should Your Excellency decide that the public interest would be served thereby. It is thus that before taking the liberty of accepting the nomination, I am first placing the matter before you, with the assurance that I will be guided by Your Excellency's decision.

Letter of President Quezon on attacks against Assemblymen who voted in favor of School Tax Law,
November 1, 1938

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
ATTACKS AGAINST ASSEMBLYMEN WHO VOTED IN FAVOR OF SCHOOL TAX LAW

[November 1, 1938]

My dear Dr. Mañalac:

My attention has been called to the fact that members of the National Assembly who voted in favor of Act No. 381 which empowers “the chartered cities, municipalities, and municipal districts” . . . “to levy a school tax of not more than two pesos per capita on all inhabitants of both sexes from the age of 18 to 60”. . . “to provide additional funds either for the improvement or the extension of intermediate instruction”, are being attacked by their opponents on account of having voted for that Act. This is an administrative measure which I recommended to the National Assembly for approval upon the request of the Department of Public Instruction. Act No. 381 itself shows that this was done because under the Constitution it has become mandatory that all children of school age be given the opportunity to receive at least the benefits of primary instruction. In order to give effect to this mandate of the Constitution, although heretofore elementary education, including primary instruction, was the responsibility of the municipalities, chartered cities, and municipal districts, and the National Government only appropriated from year to year so much amount from the public treasury as the legislature cared to appropriate to aid the local governments for that purpose, the present National Assembly did what none of the preceding legislatures ever did; namely, to enact law No. 381 whereby it made it mandatory upon the National Government to assume exclusive responsibility for the support and extension of public primary education, that is to say, from grade one to grade four inclusive, including the construction of primary school buildings; and only left to the local governments the obligation to support and maintain the intermediate schools, for which purpose the said local governments may. In the future, devote exclusively their school funds which heretofore were being spent also for the purpose of maintaining the primary school from grades one to four; and these local governments were further given the power, at their discretion, to levy the school tax in case this should be necessary. Act No. 381, therefore, instead of imposing a burden upon the chartered cities, municipalities, and municipal districts, has in fact lifted the burden which, prior to the date stated in that Act, they had borne in maintaining the primary schools. In other words, under the provisions of said Act, the National Government is helping the local governments by spending many more millions of pesos for school purposes than it did before.

It is the duty of the Department of Public Instruction to give the people correct information as to the benefits of Act No. 381; and I direct you to telegraph all the superintendents of schools and such other school authorities as you may consider necessary, so that they may inform the people, both in private talks as well as in public speeches, as to the meaning of that Act.

The issue raised against this law, if not properly understood by the people, may create a situation that in the end will be seriously harmful to the people themselves, for if the local governments should find that the people are against the levying of this school tax and they decline to levy it. The result will be that as the National Government extends the primary education all over the Philippines, the children who come out from the primary schools will not have the opportunity of continuing their studies in the intermediate schools, since it is beyond the power of the National Government to also support the intermediate schools after having assumed the full responsibility for supporting the primary schools.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon on Confidence in the Supreme Court of the Philippines, November 28, 1938

Letter

His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Confidence in the Supreme Court of the Philippines

[Released on November 28, 1938]

I am not unmindful of the material interest involved in the Gold Creek case, but over and above such material considerations, no matter how vast they may appear to be, I consider more vital the principle that the Filipino people should show their faith and confidence in their own Supreme Court.

My dear Solicitor General Ozaeta:

Upon coming to office today after my illness, the first matter presented to me was your letter, dated November 28, 1958, forwarded by the Undersecretary of Justice, requesting me to advise you as to whether it is my desire or not to have the case of "Gold Creek Mining Corporation vs. The Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce and the Director of Mines" appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I do not want to lose my time in expressing to you my very strong conviction that the Government of the Commonwealth should, both as a matter of principle and as a matter of policy, accept the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Philippines as final. Under the Constitution of the Philippines, the Supreme Court is the highest tribunal of the land and its decisions are final, except as they may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in certain specified cases. But even in these few cases the intervention of the Supreme Court of the United States is temporary and may only be exercised until 1946, or prior to the establishment of the Philippine Republic.

We have, time and again, avowed our faith in our ability to establish and maintain an independent government. The postponement of the establishment of an independent Philippine Republic was not due to any idea that we required further education in self-government or the continued supervision by the Government of the United States over any of the branches of the Government of the Philippines, but only to the consideration that time was necessary to permit the Filipino people to adjust their national economy to the responsibilities of an independent existence. If we are going to accept the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Philippines after 1946 as final, because we have faith in our Supreme Court and in the integrity and ability of its members, we should show that faith now. I, for one, have that faith in our Supreme Court, and as long as I am the resident and can help it no decision of that Court against the Government of the Commonwealth will be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. Let private individuals or private interests, if they so desire, take advantage of their right to appeal their cases to the Supreme Court of the United States; let others follow the same course but not the Government of the Commonwealth.

I am not unmindful of the material interest involved in the Gold Creek case, but over and above such material considerations no matter how vast they may appear to be, I consider more vital the principle that the Filipino people should show their faith and confidence in their own Supreme Court.

It is, therefore, my desire that no appeal be taken from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Gold Creek case.

Letter of President Quezon on Employment of Trainee Graduates, February 23, 1939

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

EMPLOYMENT OF TRAINEE GRADUATES

[February 23, 1939]

My dear General Valdes:

For some time past, I have been seeking for some method whereby the Government might be assured of maximum returns, both in peace and war, from its financial and moral investments in trainee graduates. These young men, to whom the Government has given five to eleven months of intensive military training, return to their homes and to their former habits of life, and are thereafter no longer governmentally coordinated except for assignment to their corresponding reserve company, battalion, regiment and division unit, and, as a part of such units, assembled for active training during the ensuing ten years until they have received a total of about forty days of such unit instruction.

More and more it has been impressed upon me that unless something is done to keep these men constantly interested and unless the Government concerns itself actively in their economic future, so that they may be fit and qualified to render efficient service, it is more than probable that their full potential value to the Government, in time of emergency, will never be realized. Moreover, this useless and serious wastage will extend to the valuable by-products of military training, which are so important to the nation. Indeed, I have, on many occasions, stated that I would require universal military training for the youth of the land, even if I were certain that the Philippines would never have to face an enemy from without or within. I consider that the physical, mental and moral benefits derived by our young men from military training, and the resultant effect in making better citizens of them, more than justify in themselves the sixteen million pesos or more that we spend annually on the Army.

As one step toward the accomplishment of the purpose outlined above, I have directed that, in the development of Mindanao, trainee graduates should be given every opportunity, and it is partly for this reason that I chose General Santos, the former Chief of Staff, to be in charge of that great enterprise. But this is not enough, if for no other reason than that all trainees will not find it desirable, or even possible, to go to Mindanao. We need a system of general contacts, and of such group support and guidance as is practical and as will tend to develop and exploit the sound elementary training these men have received in the training cadres.

Possibilities that have so far suggested themselves to me are:

1. Use of public domain in certain localities in assuring the economic future of trainees.
2. When filling the following classes of positions, and where required qualifications are possessed by trainees, to give them, and possibly also to graduates of Reserve Officers Training Corps, preferential treatment in:

a. Civil Service competitions.

b. Filling all appointive offices of the Government, particularly the Bureau of Education and local police forces.

c. Filling positions in government-owned corporations, such as the Manila Railroad Company, and the National Development Company and its subsidiary corporations.

3. Organization in each municipality of patriotic associations of Reservists, corresponding, wherever possible, to a tactical unit of the Reserve Army, and sponsored and aided by governors, mayors, and other civil officials. Their purpose would be largely fraternal and social, but they would likewise serve constantly as a practical connecting link between the Government and the individuals belonging to these organizations. By granting to these bodies the privilege of wearing the uniform in parades and other civic functions, the prestige of the individual would be raised, and the collective influence of trainees would be enhanced.

It is essential that exhaustive studies of this problem should be immediately instituted by a competent group, so that every possible angle may be thoroughly explored. To conduct the necessary investigations, and to make appropriate recommendations I intend to create a committee in which will be represented the Army, the Bureau of Education, the Bureau of Civil Service, the Mindanao Development Project and possibly other governmental agencies. Before creating this committee I should like to have, at your early convenience, your comments and suggestions on this general subject.

Letter of President Quezon on case of Former Assemblyman Justiniano S. Montano of Cavite, April 15, 1939

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

CASE OF FORMER ASSEMBLYMAN JUSTINIANO
S. MONTANO OF CAVITE

[April 15, 1939]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

May I congratulate you and Floor Leader Paredes, as well as the other members of the National Assembly, for the courageous action you have taken in the case of Assemblyman Justiniano Montano from Cavite? By this act, the National Assembly has set up a high standard of integrity in the public service, which the other branches of the Government will be compelled to emulate, with a most wholesome effect upon the country.

The National Assembly is vested by the Constitution with the sole power to remove from office, through impeachment proceedings, the highest officers of the Government—the President, the Vice President, the Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Auditor General—on conviction of culpable violation of the Constitution, treason, bribery, or other high crimes. In taking the action you have taken against your own colleague, you, the members of the National Assembly, have given public notice not only of your conception of the degree of integrity required of public officials, but also of the manner in which those who fail to live up to such requirement should be dealt with. Thus, by a single stroke of the pen, so to speak, you have made it patent to everyone that you will neither tolerate, nor compromise with, any lack-of integrity on the part of those who occupy positions of trust and confidence in the service of the Government.

The practice of allowing considerations of politics, kinship, or friendship to influence the determination of the guilt or innocence of a particular person has justly received a deathblow, thanks to the strict impartiality with which you have judged your own colleague, Assemblyman Montano, who is a member of our own party, who was our own official candidate in Cavite, and who is a personal and intimate friend of many of us, besides being a talented young man. It was he who, after a series of defeats of our party in his province where the Opposition held sway for many years, carried the banner of our party to victory in three successive campaigns. But all this has served him nothing when he was found wanting in integrity by the Assembly. While perhaps his colleagues in the National Assembly and his friends and political associates outside can not fail to regret the disgrace which has befallen Assemblyman Montano, yet, since he has merited the punishment meted out to him, all good citizens may well be thankful that the National Assembly has come out of this hard test with credit both to itself and to the people it represents.

Incidentally, this unfortunate and regrettable occurrence has demonstrated that the Nationalist Party needs no Opposition to urge it to perform its duty under the Constitution and the laws.

Once more, I wish to express to you, to Floor Leader Paredes, and to the other members of the National Assembly my warmest congratulations for the great service you have rendered to the nation.

[April 17, 1939]

Gentlemen:

I have the honor to inform you that I have decided to reconsider the nomination of the Honorable Marcial Kasilag for under-secretaryship of Public Works and Communications, sent to the Commission on Appointments of the National Assembly on March 9, 1939; and the said nomination is, therefore, hereby withdrawn from your consideration.

Since making this nomination there has come to my knowledge the decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of Rafaela Rodriguez et al. vs. Marcial Kasilag, CA-G. R. No. 1348, wherein the integrity of Mr. Kasilag is put in question. I am informed that an application for a writ of certiorari has been filed with the Supreme Court to secure a review of this decision. While the pronouncements of the courts are not necessarily binding on the Executive, I deem it in the best interest of the public service, in the present instance, to withdraw the nomination of Mr. Kasilag pending the final determination of the case by the Supreme Court.

PRESENTATION OF AMERICAN AND FILIPINO FLAGS TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

[May 9, 1939]

Dear Mr. Commissioner:

You will remember that in my speech in connection with the Filipinos' celebration of the fortieth anniversary of America's occupation of the Philippines, on the Luneta on August 13 of last year, I publicly presented to you an American and a Filipino flag with the request that they be conveyed to the President of the United States as a symbol of the eternal friendship between the American and the Filipino peoples. Upon your departure for the United States, may I not avail myself of the opportunity to ask you to be the bearer of the cordial greetings of the Filipino people to President Roosevelt and the American people, together with these flags which are encased in Philippine wood? A letter addressed to President Roosevelt accompanies the case bearing the flags.

I wish to make of record here my deep appreciation of the sympathetic and helpful attitude that you have shown towards the problems of the Commonwealth Government, which brought about a friendly understanding, based on the most cordial relations between this Office and yours, that has been mutually conducive to a highly satisfactory conduct of business between the American and Philippine Governments.

In wishing you Godspeed and bon voyage, Mrs. Quezon and I hope that you will be successful in all your ventures in life, and that you may be in our midst once again.

Mrs. Quezon and the children join me in extending greetings and good wishes to Mrs. McNutt and your daughter Louise.

APPROVAL OF BILL IMPOSING RESIDENCE TAX

Sir:

Section 8 of this law provides, among others, that the proceeds from the residence tax will be allotted among the local governments and that one-half thereof will go to the school fund of the cities, municipalities, and municipal districts. It is possible that the collections accruing from this tax will be sufficient to enable the local governments concerned to meet the expenses of intermediate instruction, thereby making it unnecessary for them to levy the school tax authorized in Commonwealth Act No. 381. It is, therefore, desired that the corresponding local government officials be so advised.

Letter of President Quezon on Extension of Period of Repayment of Municipal Loans to ten years, June 14, 1939

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

EXTENSION OF PERIOD OF REPAYMENT OF MUNICIPAL LOANS TO TEN YEARS

[June 14, 1939]

Sir:

I have the honor to inform you that I have today approved Bill No. 48, entitled "An Act to increase the maximum period within which the payment of loans of municipal funds may be made," which now becomes Commonwealth Act No. 463.

It has been pointed out to me that the proposed extension of the period of repayment of municipal loans to ten years will have the effect of tying up municipal surplus funds for a longer period of time than what is at present authorized, a situation which would prevent the municipalities concerned from withdrawing such funds when the need therefor arises. The Secretary of the Interior has, however, called my attention to the fact that as the bill does not fix the period for the loans but keeps intact the discretion of the provincial treasurer to do so as long as it does not exceed ten years, there is sufficient safeguard to avoid the happening of the situation referred to above.

In order, therefore, to maintain the stability of municipal funds and to prevent any unnecessary tying up of needed cash in proper cases, it is desired that the provincial treasurers be instructed to exercise the necessary precaution in the granting of loans from such funds.

SIGNING BILL No. 992, CREATING AN ADVANCE FUND TO ASSESSMENTS IN THE PROVINCES

[June 15, 1939]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

I have today signed Bill No. 992, entitled “An Act to create an advance fund of two million pesos to finance a general revision of real property assessments in the provinces,” which now becomes Commonwealth Act No. 468.

The law gives you the power to issue the rules and regulations for the granting of the loans. In drafting such rules and regulations, I hope you will bear in mind the need of not tying up unnecessarily for too long a time funds of the National Government so that whenever the finances of a given province will permit, you will make the province pay the fund advanced within a shorter period than is authorized by the Act.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I thank you for your cordial message on the occasion of the transfer of the Bureau of Insular Affairs to your Department, and on behalf of the Filipino people and in my own name, I reciprocate your good wishes. The reasons of the President of the United States for making the transfer are understood and full cooperation under the new arrangement will, as always, be the aim of the Commonwealth Government. I appreciate more than I can say your offer of cooperation and assistance to the Commonwealth Government. On my part, I beg to assure you that it will be my pleasure as it is my duty to cooperate with you and your Department in the promotion of the best interests of both the United States and the Philippines. May I take advantage of this opportunity to invite you to visit the Philippines in the near future? Letter of President Quezon on view on question of Presidential Re-election, August 21, 1939

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON VIEW ON QUESTION OF PRESIDENTIAL RE-ELECTION

[August 21, 1939]

My dear Mr. Speaker:

In a recent message, I have already expressed in unmistakable terms my views and sentiments on the question of my reelection. In order that there may not be the least doubt on this point, should the National Assembly decide that in the interest of the people the Constitution be amended with respect to the term of office of the President. I earnestly request that any amendment permitting the reelection of the President of the Philippines be not made applicable to the present incumbent of the office.

The present Constitution of the Philippines, under the provisions of which I have been elected, provides that the President shall be elected for a term of six years and shall be ineligible for reelection. This being the case, such provision of the Constitution should be respected and given full effect, and since under its terms I am disqualified to succeed myself, the disqualification should not be removed by amending the Constitution. If the prohibition against reelection is considered unwise, the effect of its removal should be made prospective and not retroactive.

Very sincerely,

With reference to your letter of August 8, 1939, His Excellency, the President, directs me to inform you that the action of the Board of Medical Examiners in allowing certain Jews to take the medical examination held last May was taken in accordance with His Excellency's decision as acting Secretary of Public Instruction. Letter of President Quezon on equitable adjustment of present participation of Sugar Centrals with Planters,

LETTER
OF
HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES
ON
EQUITABLE ADJUSTMENT OF PRESENT PARTICIPATION RATIOS OF SUGAR CENTRALS WITH PLANTERS

[September 16, 1939]

Sir:

In its report of August 2, 1939, the National Sugar Board, created under Executive Order No. 157, series of 1938, finds that the following centrals may equitably adjust their present participation ratios with their planters' share to 60 per centum of the sugar milled, retaining 40 per centum of this sugar as the share of the central:

Sugar central Calamba
Calumpit
Del Carmen
Mabalacat
Pasudeco
Bacolod-Murcia
Hawaii-Philippine Lopez
Manapla
San Carlos
Talisay-Silay
Victorias
Janiuay

It will greatly facilitate the proper solution of this phase of the Philippine sugar problem were I to be advised whether or not the owners of the named centrals would agree voluntarily to revise their present contracts with their planters along the lines indicated by the National Sugar Board, and I would request you, as President of the Philippine Sugar Association, to communicate with the said mill-owners to ascertain their views on this matter. I would appreciate it highly if I can get your answer on or before October 1, 1939, as I propose to submit this matter to the National Assembly before the coming milling season.

Letter of President Quezon on Suspension of Cavite Provincial Governor and Municipal Mayors of Cavite, Imus, and Tanza, October 10, 1939

LETTER

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

SUSPENSION OF CAVITE PROVINCIAL GOVERNOR AND MUNICIPAL MAYORS OF CAVITE, IMUS, AND TANZA

[October 10, 1939]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

In the matter of the suspension of the mayors of Cavite, Imus, and Tanza, all of the province of Cavite by the governor of that province, the preliminary investigation which I have personally made clearly shows that the governor has committed such an arbitrary act and abuse of authority that the public interest demands his suspension from office, which I hereby order, pending the investigation which you will please cause to be conducted immediately.

The facts, according to my information, are these:

On the 20th of September 1939, soon after I signed the Bill entitled "An Act to submit to the Filipino people, for approval or disapproval, the amendments to the Constitution of the Philippines and to the Ordinance appended thereto proposed by the National Assembly in resolutions adopted on September fifteen, nineteen hundred and thirty-nine and to appropriate funds therefor" which became Commonwealth Act No. 492, following a long-established practice of the Department of the Interior, you issued a circular to all governors advising them of the provisions of the Act and stating that no new election inspectors should be appointed except for the purpose of filling vacancies.

The mayor of Cavite, after consulting the provincial fiscal, appointed new nationalist inspectors in substitution of other nationalist inspectors pursuant to the recommendation of the representative of the national directorate of the Nationalist Party as provided in section 74 of the Election Code. The mayors of Imus and Tanza did likewise, except that they did not consult the Provincial Fiscal before making the appointments.

Whereupon the governor, on his own initiative and without the knowledge of the Secretary of the Interior, suspended the mayors above referred to from 7:00 o'clock in the morning until 7:00 o'clock in the evening of October 7th, the registration day.

The reason given by the governor in the order of suspension was the disobedience on the part of the aforesaid mayors of the instructions contained in the circular of the Secretary of the Interior of September 20th, to the effect that no new election inspectors should be appointed except for the purpose of filling vacancies.

Granting that the mayors of Cavite, Imus, and Tanza had disobeyed an order of the Secretary of the Interior, it is the latter and not the governor who could suspend them, because under section 2 of the Election Code, the power to suspend a recalcitrant official is vested in the Secretary of the Interior. But even in this case the official may be suspended only if he disobeys a lawful order after he has been admonished to comply with the same, and where the act to be performed by him is purely ministerial in nature. In the case of the appointment of election inspectors, the duty of the mayor is not ministerial. It is he who has the power to appoint and nobody else, although he must make the appointment from among those proposed by the authorized representative of the national directorate of the party concerned.

I am aware of the fight going on between two factions of the Nationalist Party in Cavite, which grew out of the last election for members of the National Assembly. All the suspended mayors belong to the faction which supported the candidate opposed by the governor. The directorate of the Nationalist Party, I am informed, in an effort to secure the cooperation of the two factions of the party in the coming plebiscite, wanted to give one inspector of election to each faction. Since only one faction was represented in the board of election inspectors, the Party recommended that the other faction be also given representation.

These facts are cited because they show the motive which prompted the governor to suspend the mayors of Cavite, Imus, and Tanza—political partisanship. This is all the more evident in the case of the mayor of Tanza who testified before me that as soon as the vice-mayor assumed the office of mayor on October 7th, he summarily removed the municipal secretary. Incidentally, please order also the investigation of this case so that, if the facts should warrant, the removal of the vice-mayor of Tanza may be effected.

As far as the acts committed by the governor of Cavite are concerned, it is immaterial whether or not Commonwealth Act No. 492 authorizes the appointment of new inspectors. The governor has no authority under the Election Code to suspend even a recalcitrant official who refuses to perform a merely ministerial act. This authority is vested in the Secretary of the Interior.

This Administration has repeatedly warned public officials against abuse of authority and political persecution. We have time and again announced our determination to tolerate no injustices. The governor of Cavite is charged with the commission of an arbitrary act and abuse of authority. The evidence produced at the preliminary investigation held by me warrants his suspension from office, pending the result of the investigation of his conduct in the premises.

Sincerely yours,

Telegram from President Quezon to President Roosevelt, December 9, 1941

I have just arrived from Baguio the summer capital of the Philippines where I was when the war between the United States and Japan was declared. I have covered the country by automobile and I am happy to report that everywhere the people are loyal to America and determined to stand by her in testimony of their gratitude to you, to the Government of the United States and to the American people and because of their devotion to the cause of Democracy and freedom. I am proud therefore that the reiterated assurance I have given to you to the effect that you can count upon us was no empty word.

Manuel L. Quezon

Letter of President Quezon to Field Marshal MacArthur, January 28, 1942

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To Field Marshal MacArthur

[Fort Mills, January 28, 1942]

My dear General MacArthur:

I have been mortified by the radio broadcast from Tokio asserting that a new government has been established in the Philippines, which government has pledged its conformity with Japan's new East Asia policy.

I know what the real sentiments of my people are and I am certain that their stand has not changed despite the military reverses of our forces. I am likewise convinced of the loyalty of the men who have accepted positions in the so-called new government.

I want you, therefore, to give publicity of the following statement: "The determination of the Filipino people to continue fighting side by side with the United States until victory is won has in no way been weakened by the temporary reverses suffered by our arms. We are convinced that our sacrifices will be crowned with victory in the end and in that conviction we shall continue to resist the enemy with all our might."

Japanese military forces are occupying sections of the Philippines comprising only one third of our territory. In the remaining areas constitutional government is still in operation under my authority.

I have no direct information concerning the veracity of the news broadcast from Tokio that a commission composed of some well known Filipinos have been recently organized in Manila to take charge of certain functions of civil government. The organization of such a commission, if true, can have no political significance not only because it is charged merely with purely administrative functions but also because the acquiescence by its members to serve in the commission was evidently for the purpose of safeguarding the welfare of the civilian population and can, in no way, reflect the sentiments of the Filipino toward the enemy. Such sentiments are still those I have repeatedly expressed in the past: Loyalty to America and resolute resistance against the invasion of our territory and liberties.

At the same time I am going to open my mind and my heart to you without attempting to hide anything.

We are before the bar of history and God only knows if this is the last time that my voice will be heard before going to my grave.

My loyalty and the loyalty of the Filipino people to America have been proven beyond question. Now we are fighting by her side under your command, despite overwhelming odds. But, it seems to me questionable whether any government has the right to demand loyalty from its citizens beyond its willingness or ability to render actual protection.

This war is not of our making. Those that had dictated the policies of the United States could not have failed to see that this is the weakest point in American territory. From the beginning, they should have tried to build up our defenses. As soon as the prospects looked bad to me, I telegraphed President Roosevelt requesting him to include the Philippines in the American defense program. I was given no satisfactory answer.

When I tried to do something to accelerate our defense preparations, I was stopped from doing it.

Despite all this we never hesitated for a moment in our stand. We decided to fight by your side and we have done the best we could and we are still doing as much as could be expected from us under the circumstances. But how long are we going to be left alone? Has it already been decided in Washington that the Philippine front is of no importance as far as the final result of the war is concerned and that, therefore, no help can be expected here in the immediate future, or at least before our power of resistance is exhausted? If so, I want to know it, because I have my own responsibility to my countrymen whom, as President of the Commonwealth, I have led into a complete war effort. I am greatly concerned as well regarding the soldiers I have called to the colors and who are now manning the firing line. I want to decide in my own mind whether there is justification in allowing all these men to be killed, when for the final outcome of the war the shedding of their blood may be wholly unnecessary. It seems that Washington does not fully realize our situation nor the feelings which the apparent neglect of our safety and welfare have engendered in the hearts of the people here.

Some days ago, I telegraphed the President of the United States about this same matter. I did not receive even one word of acknowledgment. Is the sacrifice that I, members of my Government, and my whole family are making here, of no value at all?

In reference to the men who have accepted positions in the commission established by the Japanese, everyone of them wanted to come to Corregidor, but you told me that there was no place for them here.

They are not Quislings. The Quislings are the men who betray their country to the enemy. These men did what they had been asked to do, under the protection of their Government. Today they are virtually prisoners of the enemy. I am sure they are only doing what they think is their duty. They are not traitors. They are the victims of the adverse fortunes of war and I am sure they had no choice. Besides, it is most probable that they accepted their positions in order to safeguard the welfare of the civilian population in the occupied areas. I think, under the circumstances, America should look upon their situation sympathetically and understandingly.

I am confident that you will understand my anxiety about the long awaited reinforcements and trust you will again urge Washington to insure their early arrival.

Sincerely yours,

Manuel L. Quezon

Telegram of President Quezon to President Roosevelt, February 8, 1942

FORT MILLS, February 8, 1942. 22:65.

The situation of my country has become so desperate that I feel that positive action is demanded. Militarily it is evident that no help will reach us from the United States in time either to rescue the beleaguered garrison now fighting so gallantly or to prevent the complete overrunning of the entire Philippine Archipelago. My people entered the war with the confidence that the United States would bring such assistance to us as would make it possible to sustain the conflict with some chance of success. All our soldiers in the field were animated by the belief that help would be forthcoming. This help has not and evidently will not be realized. Our people have suffered death, misery, devastation. After 2 months of war not the slightest assistance has been forthcoming from the United States. Aid and succour have been dispatched to other warring nations such as England, Ireland, Australia, the N. E. I. and perhaps others, but not only has nothing come here, but apparently no effort has been made to bring anything here. The American Fleet and the British Fleet, the two most powerful navies in the world, have apparently adopted an attitude which precludes any effort to reach these islands with assistance. As a result, while enjoying security itself, the United States has in effect condemned the sixteen millions of Filipinos to practical destruction in order to effect a certain delay. You have promised redemption, but what we need is immediate assistance and protection. We are concerned with what is to transpire during the next few months and years as well as with our ultimate destiny. There is not the slightest doubt in our minds that victory will rest with the United States, but the question before us now is : Shall we further sacrifice our country and our people in a hopeless fight? I voice the unanimous opinion of my War Cabinet and I am sure the unanimous opinion of all Filipinos that under the circumstances we should take steps to preserve the Philippines and the Filipinos from further destruction. Thanks to wise generalship two-thirds of my country is as yet untouched. We do not propose to do this by a betrayal of the United States. It appears to us that our mission is only to fight as a sacrifice force here as long as possible in order to help the defense of the Dutch and British in this area of the World. But you do not need to sacrifice the people of the Philippines to win this war. Members of your Government here repeatedly said that the action against Hitler would determine the outcome of the entire war. I feel at this moment that our military resistance here can no longer hold the enemy when he sees fit to launch a serious attack. I feel that the elements of the situation here can be composed into a solution that will not reduce the delaying effect of our resistance here but which will save my country from further devastation as the battleground of two great powers. I deem it my duty to propose my solution. The Government of the United States under the McDuffie—Tydings law is committed to grant independence to the Philippines in 1946, and the same law authorized the President to open negotiations for the neutralization of the Philippines. On the other hand, the Japanese Government has public announced its willingness to grant the Philippines her independence. In view of the foregoing I propose the following: That the United States immediately grant the Philippines complete and absolute independence; That the Philippines be at once neutralized; That all occupying troops, both American and Japanese, be withdrawn by mutual agreement with the Philippine Government within a reasonable length of time; That neither country maintain bases in the Philippines; That the Philippine Army be immediately disbanded, the only armed forces being maintained here to be a constabulary of modest size; That immediately upon granting independence the trade relations of the Philippines with foreign countries be a matter to be determined entirely by the Philippines and the foreign countries concerned; That American and Japanese civilians who so desire be withdrawn with their respective troops under mutual and proper safeguards. It is my proposal to make this suggestion publicly to you and to the Japanese authorities without delay and upon acceptance in general principle by those two countries that an immediate armistice be entered into here pending the withdrawal of their respective garrisons.

Manuel L. Quezon

Telegram of President Quezon to President Roosevelt, February 10, 1942

FORTMILLS, February 10, 1942.

The following is the letter I propose to address to you and to the Emperor of Japan if my recent proposal meets with your approval:

Two great nations are now at war in the Western Pacific. The Commonwealth of the Philippines is still a possession of one of those nations, although through legislative processes it was about to attain complete independence which would have insured its neutrality in any conflict. The Philippines has therefore become a battleground between the warring powers and it is being visited with death, famine and destruction, despite the fact that occupation of the country will not influence in any way the final outcome of the war, nor have a bearing upon the conflicting principles over which the war is being waged.

Under the Tydings—McDuffie Law the United States has promised to recognize the independence of the Philippines in 1946 and the same law gave authority to the President of the United States to begin parleys for the neutralization of the Philippines. On the other hand, the Premier of the Imperial Government of Japan, addressing the Diet, stated that the Imperial Government of Japan was ready to offer the Filipino people independence with honor. On the strength of these commitments and impelled by a sincere desire to put an end to the sufferings and sacrifices of our people, and to safeguard their liberty and welfare, I propose the following program of action:

That the Government of the United States and the Imperial Government of Japan recognize the independence of the Philippines; that within a reasonable period of time both armies, American and Japanese, be withdrawn, previous arrangements having been negotiated with the Philippine government; that neither nation maintain bases in the Philippines; that the Philippine Army be at once demobilized, the remaining force to be a Constabulary of moderate size; that at once upon the granting of freedom that trade agreement with other countries become solely a matter to be settled by the Philippines and the nation concerned; that American and Japanese non combatants who so desire be evacuated with their own armies under reciprocal and appropriate stipulations. It is my earnest hope that, moved by the highest considerations of justice and humanity, the two great powers which now exercise control over the Philippines will give their approval in general principle to my proposal. If this is done I further propose, in order to accomplish the details thereof, that an Armistice be declared in the Philippines and that I proceed to Manila at once for necessary consultations with the two governments concerned.

February 20, 1942

My dear General MacArthur:

Although I have given official recognition to the services you have rendered to the government of the Commonwealth and to the Filipino people in my Executive Order No. I, series of 1942, I feel that I must write you this letter, which partakes of an official as well as private character, in order to tell you how grateful I am, my own family, and the members of my whole staff for the kindness and generosity with which we have been treated here; and to ask you to convey to all the officers within your command, particularly to General Moore, our deep gratitude.

As I have already told you, I would have remained here to the very bitter end, if you deemed it necessary for me to stay. I am going only because you and I have agreed that the cause for which we are fighting can be best promoted by my being in the unoccupied territory where I could render you help and assistance by keeping up the morale and determination of my people to stand by America. But I am leaving you with a weeping heart, for you and I have not only been friends and comrades; we have been more than brothers. My thoughts will always be with you and your dear wife and my godson. If better days should come to all of us, as I hope they will, I expect that the memory of these hectic days will strengthen our friendship and cooperation even more. I am leaving my own boys, the Filipino soldiers, under your care. I know that you will look after their welfare and safety and that, above all, you will see to it that their names may go down in history as loyal and brave soldiers.

With my love to you, Jean and the boy, in which all my family joins, I say good-bye till we meet again. May God ever keep you under His protection.

My dear General Sharp:

Major Soriano who was on the front has been appointed by me, with the knowledge and consent of General MacArthur, Treasurer of the Philippines, and I have made him member of my War Cabinet. I am sending him to Mindanao as my special delegate and representative to discuss with you and Mr. Guingona, and the other provincial authorities of Mindanao, the problems that exist there. Major Soriano has been given authority to act in my behalf. He will carry with him the funds that the USAFFE may need as well as the provincial and municipal governments in amounts that Cebu has already been able to print.

In order to avoid the need of sending for funds from Cebu, Major Soriano is going to see if he can have some plates made in Cebu for Mindanao so that emergency currency may be printed in some place in Mindanao. I do not consider wise to have Mindanao, or in fact any part of the Philippines, depend upon any other province which might be occupied at any moment.

Sincerely yours,

(sgd.) Manuel L. Quezon

P.S. I am taking the liberty of sending you a copy of the letter which General Jones wrote to General Sutherland regarding Major Soriano's services in the field, one copy of which letter having been given to me by General Sutherland himself.

You are hereby appointed Member of my War Cabinet without portfolio. You will please proceed to Cebu where you will meet with the other members of my cabinet to take part in the deliberations of public matters that might come before it and to carry out other missions that I have entrusted to you. After you have completed your work in Cebu you will please proceed to Mindanao where you will be my Special Representative before General Sharpe. In matters affecting Civil Government in all the provinces of Mindanao except Surigao, I am designating you as my Special Delegate to act for me if and when prompt action may be absolutely necessary. You will please discuss the civil matters with Mr. Guingona whom I have designated as the representative of the Department of the Interior to exercise the old functions of said department over provincial and municipal governments. However, during your stay in Mindanao, Commissioner Guingona shall discuss with you matters policy to be adopted in the Mindanao provinces, excepting the province of Surigao, and whenever there is a perfect agreement between you two and General Sharpe offers no objection thereto, such policies as may have thus been agreed upon, will be carried out as if they have received the specific approval of the President. I hereby also authorize you to receive from the Manager of the Philippine National Bank and/or the Currency Committee in Cebu, all the funds that be required by the USAFFE in Mindanao as well as the provinces therein with the exception of Surigao. You are also authorized to require the engraving of the necessary plates for the currency to be printed in Mindanao.

Letter of President Quezon to Field Marshal MacArthur, April 19, 1942

Melbourne, Australia

April 19, 1942

My Dear General MacArthur:

On the eve of my departure I desire to write down a few thoughts that I earnestly hope will make some impression on you.

I am certain that, despite your new responsibilities and very high place in this great conflict, your heart is still with the Philippine Army which you have created, especially after the misfortune which has befallen it, not for lack of courage or will and ability to fight, but because of lack of means with which it could put up a winning battle. Remnants of the Philippine Army are still in Mindanao waiting for you to come and give them a chance to fight back victoriously. Until you are ready to return in force, there will be very little that can be done for them except to send them supplies. But there is a group there for whom something can and should be done at once. I am referring to the Philippine Air Corps men who are now in Mindanao. Won't you pick a few of those men and bring them here and constitute a squadron with them so that they might do their bit in the fight in the air that is going on? I am told that these boys can hold their own against the enemy.

The general feeling of depression and helplessness which the Filipinos both in the Philippines and abroad feel would in part be relieved with the knowledge that a unit of the Philippine Air Force, no matter how small, takes part in the reconquest. This would make us all feel proud and encouraged. I therefore appeal to you and fervently hope that you will do what you can to bring a few Filipino pilots from Mindanao, give them planes and create a unit with them.

I would also appreciate it if you could give the Silver Star to General Valdes, Colonel Nieto, Lieutenant Colonel Soriano and Lieutenant Colonel Velasquez. Every one of these men have dared death in Bataan and in the trips they have made with me. I know they have the courage which deserves that decoration.

There are many Filipinos who are here in Australia, all of them either officers and crews of ships that have been taken over by the USAFFE, or Filipino soldiers. I hope the United States Government will take care of them and pay their salaries until the war is over. Should there be cases that the American Army cannot properly care for, I give you full authority to order Lieutenant Colonel Jose McMicking, whom I am appointing as disbursing officer, to pay such sums of money as you may think equitable. I am leaving sufficient amounts in the Commonwealth Bank of Australia to cover this.

It is hardly necessary for me to reiterate my grateful appreciation for everything that you, General Sutherland, General Marshall, and the rest of the men under your command, including General Sharp of Mindanao and others, have done for me. I confidently expect that we are not parting company for good, but that we will continue the work which we have started of making the Philippines and the Filipino people prosperous, happy, free, and a strong nation.

With love to you, Mrs. MacArthur, and Arthur I am, as ever,

Devotedly yours,

Hon. Cordell Hull
Secretary of State of the United States of America Washington, D. C.

Mr. Secretary:

I The people of the Philippines are wholeheartedly devoted to liberty and fully subscribe to the principle set forth in that great document known as the Atlantic Charter which was proclaimed by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill on August 14, 1941.

We have been battling since December 7, 1941 to preserve our country from the menace of Japanese aggression. Although a large part of our territory is overrun by Japanese military forces, our soldiers are still actively engaged in meeting and harassing the foe wherever possible. We do not intend to be cowed by the armed might of Japan. We wish to continue the struggle with every means in our power.

We desire to associate ourselves with those nations which are fighting for the preservation of life and liberty against the forces of barbarism that seek world domination. Accordingly, the Commonwealth of the Philippines hereby formally adheres to the declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942.

I am, my dear Mr. Secretary,

Very truly yours,

Letter of President Quezon to U.S. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes on Executive Order No. 9245 and the Letter of Instructions, October 10, 1942

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To U.S. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes on Executive Order No. 9245 and the Letter of Instructions

[Sent to Washington, D. C., October 10, 1942]

Washington, D. C.
October 10, 1942

My dear Mr. Secretary:

I have read the Executive Order No. 9245 and the letter of instructions of the President issued in pursuance thereto, both dated September 16, 1942.

You will remember that in our last meeting it was agreed that Under-Secretary Fortas and I would meet again to discuss the plan for carrying out the directives of the President, but unfortunately Mr. Fortas did not have time to see me before his trip to the West; hence this letter.

Of course, both the Executive Order and the letter of instructions are perfectly in accordance with the provisions of existing laws, but I am inclined to believe that neither the President nor you intended – as a literal interpretation of the letter of instructions would permit – that the studies of the difficult problems that will confront the Philippines after final victory shall have been achieved, be undertaken by your office only and not in cooperation with me.

From the very courteous treatment that I have received from you since my arrival in Washington, and considering the plan upon which the President of the United States has dealt with me when he allowed me to sign the Atlantic Charter and to sit in the Pacific War Council, I can only conclude that when I was invited to come and establish my government-in-exile in Washington, it was not merely the purpose to afford me a secure place of refuge which, as the President knows, was never of serious concern to me, but to give me an opportunity to continue to perform the duties of my office and to look after the future of my people. The letter of the President, if construed and carried out to the letter, would make it the exclusive responsibility of your office the making of the studies and submitting the recommendations regarding the solution of the manifold problems that will have to be met when once the Philippines are free from the enemy, except that you are authorized to “consult with the President of the Philippines and other officials of the Philippine Government to the extent that you find it necessary or advisable.” (underline mine) I cannot believe that in a matter where my own country is the most vitally affected, either the President or you would consider it right or fair that the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines should play a secondary and a non-essential role. To be placed in such a situation, it would have been preferable to have been captured or killed by the Japanese for in neither case would have suffered the dignity of my office or my self-respect.

I earnestly and respectfully request, therefore, that the studies and recommendations to which the letter of instructions of the President refers be made in cooperation between your office and mine, by a committee which shall be created by the President under your chairmanship, the members of which committee to be composed of equal number of Americans and Filipinos, the Filipinos to be appointed by me. Such a procedure would be in line with a precedent established by President Roosevelt himself.

When the question of giving further consideration to the economic provisions of the Independence Act came up, the President created a committee composed of equal number of Americans and Filipinos. The President was good enough to grant me the right to appoint the Filipino members of the committee, and before appointing the chairman, he graciously heard my views regarding the suitability of the man he chose. This committee made a very extensive and factual study of all the facts in the case and submitted a joint recommendation which the President of the United States only approved and submitted to Congress for the appropriate legislative enactment after I had endorsed it.

There is another precedent of a legislative character which justifies my suggestion. I am referring to Public Act No. 300, 76th Congress, entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.' "Section 4 of this Act provides that at least two years before the date for the recognition of Philippine independence, "there shall be held a conference of representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, such representatives, on the part of the United States, to consist of three United States Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House, and, on the part of the Philippines, to consist of nine representatives to be appointed by the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, with the consent of the Commission on Appointments of the National Assembly, for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between the United States and the independent Philippine Republic, the time, place, and manner of holding such conference to be determined by the President of the United States"

You will note that the Act grants the Philippines exactly the same number of representatives in the committee as it is granted the United States – nine members to each side – and, under ordinary legal interpretation, the committee itself would choose its chairman from among its members without reference to his nationality.

Both precedents are not only fair, but demanded by both the theories and realities of the situation.

Mr. Secretary, I cannot too strongly call your attention to the most embarrassing if not, indeed, humiliating position in which I would find myself were your office to proceed and make the studies to which the letter of the President refers, in utter disregard of the rights and duties of the Government of the Commonwealth to take part, on equal terms, in the responsibility of finding the best means to put the Philippines on their feet after victory shall have been won. This matter, as I remember, was informally discussed between you and me in your office not long after my arrival in Washington, and I was under the impression that your plan, which you then told me you would submit to the President, contemplated just the suggestion that I am making in this letter.

As to the financial situation of the Philippine Government, I myself am not at present fully informed of all the facts in the case. I have asked the Auditor General of the Philippines, Mr. Hernandez, who fortunately was in the United States when the war broke out, that he prepares this financial report, but he has been unable to do so because some information are in the office of the United States High Commissioner, and not in our possession. I am referring to the amount of our currency delivered to the said High Commissioner which we have not been informed whether they had been destroyed in Corregidor or not. The Government of the Commonwealth has been so much ignored in this respect that we do not even have an official notification of what has become of the gold bullion that we sent to America.

I hope and request that you help me secure the information referred to do so that I may be able to give you a statement of the financial situation of the Government of the Commonwealth.

With assurances of my high esteem and warm personal regards, I am, my dear Mr. Secretary

Very faithfully yours,

Dear Sirs:

I am extremely happy to receive the book “Chorus for America” which you were thoughtful enough to send me. The publication of this book at this time is a great contribution to the noble cause for which the United Nations are fighting, and I hope it will portray before the American people in words so deeply felt and highly inspired what the blood shed in Bataan and Corregidor by the Filipinos has so heroically proclaimed to the wide world – the wisdom and justice of the policy which America has followed towards the people of the Philippines.

With grateful appreciation of your kindness, I am, dear sir,

Letter of President Quezon to US President Franklin D. Roosevelt, December 11, 1942

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To US President Franklin D. Roosevelt

[Released on December 11, 1942]

My dear Mr. President:

From our past conversations, I am sure you and I agree that, in the profoundest sense of the word, the Philippines became independent on the day when — of their own free will — the whole Filipino people sprang to the side of their American comrades to fight the Japanese invaders. For this reason, only the formal proclamation of our independence remains to be issued.

Naturally, the Filipino people feel that this proclamation, for which we have worked and planned through forty years, cannot come too soon. Even the fact that our country is in the hands of the enemy has not changed this feeling.

The Proclamation of Philippine Independence at this time would immeasurably hearten the Filipino people in their heroic resistance to the Japanese invaders, and give new strength to their faith in the United States — a faith which the Japanese are trying day and night to shatter by every conceivable means.

There is only one cause the service of which I believe the Filipino people would be willing to place above the cause of Philippine independence. That cause is victory for all the United Nations in the name of the Four Freedoms. If the achievement of that victory could be accelerated by delaying this proclamation, I am sure that the Filipino people would willingly curb the agency of their claim.

There is a way, however, whereby both the cause of the United Nations and the desire of the Filipino people for full independence may be served by a planned move in the grand strategy of the war. This can be done by making the Proclamation of Philippine Independence the great opening salvo of the coming United Nations offensive in the Far East.

We both know that psychological warfare is at least as effective in gaining real victories as military warfare, particularly when the two are linked in one master integrated strategy. The Proclamation of Philippine Independence would be the greatest blow that could be struck in opening the Battle for the Far East. It would completely destroy the effectiveness of Japanese propaganda in that area and, at the same time, raise a banner of hope and courage around which the peoples of the enemy-occupied territories would rally to the cause of the United Nations.

The Proclamation would thus become a symbol, not only of the good faith of the United States, but even more important, an earnest of the United Nations' pledge to fight the war and win the peace in the name of the Four Freedoms. The Proclamation would be a pledge of freedom redeemed — an advance barrage to clear the way for the armed forces of the United Nations.

To you, the day of that Proclamation would be a ripe occasion on which to give to the world a clear and powerful statement of America's high resolve — "freedom for all peoples, everywhere in the world."

I look forward to an early discussion of this proposal with you. At the same time, I should like to discuss with you the measures to be taken to implement your recommendation that relations between the Commonwealth and the United States be handled by your Department of State.

Faithfully yours,

Letter of President Quezon to General Douglas MacArthur, January 6, 1943

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To General Douglas MacArthur

[Sent from Washington, D. C., January 6, 1943]

My dear General MacArthur:

At last I can write you a letter with the certainty that it will go to your hands without the whole world reading it first. Not that I consider censorship in time of war unnecessary or unjustified, but I think that in the case of the President of the Philippines writing to the Supreme Commander of the United Nations' Armed Forces in the Southern Pacific, the letter may be permitted to go through without being opened by clerks in the censor's office, and when I saw that correspondence coming from your headquarters addressed to me had been opened, I just made up my mind that I would not write you until I could be sure that you and you alone would read my letter.

It has been a painful thing not to write you or hear from you except by radio, and even this means of communication has failed me more than once, for on three occasions I did not receive answer to my cables sent to you through the Western Union, the last being my Christmas greetings. That is that.

The first thing I want to say is that all of us – I am referring not only to my family, but also to members of my Cabinet and all the officials who came with me from Corregidor – all of us, I say, think of you, your wife and the boy, and the members of your staff frequently. Everyone will never forget how kind and almost fatherly you have been to all. The services you have rendered us are engraved in our hearts.

When I arrived in Washington, I did find people who were either jealous of your achievements or suspicious of your future plans. But from the day of my arrival I tried to make clear to everyone whom I talked to that you had nothing in mind except to win the war and particularly, to drive the Japs out of the Philippines. I believe that the President of the United States, the Secretary of War and General Marshall have every confidence in you and give you full credit for what you have done. This became more evident to me when, after reading the article written by Admiral Hart, in conversation with Secretary Stimson and General Marshall, I expressed my indignation that such an article should have been permitted to appear publicly and both Secretary Stimson and General Marshall fully agreed with my criticisms of the article, the Secretary speaking his feelings on the matter in no uncertain terms.

Now as to the one thing in which you and I are more interested in anything else. I must confess that soon after my arrival here I came to the conclusion that no matter what I did could change, in the least, the plans that had already been agreed upon between the United States and Great Britain long before we left the Philippines. They evidently went upon destroying Germany first, and only such force, on land, sea or air, that they feel they can spare from that theater of war they were willing to send to the Pacific. I must admit that in making such decision, this government seems to be convinced that it was the surest way of defeating the Axis. Not being a soldier, and not knowing all the facts in the case, I decided that the best course for me to take was to say nothing in public, although whenever I see the President, Secretary Stimson, General Marshall, Secretary Knox or Admiral King, I always remind them that in the Philippines alone has the American flag been assailed and that the loyalty of the Filipinos deserves some recognition in the form of early deliverance from the enemy.

You must have noticed that I kept my mouth pretty closed – as you have advised me to do.

This noon I am having luncheon with Secretary Stimson. I am going to insist that he gives me a more definite information as to their plans. He told me the other day that he only wants to live long enough to see the Philippines reconquered.

When Captain Philips left for Australia, I gave him some messages for you, but I did not dare to give him anything in writing.

Chic Parsons on the other hand, who is taking this letter, is a man of my absolute confidence. He has been my liaison officer with the Navy and I was very happy when I learned that you had sent for him. Attached herewith you will find my telegram to Admiral King on the subject.

Of course, you know what is best to do without my having to tell anything. Nevertheless, you will excuse me if I take the liberty of making some suggestions hereon. I see no use of encouraging our people in the Islands to carry on at this time the guerrilla warfare or to engage in sabotage. Useless sacrifice of more Filipino lives and destruction of property is all that can be accomplished; and what is still worse, such a policy will have the effect of keeping the Japanese alert. I think our people should be quiet for the time being and wait until the moment of our defensive. Then they should go to the limit. Their main effort now should be directed to get for us all the necessary information that will be of use when we do strike.

You couldn't have gotten a better man to send there than Chick. As you know, he is not only a very able man, but he enjoys the confidence of everybody that counts amongst our people. He is, of course, running a tremendous risk, but he was the happiest man on earth when he learned that you wanted to make use of him.

Not long ago, I sent you a telegram through the War Department requesting that you try to get Roxas out of Mindanao. I reiterate that request. To me it is of the utmost Importance to save Roxas and bring him to the United States. Of course, if he is alive I have no doubt that he is doing a fine work wherever he may be, but I cannot conceive that he can do anything nearly as important as what he could do in the United States at this time. When the time comes for our return, we would, of course, take him along.

Please, General, find Roxas. He is needed by the Filipino people in the years to come.

Another request that I want to make is that you send Villamor to the United States. Many Americans who have distinguished themselves in the Philippines have been sent to America. Villamor would advertise the Philippines and remind the American people of Bataan. Then he should be given the opportunity of learning more about aviation.

Speaking of publicity, I have not been able to carry out my plans about Romulo because after I had secured your consent and his release by the War Department, I learned that he had committed himself to giving lectures on pay basis. Of course, under the Civil Service rules of the Philippines, this made it impossible for me to keep him in the active service of the Commonwealth while he is thus engaged; and since his lectures give him better pecuniary return than his government service, and since it was also his preference to go on with the lectures, much as I regretted it, I had to dispense with his services. When I telegraphed you, he had merely told me that he was committed to write an article for the Saturday Evening Post and I had given him permission for that; but when he also told me of the lectures it became impossible to go through with my plans. About Romulo's book, I had him strike out a few sentences which, although complimentary to me, were not very accurate. The book is a great success. Its second edition is already out. As you will see, it does you justice.

As for my book, I have been so sick all these months that it has been physically impossible for me to finish it. My blood pressure went up as high as 200 and it is only during the last month that it has been going down a little. But just as my blood pressure was improving, I contracted a chronic bronchitis which at times kept me for two or three days not only in bed but unable to speak. Now I am much better. Aurora, fifteen days before Christmas, had to go to Johns Hopkins Hospital and submit to a minor operation, but thanks God she is over it now.

I am considering going to Arizona to spend Winter there and see if I can improve my health.

I am just back from my luncheon with Secretary Stimson. He has been speaking very highly of you and of what you are doing in New Guinea. He says that while there is not going to be a weakening of the fight in Europe, you will be more and more in a position to make your offensive more effective that it has been so far.

I don't have to tell you that my feelings – our feelings – for you are stronger every day. We miss you all and are only living to see the day when we may be all together again.

Love to Mrs. MacArthur, the boy and my best regards to everybody.

Yours as ever,

[Sent on January 19, 1943]

My dear Mr. Secretary:

I acknowledge with thanks receipt of your letter of January 12, transmitting to me the text of a declaration by the Government of the United States and certain others of the United Nations, dealing with forced transfers of property in the territories which have come under the occupation or control of the enemy.

The Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines adheres to this declaration and in so doing records its complete solidarity with the other United Nations.

Sincerely yours,

Letter of President Quezon to General MacArthur regarding the war updates

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To General Douglas MacArthur regarding the war updates

[Released at the Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D.C., March 4, 1943]

My dear General:

I am sending you inclosed herewith the manuscript of my address which was shortwaved to the Philippines on the 20th of this month — the date when, last year, I left Corregidor for the Visayan provinces.

Ever since Premier Tojo made the statement at the Diet when we were still in Corregidor, that Japan was ready to grant independence to the Philippines, I have been haunted by the fear that the Filipino masses might take it at face value if Japan made good Tojo's promise. Hence, my thought has been directed at finding means of beating Japan to it. At first, I thought of asking the President to recommend to Congress the passage of a joint resolution declaring the immediate independence of the Philippines; but as the new policy of President Roosevelt step by step was unfolded, I came to the conclusion that no Congressional action was required, for the President has, in fact, recognized the Philippines as an independent nation. Therefore when, at the last session of the Diet, Tojo reiterated again his statement that Japan is ready "to give the Philippines independence with honor", I decided to inform my people of this fact, and the President, after reading the address, gave it his official sanction.

Not knowing whether the Filipinos hear our broadcasts, may I request you to instruct the commanders of the guerrillas to disseminate among them, including those who have accepted office from the Japanese, the contents of the speech.

Of course, I never had any misgivings as to the effect that Tojo's promise would have upon the upper and middle classes of the Filipinos; for these people are informed of what Japan has done in Korea, Manchuria, Thailand, and China, and therefore, they know what sort of independence Japan would give them even if she did. But in the case of the masses who know very little of what is going on outside the Philippines, the situation is different. Although our masses, according to my information even while I was still in the Visayan provinces, have been resentful of the treatment that they receive from the Japanese, I was afraid of the effect on them if Japan went ahead and granted Philippine independence. I pray that this danger has been definitely averted with my speech.

The War Department has been good enough to inform me of the reports that you have been receiving from commanders of the guerrillas, including Prager, Peralta and Fertig, as well as from officers like Captain Osborne and Captain Gause, and other civilian Americans who have escaped from the Philippines long after the surrender of Bataan and Corregidor. The impression that I got from these reports is that my people, as a whole, remain loyal to the United States despite what may appear to them as the inability or lack of interest of this government to come to their rescue. In the face of Japanese propaganda persistently carried out to convince them that Japan is the savior of the oriental peoples against Anglo-American imperialism, their unshaken faith in America is nothing short of marvelous.

I know that no one is more interested than you to keep unimpaired that loyalty. Knowing this, I herein take the liberty of offering some suggestions which I hope you will accept in the spirit they are made. I beg you not to think that I am meddling in matters that are under your responsibility.

I gather from the reports to which I have referred above that some of our guerrillas are committing the same mistakes or abuses that were committed by our guerrillas during the fight against the Spaniards and later against the Americans. They are looting and maltreating, and, in some cases, killing Filipinos whom they suspect to be pro-Japanese. From every point of view that is wrong; moreover, it may be of serious consequences.

In the case of Peralta, he has even gone to the extent of criticizing me for not denouncing Vargas and his colleagues. The insolence of this man in attempting to give me a lecture regarding the history of the revolution in which I took part while he was still unborn or a baby, and on the psychology of the Filipino people, would be laughable if it did not betray his utter unfitness for the role that he is aspiring to play in the guerrilla warfare in the Philippines.

Not as an answer to Peralta, but only to make crystal clear my stand in this respect, I wish to remind you that even while we were in Corregidor, at a time when a policy of threat or condemnation might have had more effect than now, I have studiously avoided saying anything that might give Vargas and the rest of the Filipinos who have accepted positions under the Japanese Military Administration, the impression that I have lost faith in them. The reason for my attitude is that I knew, and have not changed my opinion, that the Filipino can best be won by showing him confidence rather than distrust. Indeed, if threat and punishment would make a Filipino loyal, the whole country would now be pro-Japanese. In other words, I am of the opinion that if we want to keep the Filipinos on our side, the commanders of the guerrillas must refrain from persecuting those who seem to be cooperating with Japan, unless they help the Japanese to discover the places where our guerrillas are hiding or kill our men. Prager's report shows that even our Constabulary and Philippine Army soldiers who are now serving in the Japanese organized police force are, in fact, loyal to us.

I also think that our guerrillas should devote themselves more to the securing of information about the number and location of the Japanese forces, and to the organization of their forces than to actual guerrilla warfare. If there was no hope of the United States ever reconquering the Islands, then I would say that the Filipinos should sacrifice their lives and their all rather than ignominiously accept Japanese rule. But knowing as we do that the redemption of the Philippines will surely come, no matter how long it may take, it is not only a useless sacrifice of life and property to have our guerrillas active before we are ready to help them, but it is really to our interest to conserve them for the final strike.

Although I felt that the trip of Villamor to the United States would have been profitable both to himself and to the Philippines, I was really glad to learn that you had sent him home. He has become a national hero among the Filipinos and his influence both among the guerrillas and civilian population will be great. I hope his wisdom is as great as his courage. It would also be a good thing, I believe, if you could send Chick Parsons to the Islands. We need men there who can give our people assurance of the determination of the United States to redeem them from the invader.

The news that Roxas has fallen into the hands of the enemy is the worst news I can receive from the Philippines. I am afraid that after his insistent refusal to be President, the Japanese have murdered him. If so, he is the greatest loss that the Filipino people have suffered in this war. He can't be replaced. I regret more than I can say that I did not order him to come with me to Australia. But he insisted that he felt it his duty to remain in the Philippines, and in the belief that Mindanao would never surrender, I let him stay. Oh! I am proud of him! He will go down in history as one of our greatest national heroes.

Please remember me to my old comrades in Corregidor, and with love to you, Mrs. MacArthur and Arthur, in which Aurora and the children join, I am, as ever

Faithfully yours,

Letter of President Quezon to General Douglas MacArthur on his affirmation of continuous support, May 2, 1943

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To General Douglas MacArthur on his affirmation of continuous support

[Released on May 2, 1943]

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

My dear General MacArthur:

I thank you deeply for authorizing the trip of Dr. Cruz. I wanted him to deliver this letter to you in person and then, if you approve, to do some errands for me in the Philippines.

General Sutherland must have told you already that when he arrived here I was about to leave for Miami. It was the first and only time that I was able to make definite plans for a much needed rest, and my doctor wouldn't let me postpone it. My blood pressure had gone up to 200. While I was still in Florida, General Sutherland left, and therefore, I do not know even today exactly what has been the outcome of his mission.

This much I do know. His trip has not been in vain. It has made the American people realize fully that you are not getting the men and materiel that you need, and there seems to be now a strong public pressure demanding an early offensive war against Japan. How long this active interest in the Pacific War will last, and whether it will have a positive effect, I cannot say. Whatever the outcome, it is certain that you have gone up still more in the estimation of your countrymen. The Battle of the Bismark Sea has shown beyond question to the American people what you could do if you had the means. Your wonderful statement on the fall of Bataan has stirred the heart of every American as nothing else could have done. Every newspaper in the United States, big and small alike, printed in full your statement, and they published editorials deprecating the helpless situation in which you had been placed then, and in which you find yourself now. Moreover, a number of Senators and Representatives are making speeches in Congress and outside, as well as over the radio, urging action against Japan. On my part, I am doing all I can. But to be absolutely honest and frank with you, I am not hopeful. In fact, I am desperate. I believe that the plan for defeating Hitler first will not be changed, and knowing nothing about the so-called "global strategy" (a phrase coined by Churchill), my lay opinion is that this means, in plain language, that the war in the Pacific will last so long that I will not live long enough to see my country again.

It is for this reason that I am now very reluctant to continue in office beyond the 30th of next December.

General Sutherland told me what you thought about this matter-not with any detail. He just said that you felt I should remain in my present position, and that there are two or three ways of doing it. He did not elaborate on this. As it has been my policy since the war broke out to follow your advice, I expressed my willingness to accede to your wishes. But I told him even then that I would not lift my hand to bring it about. At that time I was under the impression that Gen. Sutherland's mission would achieve its purpose, or that I could be of positive help. Since this does not seem to be the case, I see no use in my remaining in office.

Here are my reasons:

Everything that I can do in so far as the political status of the Philippines is concerned has already been done, and all that I can accomplish at this time in that respect has practically been accomplished. But what my people need most at this time is their early liberation from the clutches of a cruel enemy. And I am satisfied that I cannot be of any help to them in this respect. Even if I were physically in condition to travel all over the United States and campaign day and night for an early offensive war against Japan, and if, at the same time, I were to write articles for all the newspapers and magazines, I know that I would not be able to change the so-called "global strategy". I have expressed my views to those who have the power to make final decisions as frankly and as forcefully as I can – the President, the Secretary of War, General Marshall, and others. They all listen to me with apparent sympathy, but that is all. What then is the use of my holding the title of President of the Philippines when I know that I am impotent to hasten the day of the liberation of the Philippines?

I have never been very sure that I was right in going with you to Corregidor and leaving my people. I have always believed, as you know, that I should have shared their fate, whatever that may be, regardless of hardships or death. I abided by your decision – first, to go to Corregidor, and then to follow you to Australia. All our hopes, yours and mine, that we would receive help in time while we were in Corregidor, and later, that you would be able to start from Australia an early offensive against Japan — all these hopes have been frustrated. Only one thing remains and stands clearly now in the eyes of my people as a result of my leaving them – that I am safe and free in Washington while they are suffering and in slavery. What a terrible situation to be in! My anguish, my moral torments, are worse than the physical sufferings in a prison camp! If I were in a prison camp I would have had the opportunity of defying Japan and doing honor to my country and to myself. From here, how easy it is to defy Japan and to advise my people to keep faith!

Dr. Evatt came and called on me. We had a very frank heart-to-heart talk. He has done well. He has helped greatly to arouse public opinion in favor of the Pacific War. He has accomplished more than Madame Chiang Kai-shek. He is a great admirer of yours. But here again, I must say that I don't believe the "global strategy" will be affected by his visit in any substantial way. I am giving a dinner in his honor to which I have invited some of my friends in the Senate and the House.

Roy is for the Pacific War.

Now as to the trip of Dr. Cruz to the Philippines. I earnestly request you to send him to any of the Islands. I want him to go to Manila and contact George and the men around him, as well as other friends of mine, and Aurora's sister. The news that we got from Japanese broadcasts and some of the reports sent to you by the guerrilla commanders that are transmitted to me by the War Department do not give me a comprehensive picture of the situation in the Philippines. I must have someone who can contact directly the people who, regardless of whether they have decided that it is to the interest of the Filipino people to cooperate with Japan under the present circumstances, I know are sufficiently loyal to me to tell me the whole truth. Dr. Cruz can do this. He is known only in his home town of Arayat where, if you will remember, Aurora had her farm. He is known, however, by my close friends. Dr. Cruz can make the trip to Manila with relative safety once he has been dropped in any of the Islands. He will manage it.

Since I assume that it will be very difficult for Dr. Cruz to come back and, in any event, it would take too long a time, I wish you would give him the necessary authority so that he may send to you for transmittal to me through any one of the commanders of the guerrillas, radiograms giving me the information that I require. He does not have to have the code. He can deliver his messages in plain language to the guerrilla commander, and he in turn can transmit them to you coded. I have given him, however, a special code to be used to identify the person or persons whom he has contacted. I am sending you a copy of this code so that when you receive the message you may know who these persons are. I don't think that Dr. Cruz should give these names to the commander of the guerrilla who will receive the message from him.

I have another person who could have done this job for me better than Dr. Cruz, and this person is Lieut. Col. Velasquez. I do not know what you think of him, but I have watched him closely for two years, and I have absolute confidence not only in his loyalty, but in his integrity and ability. Unlike Cruz, who is not endowed with unusual mental ingenuity, Velasquez has enough brains to do what he thinks is necessary for me to get the picture that I want. He knows not only Luzon (he is from Bulacan), but also Visayas and Mindanao, and he speaks besides Tagalog, the Visayan. I therefore consider his presence in the Philippines even more important than the presence of Cruz; but I did not request you to authorize his trip because he is no longer in my service. He is now an officer of the US Army, and detailed to one of the Filipino Regiments in command of a battalion. This has been done upon his request, because he wants to go back and fight whenever these Filipino regiments are sent to the front. I would consider it a great personal favor to me if you would find your way clear to request his detail to your command and then send him to the Philippines.

Time is getting short. I want to know what is going on in my country before I retire to private life. And I want them to know what is going on here – that they have not been forgotten and that victory is certain to come. I want them to have patience and forbearance and faith. I also want to know what they think of me – of my having left them. My dear General, in the name of our long friendship do me this favor – send Cruz and Velasquez to the Philippines. After Velasquez has done what I want him to do, you could order him to join any of the guerrillas if you find it convenient, or assign him to perform such other duties as you may wish.

There is one man here whose only ambition is to be under your command – General Fellers. As you know, he is very loyal to you and to the Philippines, and his heart is in your theatre of war. You will make him very happy, and me too, if you would request that he be detailed to your command. He is now in the office of General Donovan, an office which, for several reasons, is not doing or cannot do much. By the way, I wonder if General Sutherland had occasion to see a confidential document which Donovan showed me. I was startled when I read it. It was written either in December or January; certainly not later than the first week of February 1942, and it expresses similar if not identical views to those that you have expressed yourself regarding the need of immediate help to the beleaguered forces in Bataan and Corregidor.

Perhaps it may become necessary for me to send Mike Elizalde to Australia next summer so as to inform you of my future plans, and in order, too, that you may apprise him fully of what you know to be the situation in the Philippines. In any event, I should like to know, if and when I feel that Mike should make the trip, you will authorize it. He would of course go there in his capacity as Resident Commissioner and not as a reserve officer of the Philippine Army.

Please notify me through the War Department of Major Cruz' arrival there, his departure for the Philippines, and his arrival in any of the Islands.

I am sending you a copy of the memorandum that I have given to Dr. Cruz. Please read it, and if there is anything therein that you disapprove of, just tell Cruz to forget it.

Love to you, Mrs. MacArthur, and Arthur, in which Aurora and the children join, and please give my warm regards to the old gang.

As ever

Devotedly yours,

Letter of President Quezon to Frederick Marquardt, May 13, 1943

Letter
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
To Frederick Marquardt

[Sent on May 13, 1943]

The Shoreham Hotel
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Marquardt:

I have not heard from you yet and for this reason I hesitate to offer the following unsolicited observations; but I am so impressed from reading your book that you want to be fair and accurate that I feel these observations will not be unwelcomed.

Let me say in the first place that I wish I had known when we were in Manila what you thought and how you felt about the Filipino people and their right to be a self-governing nation. Your book is really a revelation to me.

1. On page 19 you speak of Ramon Avanceña as having gone with Rogers and me to St. Petersburg. This is not correct. Avanceña traveled with us to Japan. The third member of the party was Teodoro Kalaw.
2. On page 29 you said that Stimson wanted the land laws liberalized. This is not exactly the fact. All that he recommended was the amendment to which you refer or, page 30, and which he got.
3. On page 48 you give Governor Roosevelt and Hester all the credit for not closing the banks during the panic in the United States. Of course the Governor General had the final responsibility for the action taken, but since you mention Hester I thought I would tell you that we had two meetings with the assistance of all the managers of the banks. The manager of the National City Bank recommended that the banks be closed and I objected upon the ground that all the banks in Manila at that time were in sound financial condition, that the Filipinos had confidence in the banks and that it was therefore very improbable that there would be any panic; that on the other hand, if the banks were closed it was likely that when they were reopened the people in the provinces would withdraw their money from the banks and would not put it back again; that it took some time for us to induce the farmers to put their savings in the bank and the work in this respect would be lost. All the other bank managers were opposed to the closing of their respective banks. Roxas and Miguel Unson took the same stand as I did. However, it is not important one way or another.
4. On page 51 it is not a fact that the indeterminate-sentence and adult probation laws have been repealed after Murphy left. They were only amended, as experience proved that they should be amended.
5. On pages 53 and 54 what you say about Murphy's "riskless resignation" and Americans and Filipinos alike having lambasted him after he left is not true as far as the Filipinos were concerned; nor that the Filipino politicians who had been closest to him expressed fear that he might return to Manila. I don't know how many Filipinos have expressed those opinions to you, but I am sure that that was not the feeling on the part of the Filipinos as a whole or of the members of my party in the legislature. As a matter of fact, we were sorry that Governor Murphy presented his candidacy, but we were glad that in so doing he did not resign, for had he been defeated, he could have been sent back to the Philippines which was what we wanted, you will understand that during that period of organization of the Commonwealth, we preferred a man whom we knew, with whom we had gotten along well, and who was very friendly to the Filipino people in every respect. For this reason, we felt that he would have been of inestimable value to us, at least during the first years of the Commonwealth. Even when Sayre was already in Manila we still wanted Murphy back.

I would not undertake to call your attention to this fact and request you, as I hereby do, to change that part of your book if I did not see that you, rightly, think well of Murphy. I am sure it would make him very unhappy if he thought that the Filipinos felt as you say they did after he had left. It is not quite fair either to him or to the Filipinos the statement that you make.

7. On pages 55 and 56 I just want to call your attention to the fact that when President Roosevelt recommended the amendment of the Independence Act, he not only recommended the elimination of the military provisions of the law to which I have specifically and strenuously objected, but he also stated in his message to Congress that such injustices and Inequalities as may later be found in the law could be remedied.
8. On page 61 you speak of McNutt's use of the oil excise tax fund as a means of persuading me to call on him first. I have never questioned the fact that the High Commissioner, although having the same rank as the President of the Philippines, was nevertheless the Senior because he was the representative of the President. The question of possible misunderstanding between High Commissioner McNutt and me was raised by the newspapers when McNutt, while I was absent from the Philippines, ordered that the High Commissioner should be toasted before the President of the Philippines. I was then in New York and upon being approached by newspaper reporters, I dismissed the "whole business by merely saying that I never refuse to take a drink whenever I had a chance, regardless of the order of the toast; which answer, I was happy to see, had the desired effect. When I arrived in Manila I simply called on McNutt without further ado.
9. On page 62 you refer to Sayre's trip to Corregidor after I "had moved an skeleton Commonwealth Government;" which seems to suggest that I moved, to Corregidor ahead of Sayre. Such was not the case, for we went aboard the same boat — "The Mayon" — and it may be of interest to you to know that while Sayre was glad to go to Corregidor, my preference was to remain with my people. McArthur had to do a lot of arguing with me before I yielded to his wishes.
10. On page 66 you seem to have the idea that I was unwilling to organize the civilian defense upon the theory that that was the responsibility of the Government of the United States, and, impliedly, of Commissioner Sayre. This is one of those stories that were printed in this country without the slightest foundation in fact. I did have a very serious friction with Sayre, but for the opposite reason. Soon after the enactment of the Emergency Powers Act early in the summer of 1940, I got ready to make use of those powers and organize the civilian defense; but Sayre, echoing the protest of the Civil Liberties Union in the Philippines and its counterpart in the United States, telegraphed President Roosevelt recommending that I be restrained by the President from making use of those powers upon the theory that the Act made me in fact Dictator of the Philippines. Before I could start, doing anything, Sayre told me that there was a confidential radiogram from the President received by him cautioning me against the use of these powers. I never saw the radiogram except what Sayre claimed to be its purport. I was indignant and told Sayre that we were taking very serious risks in not getting ready, but since the President had the final say on the matter there was nothing I could do but abide by his decision. "You may assure the President" I said to Sayre, "that I shall not make use of these powers until you, in your capacity as High Commissioner, request me to do it." Of course I could not state publicly what had happened, and that is why when at the press conference to which you refer on page 66, I was asked what preparations were being made against the possibility of an air attack, I gave that silly answer. But the truth of the matter is that I had been very seriously concerned about the possibility of an armed conflict between the United States and Japan early in 1940, and for this reason I recommended to the National Assembly the enactment of the Emergency Powers Act. Let me add that it was not in a moment of "hysteria" that I made that public statement in the University Campus that bombs might be dropped. I was then certain that the war between the United States and Japan was inevitable and that the Philippines would be the first victim. So regardless of how the President of the United States and Mr. Sayre might feel, I deemed it my unavoidable duty to explain then why I did not make use of the Emergency Powers Act in due time. I use the words "in due time" advisedly because I did make use of the Emergency Powers Act when, at last, Sayre himself, at the instance of General Grunert, requested me to organize the civilian defense. But it was too late for this happened only seven months before Japan struck.

I did contend that the military defense of the Philippines was the primary responsibility of the United States, and for this reason, at the time that I was recommending to the National Assembly the enactment of the Emergency Powers Act, I was requesting Sayre to join me in urging President Roosevelt to provide the Philippines with the necessary means for its military defense. All to no avail. However, even in the case of the military defense, I informed the President of the United States that he could count upon all the resources of the country in man and material.

In just to myself, I hope you may see your way clear to correct the misstatement that you make about my attitude about the civilian defense of the Philippines.

The story about the “exposition” on page 68 reads well and you may let it stand, but for your information I want to tell you that I did not agree with the report, much less did I say that the arguments were unanswerable. In fact I did answer them in my conference with the members of the committee. But this is neither here nor there.

Before closing, I want to compliment you on the book. I think it is a find presentation of the work done by the United States in the Philippines and it explains Bataan better than anything so far published has done it.

Very sincerely yours,

MANUEL L. QUEZON

P.S.

I forgot to call your attention to your statement that I surrendered to Squire. This is not true. I surrendered to Lieut. Miller, the commander of the garrison in Mariveles. Squire happened to be outside of the town of Mariveles taking pictures at the foot of the mountain when I came out from the “bosque” on my way to the town of Mariveles, and indeed he was little scarred because I had some soldiers with me; but he soon found that I was going to place myself in the hands of the commander of the American garrison. I allowed that fable of Squire to go on, but your book is history.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I have again broken down. My doctor tells me that I will need several months of complete rest.

The Vice President is also ill in the Doctor's Hospital. As soon as his health is restored, he will act for me with full powers. Meantime, please communicate with Commissioner Elizalde on such matters as may require immediate attention.

In order not to delay the work on Philippine Rehabilitation, I have instructed Commissioner Elizalde to proceed with the discussions with Under Secretary Fortas and try to get an agreement with him.

Letter of President Quezon to General MacArthur on His Instructions, October 10, 1943

TO: GENERAL MACARTHUR

FROM: PRESIDENT QUEZON

8998 TENTH OCT 43

Even though since May I have been and still am in my sick bed I am personally attending to all important matters affecting the Philippines and in particular the details of the Bill. (Eyes only Quezon to MacArthur WDGBI Strong) I took active personal part in discussion of President's message at a meeting held in my apartment at the Shoreham. You may rest assured that legislation covering economic rehabilitation will appropriate definite amounts of money since study of this matter was made months ago by committee appointed by me composed of competent persons, including A. D. Williams the Auditor General and others in consultation with U.S. officials. The matter of post-war economy will be practically trade relations as before the war to last indefinitely as may be necessary to insure Philippine economic stability. National security will include U.S. Naval and air bases as I will propose. This is left to negotiations between myself and the President of U.S. and at proper time I shall need your advice.

Don't send Villamor back if he is needed in Philippines. Yesterday Parsons' report arrived which gives sufficient information. If Cruz in free area stop him for same reason and use or return to me as you think best. His loss could be terrible blow.

I wish to confer on guerilla leaders and their men decorations according Parsons' recommendations also I wish to decorate Parsons but before acting I request your views.

If you approve please send all Currency Committees, Paymasters and Disbursing Officers, Guerrilla Commanders, Provincial Governors and Treasurers following: "I authorize payment of sum equaling two months pay to all fighting forces Filipinos, Americans or others from highest ranking officers to lowest private in addition to pay for month of December. This additional amount to be disbursed and paid before Christmas. I authorize same for all civilian employees in sum equivalent salary to one months salary. Families in real distress living in free areas will be given five pesos for husband and wife and one peso for each minor child. To determine who entitled to this relief I appoint committees composed of Guerrilla Commander, Governor and Provincial Treasurer. Signed Manuel L. For the eyes of General MacArthur only

I see in the Summary of Economic and Political Information covering the period from September 13 to December 31, the following:

“In late September, Bohol requested that the 1,000,000 pesos authorized by President Quezon be doubled. Leyte also requested additional funds. Early in December, the Commander, 10th Military District suggested that he be authorized to supply Leyte and Bohol with emergency currency at their request, thus eliminating two issues of emergency notes. Such supply was authorized by this Headquarters provided delivery be made to the Emergency Control Committee of each province and that the amount does not exceed that specifically authorized by the Commonwealth Government to be printed by such committees.”

Since I authorized the Emergency Currency Board of Leyte and Bohol to issue emergency currency funds for the need of the Army and civil government in those provinces, and I have not authorized the Emergency Committee of Mindanao to supply funds to Leyte and Bohol, am I to understand that your headquarters has assumed the power to give the authority to military district commanders to get funds from the currency boards in their districts not only for their own military command but also for the needs of guerrillas and civil governments in other provinces? If so this would also imply that your headquarters has assumed the power to authorize currency boards created by me for specified areas to issue emergency notes for other areas.

What is the meaning of the words “the currency situation in Samar was ‘out of control’?”.

PASS TO CONFESOR.

Letter which follows is from President Roosevelt.

My Dear Mister President:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 23rd, 1944, relative to the appeal for assistance you received from the Governor of Panay, Tomas Confesor. Governor Confesor's refusal to surrender to the Japanese has gained for him the admiration and respect of all who are aware of the distressing situation in which he has been placed. I agree with you that his letter to Mister Caram holding that adherence to the high principles involved is dearer than life itself is a remarkable document and I am sure that it reflects the views of the Filipino people. I shall be grateful to you if you will transmit to Governor Confesor our appreciation of his loyalty and of his devotion to the cause for which we are fighting. You may say to him also that we are confident that he will be able to continue his successful resistance until the military situation is sufficiently advanced to permit not only his rescue but the liberation of the Filipino people. Both you and he may rest assured that although it is not possible to predict the exact date the destruction of the Japanese empire is certain.

My dear Mr. President:

May I be allowed to make of record certain facts pertinent to the passage by the Congress of the United States of S.J. Resolution 93 which I believe vital to the mutual interests of our two peoples.

When the American people, through its leaders, recognized Philippine loyalty to the United States in the present war against Japan, and you and the members of your government honored me with the reception at Union Station when I first arrived in Washington from Corregidor, a recognition that was subsequently by other official acts such as the admission of the Philippines as a member of the United Nations and my having been accorded a seat in the Pacific War Council, I thought of asking you and the Congress that the immediate independence of the Philippines be granted. In this connection, in June last year, I asked my good friend, Secretary Stimson, to convey to you my wishes on the matter and. requested Senator Tydings to draft a bill along these lines.

For reasons that I need not dwell upon at this time, immediate independence of the Philippines as I advocated could not be granted. On the other hand, S.J. Resolution 93 embodies the spirit of your administration of advancing the date of Philippine independence prior to July 4, 1946 as stated in Section 3 thereof. The military successes of American forces of recent days point to the possibility that the Japanese may be driven out of the Philippines before July 4, 1946 and, therefore, independence will be a fact for my people as contemplated in S.J. Resolution 93. However, may I request that upon attaching your signature to this resolution, it be made clear and definite by you that if for any unforeseen reason the Japanese are still in the Philippines on July 4, 1946, independence will be made effective on that date as provided for in the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

With expressions of gratitude of the Filipino people and my own for your continued interest in their welfare, I beg to remain.

Very faithfully yours,

PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

ADMINISTRATION OF PHILIPPINE ARMY CORPS

[Released to the Press, January 11, 1936]

Competent officers in adequate number, wholly devoted to the service of their country, constitute the most vitally essential element in modern warfare, and the only one that under no circumstances can be improvised.

An army can live on short rations, it can be insufficiently clothed and housed, it can even fight and frequently win when poorly armed and equipped, but in action it is doomed to destruction without the trained leadership of its officers. An efficient and sufficient corps of officers means the difference between victory and defeat. The production and maintenance of an officer corps of the highest efficiency and morale is a problem upon the satisfactory solution of which depends the success of our whole effort toward providing for the common security.

To develop an officer corps of this kind, it is necessary to induct annually into the military service young men of outstanding ability and character; to train them thoroughly and progressively; and, finally, to devise a system of promotion and of elimination that, while discovering and making the best possible use of patriotic talent, will also purge the army of ineptitude and inefficiency. This last measure, that is, the establishment of a sound promotion system, is the basic purpose of regulations to which I have just given my approval and are now being published to the service.

The true objective of a proper promotion system is not merely the aggrandizement of a few gifted individuals; it is the raising to a high level of the average efficiency of a whole corps. The problem is essentially collective and administrative rather than individualistic and personal.

Theoretically all promotion should be accomplished by selective process—that is, each and every vacancy in every grade should be filled by advancing the particular subordinate who has demonstrated his superiority in qualifications. But important difficulties arise when attempting to apply this theory practically. No Commander-in-Chief can be intimately acquainted with all the officers of an army that will be distributed from Northern Luzon to Southern Mindanao, and will be engaged in a multitude of diversified activities, ranging from the purchase and storage of food supplies to the study of highly specialized branches of food chemistry. Moreover, it is wholly impossible to devise any infallible system of evaluating ability that will permit higher authority to make distinctions on any such particularized basis. But the most serious objection to the selective method of promotion is that it frequently permits political or other extraneous influence to affect an officer's advancement. This is fatal to efficiency. Whenever an army becomes convinced that the promotion of an officer is done to the morale of the whole corps, and the military service is certain to be neglected in favor of political maneuvering. I am determined that nothing of this kind shall characterize the officer corps of the Philippine Army. The plan I have approved seeks only the good of the service, the development of the Army's efficiency, and fairness and justice to the individual.

The system is based upon a few simple principles. The first of these is that, other thing being equal, the officer of the longest service in each grade—that is, one with the greatest amount of experience—should logically be promoted whenever a vacancy occurs. The second principle is that each officer's qualifications for promotion, as depicted in his complete official record, should be passed upon by a board of disinterested and experienced soldiers who have nothing but the welfare of the country at heart. In providing for such judicial determination of qualifications, the Plan compels a continuous rotation of the board's membership so that personal prejudice may not adversely affect the fortunes of any officer in the service. The third principle is that whenever an officer becomes due for promotion and is found unqualified therefor, he should be immediately separated from the active list. Disgruntled and ineffective officers have no place in a virile and efficient army. Lastly, the plan recognizes the obligation of the Government to any individual who has served his country long and faithfully but whose efficiency has finally deteriorated, through no fault of his own, to the point where his separation from the service becomes desirable. In justice to him, the plan provides a small bonus or annuity that will help tide him over the adjustment period as he undertakes to find employment in other walks of life.

I am convinced that this plan will produce effective results. Its operation will have my personal and earnest supervision. Should it come to my attention that any officer is attempting to use political or any other type of non-military influence to secure his own advancement, I will spare no effort to effect his immediate separation from the service. On the other hand, I intend to use the full length of my office to protect, support and encourage every officer of merit who devotes his, full attention to his assigned duties. I will interest myself in his material welfare to the fullest extent compatible with fairness and justice to all other loyal and efficient officers.

[Released to the Press, January 11, 1936]

I have today designated Colonel Jose de los Reyes as Acting Chief of Staff with the rank of Brigadier-General for the Philippine Army. Colonel Reyes has retired from the Constabulary since the year 1930, and is now Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Bureau of Customs. He is the senior officer among all the living Constabulary native officers, and his record during all the years that he served in the Constabulary has been outstanding. His integrity and high character, his ability and devotion to duty is being recognized not only throughout the organization which he so faithfully and brilliantly served, but throughout the country as well. After hearing the opinion of General MacArthur, the military adviser of this Government, I have come to the conclusion that for the present this is the best appointment that can be made.

General Valdes is designated Assistant Chief of Staff with the rank of Brigadier-General of the line, and Colonel Francisco also Assistant Chief of Staff with the rank of Colonel. I have also considered appointing Colonel Santos as Assistant Chief of Staff, but due to the immediate necessity of transferring Bilibid Prison, I am for the time being retaining him as Director of the Bureau of Prisons, so that he may carry out this very important work for which he is especially fitted, although at the same time I am designating him to render services in the Headquarters of the General Staff under his present commission whenever his services may be required.

APPOINTING SECRETARY TEOFILO SISON AS MEMBER OF THE COURT OF APPEALS

[Released to the Press, February 5, 1936]

I am appointing Secretary Sison as one of the members of the Court of Appeals. This I am doing with deep regret. Secretary Sison has been one of the strongest members of my Cabinet and one of the best Secretaries of the Interior that the Philippine Government has ever had. Under him, the Department, despite the nature of its functions, has been free from evil political influences during his administration. However, after conferences with the Secretary of Justice and the Chief Justice and other members of the Supreme Court, I have come to the conclusion that is necessary to have in the Court of Appeals a man who, besides being a good lawyer and of unimpeachable integrity, is closely familiar with the Administrative Code and all the machinery of the Government, for there will be cases presented to the Court of Appeals which will require a thorough and expert knowledge of governmental affairs. Secretary Sison fully measures up to these requirements and I, therefore, felt that we have to dispense with the services of Secretary Sison in the Department of the Interior in the interest of the administration of Justice.

Statement: President Quezon upon denying report in the Bulletin that the American High Commissioner has turned thumbs down on proposal to float bonds in the Philippines for insular public works projects, August 3, 1936

PRESS STATEMENT

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

DENYING REPORT IN THE BULLETIN THAT THE AMERICAN HIGH COMMISSIONER HAS TURNED THUMBS DOWN ON PROPOSAL TO FLOAT BONDS IN THE PHILIPPINES FOR INSULAR PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS

[Released to the Press, August 3, 1936]

The news appearing in this morning's Bulletin to the effect that "the Office of the American High Commissioner has turned thumbs down on the proposal to float bonds in the Philippines for insular public works projects" is as false as it is mischievous.

Let it be clearly understood that no American official from the President of the United States down to the High Commissioner has any authority, powers, prerogatives or those granted in the Independence Law, commonly known as the Tydings-McDuffie Act. The President has no power under the said Independence Act, and much less the High Commissioner, to veto any law passed by the Philippine National Assembly. The President has the authority to suspend the taking effect of or the operation of any law, contracts, or to meet its bonded indebtedness and interest thereon or to provide for its sinking funds, "or which seems likely to impair the reserves for the protection of the currency of the Philippines, or which in his judgment will violate international obligations of the United States." In the case of bond issues, the Independence Act provides that "the public debt of the Philippines and its subordinate branches shall not exceed limits now or hereafter fixed by the Congress of the United States, and no loans shall be contracted in foreign countries without the approval of the President of the United States."

From the provisions of the Independence Act quoted above it will be seen: (a) that there is nothing in the law which requires the previous approval of the High Commissioner to any Act that the National Assembly may care to approve; (b) that the National Assembly is absolutely at liberty to issue bonds and sell them either in the Philippines or in the United States without any interference from the Government of the United States as long as it is within the limits imposed by the Congress to the total indebtedness of the Government of the Commonwealth, which is 10 per centum of the aggregate tax valuation of its property, and it provides for the appropriate sinking funds.

The total indebtedness of the Government of the Commonwealth is P131,450,000, against which there already exists in the National Treasury a sinking fund amounting to P49,474,000 and the maximum indebtedness allowed by the Congress is P185,197,000. The proposed bond issue is only P7,000,000 and in the bill authorizing it ample sinking fund is provided. There can, therefore, be no possible objection that may likely be presented by the American government to the issuance of that bond, and the question of policy, that is to say, whether there should be issued any bonds at all during the life of the Government of the Commonwealth is purely a matter of policy which under the dependence Act is entirely within the province of the Government of the Commonwealth.

I have gone into detail in correcting the misinformation published by the Bulletin, in the interest of good government and to protect the rights of the Government of the Commonwealth. Also—and this important—due regard for the good name and faith of the United States makes it imperative that there should be left no doubt in the mind of anybody regarding the powers and responsibilities with which the Government of the Commonwealth has been invested by the voluntary and noble renunciation of some governmental powers heretofore exercised by the Government of the United States or its representatives in the Philippines through the Act of the Congress.

There are certain elements in the community who have always been not only against Philippine independence, but also against the grant of autonomous authority to the people of these Islands. These elements, I regret to say, seem to refuse to abide by the sovereign will of the American people as expressed by Congress, and they resist to admit in their mind that a change in government, not only in form, but also in substance, has taken place in the Philippines. These elements, despite clear provisions of the Independence Act to the contrary, still insist that the High Commissioner is in fact the Government of the Philippines was the High Commissioner, as obtains in other colonies elsewhere, America could not claim any credit for what she has done in the Philippines. On the contrary, her whole policy in the Islands would be on of hypocrisy and sham.

His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
Upon signing Bill No. 214, Remitting Delinquent Cedula Taxes

[Released to the Press on October 29, 1936]

I have today signed with reluctance and against the advice of some of my associates in the Government, Bill No. 214, which remits the delinquent cedula taxes in the case the taxpayers concerns pay their 1937 cedulas before May 1st of that year.

I have signed the bill in the hope that hereafter the people of the Philippines will pay their cedula taxes regularly. I wish to state, however, that if the 1937 cedula taxes are subsequent similar taxes are not paid in time in accordance with the provisions of this law, I will set the machinery of the government in motion so that all cedula taxes accruing to the Government are promptly collected. Not only will the penalties provided by law in such case be applied rigorously against those who have not paid their cedula taxes, but also the Government will even go to the extent of distraining personal property in order to secure the payment of cedula taxes.

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

UPON

SIGNING BILL NO. 212, DEPRIVING S. P. C. A. AGENTS OF
THE POWER TO MAKE ARRESTS FOR VIOLATION OF LAWS ON CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

[Released to the Press, November 8, 1936]

I have signed Bill No. 212, which amends Act No. 1285 in such a way as to deprive agents of the S. P. C. A. of the power which they heretofore had to make arrest, for violation of laws regarding cruelty to animals. I approved the bill in spite of the protests of the representative of the S. P. C. A. because in my opinion it is fundamentally wrong and contrary to every principle of good government to give any private individual or association police powers or to delegate to private institutions the performance of strictly governmental functions. The bill corrects this very serious defect in one of the laws existing in our statute books.

The cruel treatment of animals is an offense against the State penalized under our statutes. There is no difference whatever between a violation of this law and the violation of any other law. Therefore, it is the Government, through its properly constituted agencies, that should arrest violators of said law. Had the bill under consideration attempted to repeal the Acts which penalize the cruel treatment of animals, I would have vetoed it. But unfortunately the National Assembly did not do this. Cruelty to animals is still a criminal offense and no change has been introduced as to its penalty.

In order that the law may be properly executed, I am issuing an executive order directing every mayor of a chartered city, every municipal president, the Commissioner of Public Safety and the Provost Marshal General as head of the Constabulary Division of the Philippine Army to detail special members of the police force, local, national and the Constabulary, to watch, capture and prosecute offenders against the law prohibiting cruelty to animals. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to call the attention of the people of the Philippines to the fact that all civilized nations treat their animals with the same care and consideration as they treat human beings. It speaks ill of a people to permit maltreatment of their animals, and I hope that the public in general will coöperate with the Government in stopping this shocking evil.

Statement: President Quezon on allowing Bill No. 2251, authorizing the holding of lotteries for charitable purposes and creating a public corporation to carry out the purposes of the bill, to become a law without the President's signature, November 29, 1936

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On allowing Bill No. 2251, authorizing the holding of lotteries for charitable purposes and creating a public corporation to carry out the purposes of the bill, to become a law without the President's signature

[Released on November 29, 1936]

I have allowed Bill No. 2251 authorizing the holding of lotteries for charitable purposes and creating a public corporation to carry out the purposes of the bill to become a law without my signature under the provisions of paragraph (2), section 11, Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines.

In principle, I am opposed to the holding of sweepstakes or lotteries and, as a matter of fact, I sent a message to the National Assembly on July 29, 1936, recommending the discontinuance of the holding of sweepstakes in the Philippines and the adoption of some other system with less objectionable features. As a result, the National Assembly approved at its regular session Bill 2251 allowing the holding of lotteries for charitable purposes. This bill was repassed during the last special session of the National Assembly in order to eliminate certain objectionable features of the same. While the bill, as finally passed, may not meet fully with the suggestion contained in my letter of July 29, 1936, yet, inasmuch as the bill under consideration is an expression of the collective will of the members of the National Assembly and as it has certain good points, the same may be allowed to remain in our statute book.

The primary purpose of the bill is to raise funds for charitable purposes. At present, we do not have sufficient charitable institutions to take care of the unfortunates who must have to depend on charity, and the Government finances at present are not sufficient to supply the different needs of the Government and much less the need for charitable works. Furthermore, the suspension of the last sweepstakes has encouraged and increased the entry into the Philippines of lottery and sweepstakes tickets.

It will be noted that the bill does not repeal the law authorizing the holding of sweepstakes in the Philippines. As soon, however, as the necessary instrumentality for undertaking the work provided in the bill has been set up, I shall order the cessation of the activities of the present organization in charge of the holding of sweepstakes. In no case shall I allow that the sweepstakes be permitted to continue at the same time with the holding of lotteries.

Statement: President Quezon upon allowing Bill No. 568, remitting the bond of P4,867.99 furnished by the Luzon Surety Co., Inc., in behalf of Eugenio Uy Tuising, in the cases of people versus Eugenio Uy Tuising, to become law without the President's signature, November 30, 1936

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

Upon allowing Bill No. 568, remitting the bond of P4,867.99 furnished by the Luzon Surety Co., Inc., in behalf of Eugenio Uy Tuising, in the cases of people versus Eugenio Uy Tuising, to become law without the President's signature

[Released to the Press, November 30, 1936]

I have allowed Bill No. 568, entitled "An Act remitting the bond of four thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven pesos and ninety-nine centavos furnished by the Luzon Surety Company, Incorporated, in behalf of Eugenio Uy Tuising in the cases of People versus Eugenio Uy Tuising," to become a law without my signature, under the provisions of Paragraph (2), section 11, Article VI, of the Constitution of the Philippines.

Bill No. 568 seeks to remit the bond of P4,867.99 furnished by the Luzon Surety Co., Inc., in favor of defendant Eugenio Uy Tuising in criminal cases Nos. 13209, 13259, and 14107, all entitled "Peoplevs. Eugenio Uy Tuisng," which bond had been declared confiscated by the Court of First Instance of Cebu by reason of the defendant's failure to appear in court at the time of the reading of the sentence against him.

It appears that the bond in question was ordered to be confiscated in view of the inability of the Luzon Surety Company, Inc., to produce the defendant, Eugenio Uy Tuising, at the time of one reading of the sentence against him. Upon inquiry, however, it was found that the defendant died on January 27, 1932, one month before the date set for his appearance in court, and the fact of his death became known to the company only after the Court of First Instance of Cebu had issued its order of confiscation.

It will be seen, therefore, that under the facts stated above, there may be justification for the remission of the confiscated bond. I believe, however, that as a matter of sound public policy, the Government should not encourage the refund of bonds confiscated for failure of the accused to appear in court. Presuming that the National Assembly must have been appraised of the full facts of this case before acting on the same, and considering that the said Body has expressed its stand by the enactment of the bill in question, I do not feel it wise to nullify the will of the Assembly by vetoing the said bill. However, it is hoped that no measures of a similar nature will be enacted in the future.

Press Statement: President Quezon on explaining why there can be no Acting President in the absence of the President of the Philippines from the National Territory

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On explaining why there can be no Acting President in the absence of the President of the Philippines from the National Territory

[Released on December 7, 1936]

Under the Constitution, in the absence of the President of the Philippines from the national territory, there can be no Acting President. Wherever he goes, the President carries with him the authority and powers of his Office and he can exercise them as fully and as if he were in his Office at the capital of the nation. There will, therefore, be no Acting President during my absence from the Philippines and the Government will continue to be run and its official affairs transacted in the same manner as they are when I am in the Philippines.

Each Secretary of Department will attend and decide matters pertaining to his department which under the law he has authority to decide. To those that require my approval, if necessitating urgent action, my consent can be had by cable. Of other departmental business, which although within the province of a Secretary of Department are of such importance or affect the general policies of the Government in such a way that the Department head thinks he should consult me, the Secretary may also communicate with me by cable.

In my absence, the cabinet may hold its weekly meetings to consider routine matters under the presidency of the Vice-President. Such official business as is ordinarily carried on in my Office under the signature of the Secretary to the President shall continue to be transacted as heretofore.

Should a case arise in which the personal signature of the president is required and the matter has been consulted and decided by me, the Vice-President, after writing my name above his signature, may authenticate the document with his own signature, for and in behalf of the president.

Statement: President Quezon on purpose of the President's trip to the United States, January 7, 1937

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PURPOSE OF THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP TO THE UNITED STATES

[Released to the Press, January 7, 1937]

In reference to the trip of President Quezon to the United States, the President desires it to be clearly understood that his trip to the United States is being made for the purpose of having preliminary conversations with the President of the United States and with the State and War Department officials. The formal calling of the Trade Conference between representatives of the Government of the United States and representatives of the Government of the Philippines is left under the law to the President of the United States, and therefore President Quezon will not appoint the representatives of the Philippine Government to this conference unless and until the President of the United States has decided when the Trade Conference shall take place.

President Quezon is going to America with his official staff but is taking with him no delegate to the Trade Conference, nor are there any delegates expected to follow him because he has appointed none.

The announcement made by the President that the Vice-President would head the Philippine delegation to the Trade Conference was made only for the purpose of vesting the Vice-President with authority to gather data that may be necessary if and when the President of the United States should call the Trade Conference.

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On the purpose of creation of National Language Board

[Released on January 13, 1937]

The purpose of the Act creating the National Language Board is very clear. It is to find means whereby there may be created a native national language for the Filipino people out of the different main native languages spoken in the Philippines.

Such a native national language, if and when it is formed, will not replace the teaching of English in the public schools. The Constitution provides that primary instruction in the public schools will be chiefly conducted in English. Nor will such a native national language do away with the use of Spanish in the Philippines. English and Spanish will be increasingly known and employed in business and social intercourse in this country as past experience has demonstrated. But the Filipinos' possession of their own native language will doubtless serve to foster national consciousness and solidarity—a most important possession for any people.

Statement: President Quezon on Visible Head of the Government during President's absence and selection of cabinet members, January 21, 1937

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

VISIBLE HEAD OF THE GOVERNMENT DURING PRESIDENT'S ABSENCE AND SELECTION OF CABINET MEMBERS

[Released to the Press, January 21, 1937]

The news item appearing yesterday in an afternoon paper to the effect that at a conference held with members of the Cabinet and of the Assembly it was agreed that Vice-President Osmeña will be "the visible head" of the Government in the absence of the President, and that a supposed realignment of the Cabinet virtually was sanctioned, is misleading.

The President did not consult the members of his Cabinet nor of the Assembly as to who will be the "visible head" of the Government during his absence from the Islands, nor did he seek their approval as to any supposed realignment of the Cabinet.

The selection of the members of his Cabinet is the President's constitutional prerogative and he need not have the approval of any one to constitute a Cabinet that in his opinion will best serve the public interest. Nor did the President consult the opinion of any one as to who will be the "visible head" of the Government and represent him at official ceremonies. What the President did in his speech yesterday, at the luncheon which he gave to the Cabinet, Members of the Assembly, and Provincial Governors and Treasurers, was merely to state that, although the Vice-President, under the Constitution, cannot be acting President since the President will continue to exercise the powers and prerogatives of his office while abroad, he being, however, the ranking official in the Government, will in the absence of the President, represent the President.

Statement: President Quezon on Woman Suffrage, January 21, 1937

Press Statement
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Woman Suffrage

[Released on January 21, 1937]

To the Filipino People:

On the eve of my departure abroad on a mission of far-reaching consequence to the nation, I desire to make an earnest appeal in favor of woman suffrage, which will be decided by the qualified women of the country in a plebiscite to be held on April 30, 1937.

Almost every democratic country in the world today has woman suffrage; the Philippines cannot afford to be an exception.

The common people, the farm laborers, the factory workers, and the small employees will be the first ones to be benefited by the extension of the vote to women, because the majority of these new electors, as is the case with the majority of male electors, belong to the class above mentioned, and, therefore, their influence in the Government will be greater and doubtless will be exerted in favor of measures and legislation that will promote their well-being. The women in the factories, in the barrios, and in the far-flung communities, who are qualified to vote, should all come out and vote for woman suffrage on the appointed day.

Our cause in America will receive an added impetus when the American people learn that we have granted the right of suffrage to our women.

Press Statement
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Discontent and Social Justice

[Released on January 22, 1937]

I do not want to have to use my modest army of ten thousand men to shoot down Filipinos who go out to the fields because they are convinced that they are not getting justice either from the Government or from their fellow-citizens. I never want to do that. I do not want to use the army of the Philippines to kill a man who is out in defense of his human rights. God save me from having to do that! And because I do not want ever to be placed in a position wherein I have to do it—my paramount duty being to maintain peace and order regardless of the causes that bring about the disturbances—I am asking everybody now to get together and try to improve the conditions in the Philippines so that such feelings of discontent as now exist may be replaced by a feeling of contentment and happiness, of satisfaction with the Government and with their fellowmen. And I think that we are improving, we are getting better, we are going as fast as we can without upsetting the present industrial and economic organizations overmuch. I have instructed Judge Zulueta and the Secretary of Labor to go to Negros and start investigating the wages that are being paid to laborers, and we are going to go ahead and find out how the laborers on the farms and in the factories are being treated. We are going to use the authority vested in this Government to secure justice for these fellows if and when it is necessary.

Press Statement on Mr. Jose Hilario's resignation as Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue and engagement of government officials in private activities, March 6, 1937

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

MR. JOSÉ HILARIO'S RESIGNATION AS DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE AND ENGAGEMENT OF GOV-ERNMENT OFFICIALS IN PRIVATE ACTIVITIES

[Released to the Press, March 6, 1937]

Devoid of all camouflage, the only reason why Mr. José Hilario, erstwhile deputy collector of internal revenue, resigned his government post is that he had been offered a position in a private firm that pays twice the salary he was getting. Of course, there is nothing mercenary about this; it is simply an advantageous business proposition for Mr. Hilario.

Mr. Hilario feels that the policy of the Government in restricting its employees from engaging in outside activities cramps the liberty of the individual, especially after office hours. If a person feels that he can make more money outside the Government than in it, there is nothing that prevents him from stepping out. But it is poor taste, to say the least, for a man who has been long in the employ of the Government, who has relied long on his government income for the support of his family, and who, perhaps, owes that high public esteem with which he is regarded to the Government itself, to strike at that Government at the moment of leaving its service. We hate to call it ingratitude, but it smacks of the story of a bird which reared a reptile in its nest.

In regard to the prohibition of government employees from engaging in private activities, the policy was enunciated after many bitter lessons from experience. It has been found that when employees engage in private work, as teaching for instance, it is hard to make them undertake trips to the detriment of the service. The tendency on the part of employees who perform outside work is to avoid assignments in the field. This tendency results disastrously for government offices whose responsible officials are themselves performing other work, because due to that side work many necessary inspection trips which mean so much in maintaining efficiency and discipline have perforce to be abandoned.

A clean conscience dictates that a man, in order to be true to himself and to his trust, must devote all of his time, his efforts, and his thoughts to that activity which he has voluntarily embraced as his life-work. To do less would be unfair to the employer. This is especially true where the employer is the Government.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE AND ECONOMIC ADJUSTMENTS

[Joint Statement with U. S. Assistant Secretary of State Francis
B. Sayre, Released to the Press, March 18, 1937]

It was agreed a joint committee of experts would be expected, in making its recommendations, to consider the bearing in which an advancement in the date of independence would have on facilitating or retarding action on a program of economic adjustment of the Philippines.

It was further agreed preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines are to be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent with affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust her national economy.

Thereafter, it is contemplated, trade relations between the two countries will be regulated in accordance with a reciprocal agreement on a non-preferential basis.

Press Statement on Quota of Domestic Consumption Sugar for 1937, July 6, 1937

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

QUOTA OF DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION SUGAR FOR 1937

[Released to the Press, July 6, 1937]

Before fixing the 1937 and 1938 quotas for domestic consumption sugar the Domestic Sugar Administration first heard both the planters and the centrals. While the officers of the Philippine Sugar Association contend that the actual amount of sugar consumed in the Philippines every year is 70,000 short tons, the representatives of the Confederation of Sugar Planters' Associations claim that local consumption of centrifugal sugar is close to 100,000 short tons. In view of these conflicting views, the Domestic Sugar Administration decided to fix the quota of domestic consumption sugar for 1937 at approximately 91,000 short tons, and that for 1938, at 93,000 short tons.

In attempting to look into the cause or causes of the present fall in sugar prices, however, the Domestic Sugar Administration has recently found reason to question accuracy of the official estimate of the Philippine Sugar Association as well as that of the Confederation of Sugar Planters' Association. Statistics covering the total amount of sugar produced and exported for the last four years, as compiled by the Philippine Sugar Association, reveal that, after deducting the quantities of domestic consumption as well as reserve sugar remaining on hand at the end of 1936, the average yearly consumption of domestic sugar during 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 is nearly 150,000 short tons, or more than twice the official estimate of the Philippine Sugar Association. The Domestic Sugar Administrator has, therefore, summoned representatives of both the Philippine Sugar Association and those of the Confederation of Sugar Planters' Associations to a conference to inquire into the bases of their respective estimates which vary so much from that indicated by the sugar statistics of the past four years.

RESTORATION OF OLD PENSIONS TO RETIRED EMPLOYEES

[Released to the Press, September 9, 1937]

I am very happy over the report that the National Assembly has speedily and without a dissenting vote approved in second reading- a law restoring the old pensions paid to those who had already retired from the service and were receiving pensions when the former pension systems were abolished. This is an act of simple justice. It is not only a matter of sacred fundamental policy for governments to make good every obligation they undertake, but it is also in the long run the soundest and most beneficial policy for the nation itself that avows it and inflexibly adheres to it.

The Philippines is a new nation on the threshold of its complete political independence. She is about to enter into the family of nations and she must carry with her a name that will command respect from all quarters for the justice and fairness of the acts of the Government of the Commonwealth. Our national credit will be enhanced and strengthened by the act which the National Assembly has just passed.

My heartiest congratulations to the Speaker and members of the National Assembly and to the people of the Philippines for their worthy representatives.

On Quoting the President of the Philippines in the Press

[Released to the Press on September 10, 1937]

In view of repeated cases reported in the press in which persons who have had conferences with the President had attributed statements and opinions as having come from him, the attention of those calling on the Chief Executive is directed to a rule which is recognized and in force everywhere—except up to this time in the Philippines—namely:

That the head of the Government may not be quoted except by specific authorization. Only the President or his authorized spokesman may publish opinions, statements or communications as coming from the head of the Government, and, except in those cases, any statement or opinion attributed to him should be taken as unauthorized and groundless.

Any person or persons violating this rule thereafter will be denied access to the President.

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

MISQUOTING THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES RE CUEVO-BARREDO CASE

[Released to the Press, September 23, 1937]

The Philippines Herald in its issue of September 22nd, attributes to the President a statement as made in his conference with the press in connection with the case recently decided by the courts denying the petitioner the right to be indemnified for the death of a laborer who was drowned in the Pasig River in obedience of the order of an employee of Barredo & Co. that "if we have more decisions of that nature, I shall ask the National Assembly to suppress the judiciary in the Philippines", and to emphasize the news, the article wherein it appears carries this headline: "Decision on Laborer's Case Brings Threat of Court Abolition."

On its face, the statement attributed to the President is absurd, for the least informed individual knows that the National Assembly has no power to abolish the judiciary in the Philippines as this branch of the Government is not a creature of an act of the legislature but of the Constitution itself. The absurdity of the statement is so apparent that it should not be necessary to deny it. This denial is, however, made so as to serve as public notice that newspapers attributing to the President statements that he has not made or could not have made by the very nature of the statements themselves, will not be permitted to send representatives to the weekly conferences of the President.

The Vanguardia of the same date carries a substantially correct version of the conference.

CHIEF EXECUTIVE'S CRITICISM OF JUDICIAL DECISIONS

[Released to the Press, September 25, 1937]

To my critics, to those who would assert that the Chief Executive may not publicly express his condemnation of a court's decision that he considers unjust because that is an encroachment upon the independence of the Judiciary, my answer is that if my said critics are right in their theory—which I know they are not—if they were right, I say, then I would not want to be Chief Executive because the presidency would be too high a price to pay for a man to be mum in the face of an outrageous injustice.

To those who believe that I have violated the duties of my office when I criticized the decision of the Court of Manila and the confirming decision of the Court of Appeals (Second Division) on the Cuevo-Barredo case, my advice is that they go and impeach me before the National Assembly. And if the National Assembly should condemn me, I would accept that verdict as the expression of the Filipino people's conception regarding the duties of the Chief Executive. In such a case, I would say without hesitation that I do not want to be the President of a people whose conception of the duties of the Head of the Government is to sit by and keep quiet when other branches of the Government, in his opinion, are doing wrong.

LETTERS OF CONGRATULATIONS RE CUEVO-BARREDO CASE

[Released to the Press, September 28, 1937]

Letters from several parts of the country commending and praising the President's stand on the Cuevo-Barredo case continue to pour in at this Office, following on the heels of telegrams which came in earlier. The writers of these letters range from humble farm hands and low-salaried employees to professional and business men, but they are all unanimous in their expression of unconditional support of the President and effusive in their praise of his courageous stand.

Writing on the case, Meliton L. Lejano, lawyer and business man, said in part, "I emphatically disagree with the seemingly general impression that your vituperation was uncalled for and that it will undermine our faith in the judiciary. Hope springs eternal in the human breast and we don't easily lose faith in the judiciary until we receive raw decisions. Therefore, it is the raw decisions themselves and not what is said about them that will crumple our faith in the judiciary."

Among other things, Amado R. Sanchez says: "In all your political career I had been with you only once. That was in the bitter controversy over the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law. I thought I was born against you. I had the idea that you were always on the side of the well-to-do. Today I have changed that boyish idea, since you became president. * * * Your criticism of the recent judicial decision on the case of the late Lozano convinced me really that you are no longer playing hide and seek in politics. Will you please continue to do so in the good name of justice and to erase from the minds of the masses their doubts about the courts?"

Bishop Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., of the Filipino Independent Church, writes in this vein, "It is notorious and it is almost considered as an axiom among the laborers and the modest employees that * * * there are no worst masters than the rich Filipinos. We are confident that the recent censure of your Excellency of our judges and heartless capitalists will foment a new spirit of equality for the masses."

From José P. Daquis comes a plea to the President not to abandon the fight in behalf of the poor. He says, "You said that this is one fight you have your soul in. We hope that in spite of outbursts from so-called legal minds you will not abandon this just cause you have so readily and fearlessly espoused. We the common people feel, and we are confident we feel right about it, that you will stand by the down-trodden until the fight is eventually won."

REELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

[Released to the Press, October 19, 1937]

My attention has been called to a statement attributed to my friend, Commissioner Paredes, advocating my reelection as President of the Philippines, and to certain news items in today's papers speaking of alleged movements on the part of labor leaders to the same effect. I have, on more than one occasion, laughed out talks of this sort thinking that that would be sufficient to stop it, but this time I feel that I must go further and state the reasons why I will not, under any circumstances, accept a second term.

The clause in the Constitution prohibiting a second term for the presidency of the Philippines has been inserted through my own efforts and this I did when amongst the members of the National Convention there was already the general expectation that I would be the first President of the Commonwealth. The Antis in that convention who constituted more than two-thirds of the total membership, were opposed to such a clause precisely on the ground that they wanted to be free when the time came to make me their candidate for reelection. I had to talk personally to the President of the Convention, my friend ex-Justice Recto, to the Chairman of the Committee that drafted the Constitution, Filemon Sotto of Cebu, to the present Secretary of Public Works and Communications Cuenco, who was then a prominent member of the Constitutional Assembly, to Vicente Sotto, the publisher of Union, and to many others, in order to have the said clause embodied in the Constitution. I shall certainly not stultify myself by giving my consent to any attempt to amend the Constitution to permit my reelection. If we were to amend the Constitution in this respect, the outside world would immediately say that we are following in the Philippines the same course that for years has been followed by some of the Latin American republics and which has been mainly responsible for many of the revolutions in those countries.

No man can be President of any country for twelve years and do his duty well without succumbing physically to the weight of the burden. I have spent my whole life in the public service and the few remaining years that it may please God to give me life, after the 31st of December, 1941, when my term expires, I have the right to enjoy in peace. But this is not the main consideration which might be called a selfish motive. My definite refusal to consider another term as President is due to the fact that if I were to allow myself to be tempted by any such ambition, I would endanger the achievement of those very objectives which are so dear to my heart, and which the labor leaders say is their principal reason for advocating my candidacy. I have reached a point where in the ordinary course of life my days are numbered and it would be the height of folly for me to sacrifice everything including the success of my administration to mere love of power. So those friends of mine who want to see me succeed in my endeavor to give the common man a square deal should stop any movement looking toward the amendment of the Constitution in order to secure my reelection.

No man is necessary, and if it were true that outside of Manuel L. Quezon there is no other man in our country who can be the Chief Executive of the Philippines, I would immediately start working for the enactment of a law by the Congress of the United States that will require the appointment of an American Governor-General for the Philippines.

There is no need of keeping me at the head of this Government for the program of social justice to be realized. After having started the movement for the amelioration of the lot of the masses, as I have, it will go on indefinitely on its own momentum. Let no one fool himself into believing that any man or group of men, or any class can successfully oppose the onward march of justice. Once started there is no power that can stop or hold it back.

LETTERS FROM THE UNITED STATES CONGRATULATING THE PRESIDENT RE CUEVO-BARREDO CASE

[Released to the Press, October 21, 1937]

This Office is in receipt of two letters from the United States warmly congratulating the President of the Philippines for his stand on social justice in connection with the now celebrated Cuevo-Barredo case. The writers, an American, president of a ball club, and a Puerto Rican residing in New York, applaud the President's action as admirably courageous and one that should be long remembered by Filipinos.

"Congratulations, my Dear Sir," writes Willis E. Johnson, president of the Cincinnati Ball Club, Cincinnati, Ohio," for the manner and the courage you displayed in behalf of the man who was drowned. They are men like you who live long in the memories of your countrymen, and I feel that your high and most honorable position should be made permanent, * * * I am not in the habit of writing letters of criticism * * * I do not belong to any union, but I do believe in a fair deal to everyone. * * * It just so happens that I am engaged in baseball, a game where the "umpire" renders a just decision to everyone, be he a visiting or a home ball player."

The other letter comes from Mr. Guillermo Besosa, a Puerto Rican residing in Kenmore, New York. Written in Spanish, it says in part, "I, who am neither a laborer nor a Filipino, but a Puerto Rican, believe it my duty to address you these simple lines, motivated solely by the innate desire to express to you my complete admiration of your civic gallantry and honesty."

Statement: Survey of Water Power of the Philippines, October 23, 1937

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

SURVEY OF WATER POWER OF THE PHILIPPINES

[Released to the Press, October 23, 1937]

Upon the request of President Quezon, two officers of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, Captain Hugh J. Casey and Captain Lucius Du B. Clay, have just been assigned to the Office of the Military Adviser for the purpose of conducting a general survey on the practical possibilities of water power development in the Philippine Islands. This survey will devote special attention to those water power projects that offer the most favorable opportunity for successful development, taking into consideration the present and probable future demands for power. The report of this survey will also include recommendations as to the feasibility and cost of hydro-electric power projects that have already been investigated by the Bureau of Public Works and the National Power Corporation at the following places:

Agno	River,	Mountain	and	Pangasinan	Provinces.
Angat		River,		Bulacan	Province.
Agos		River,		Tayabas	Province.
Lake	Buhi	and	Barit	River,	Camarines	Sur	Province.
Quinali		River,		Albay	Province.
Lake Lanao and Agus River, Lanao Province.

These officers will also study the existing laws governing the utilization of public waters and lands for power development with a view to amending such laws, if advisable, to facilitate power enterprises consistent with the proper protection of public interest. They will also examine the flood control plans for the Agno and Pampanga River Systems in Central Luzon now under consideration by the Flood Control Commission, and make recommendations as to the feasibility and adequacy of such plans.

Captain Casey and Captain Clay are considered outstanding experts in the field of water power development.

Statement: President Quezon on Giving Ample Powers to the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
Giving Ample Powers to the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines

[Released to the Press, November 11, 1937]

To give ample powers to the Board of Regents of the University of the Philippines so that the board in thus assuming full responsibility may more effectively run the state university and raise its standard, is the policy of the present administration, according to an announcement made by President Quezon at a meeting of the regents which he called at Malacañan at 9.30 this morning.

To carry out this policy, the President declared that he will recommend to the National Assembly that more leeway be given to the Board of Regents in the disposal of funds appropriated for the university by eliminating certain restrictions imposed in the appropriations act.

President Quezon stressed the fact that it is his belief that the prime duty of the state, insofar as education is concerned, is to give elementary instruction to the youth of the land and that if the state is to maintain a university, such university must serve a definite purpose which is the highest standard of university education. To maintain such a high standard, the President said that he feels it is necessary that the Board of Regents be given a more effective control in the running of the institution. He further declared that the university should stress quality rather than quantity.

Immediately after the President's announcement and after he had left the Cabinet room, Vice-President Osmeña who as Secretary of Public Instruction is Chairman of the Board of Regents, called the board to a meeting and it was agreed to ask President Bocobo to submit to the board not later than January of next year a comprehensive plan which will include how the amount to be appropriated by the National Assembly will be spent, a program for improving the present standard of the university. The board also requested the President to submit the record of each member of the faculty, with a view to study the advisability of sending some of the present professors abroad and to what extent it will be necessary to reinforce the present faculty by employing foreign educators, and which unit of the university should either be curtailed or expanded and what new courses should be added.

Vice-President Osmeña also announced that he will soon effect a reorganization of the present standing committees of the Board of Regents.

Statement: President Quezon on work of Joint Preparatory Committee in the Philippines

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On work of Joint Preparatory Committee in the Philippines

[Released to the Press, November 12, 1937]

I am informed that the American members of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs are sailing today on the steamship President Coolidge. While the Committee has not come to any definite conclusion as to what its recommendations should be—and it is not to be expected that it could have done it in such a short time,—it may properly be said that the work of the Committee has been thorough and that every day it has spent in the Philippines has been devoted to the task assigned to it. I have refrained from having intervention of any sort in the work of the Committee and I am not even informed of what it has done, but from reports that have come to me from sources other than members of the Committee themselves, I am under the impression that it has done what has been humanly possible for it to do to get at the facts upon which its recommendations may be based.

I wish to express my appreciation of the work done by the Committee and to convey my thanks to Ambassador MacMurray and every one of the members of the Committee, both American and Filipino.

Press Statement: President Quezon on conditions in the Philippine Military Academy

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon: On conditions in the Philippine Military Academy

[Released to the Press on November 17, 1937]

A thorough investigation was conducted by the Army to ascertain whether there might be some substantiation for the sensational attack made by the Bulletin on the Philippine Military Academy. A canvass of the Cadet Corps was conducted by the Superintendent personally, during which he interviewed every cadet of the senior class. Not a single cadet was found who supported the views expressed in the Bulletin. The only possible source for such a story that was unearthed consisted of a letter written by a disgruntled cadet, who recently entered the Academy, to his family in Manila. The general conditions at the Military Academy are admirable. It is inspected frequently and supervised closely by officers of the American Army, who are distinguished graduates from West Point. The course of instruction is practically the same as at West Point, and it is, as far as a new institution can be developed in so short a space of time as two years, a replica of West Point. Its Superintendent is a graduate of that institution. Due to the expansion of the Academy and the relatively few regular officers in the Philippine Army, many of the academic instructors are drawn from University circles. The University of the Philippines has been the main source of such supply. Only the most outstanding graduates have been selected. All of them are distinguished in their specialties. No higher source from which to select instructors is available within the Philippines. They have been trained in the R. O. T. C. course of the University and many have taken the Reserve training at the Baguio School. Their work has been reported as excellent in every respect. These instructors are not charged primarily with the tactical and disciplinary training of the cadets, which is entrusted to officers of the regular army who are experts in that line as differentiated from those who are experts along educational lines. The instructors from the University are commissioned as Reserve officers largely as a matter of overhead convenience, to determine their rates of pay, relative standing and other overhead incidentals. As a rule, they are many years older than even the Senior cadets. There is but one instance of an instructor who was a classmate of a cadet, and this was due to the fact that the cadet while a member of the University was delayed in his matriculation from that institution. In this connection it is pertinent to recall that not only the Military Academy at West Point, but also every other distinguished educational institution in the United States employs its young graduates as its instructors. At West Point at one time distinguished first-class men were formerly detailed as instructors and wore a special uniform on that account. At many universities undergraduates are employed as special coaches for backward students. The Military Academy at Baguio is one of the brightest features of the Philippine Army. In University circles it probably has no superior in the Philippines or in the Far East. Its discipline is excellent and it is fulfilling its great mission in a most admirable manner. There is no apparent warrant for the sensational attack that has been made against it, and I unhesitatingly stamp as uninvestigated and unsubstantiated the story put forth by a reporter of the Bulletin.

NONPARTICIPATION IN THE PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL ELECTION IN LAGUNA

[Released to the Press, November 19, 1937]

With reference to the elections in Laguna, I desire to say that I am not interested in any candidate for provincial or municipal office in said province any more than I am in any other province. My interest in Laguna is that the provincial and municipal authorities who may be elected rescue the good name of the province from the reputation of being the den of "jueteng." I understand that Assemblyman Bonifacio has been nominated as the official candidate of the Nationalista Party. This is a matter of purely party organization with which I have nothing to do.

Press Statement: President Quezon on Management of Relief Fund for Typhoon Sufferers

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On Management of Relief Fund for Typhoon Sufferers

[Released to the Press on December 8, 1937]

The expenditure of the fund voted in the last session of the National Assembly for the relief of typhoon sufferers, amounting to half a million pesos, has been placed in the hands of Dr. José Fabella, Commissioner of Health and Welfare, in order to expedite the carrying out of relief measures in the provinces affected by the last typhoon which visited the Visayas. This has enabled Commissioner Fabella to organize relief units without much delay and to send much-needed aid in the form of relief workers and supplies to the regions most severely hit by the recent storm.

Yesterday, December 7, Doctor Asturias was sent to Romblon with two nurses and a large quantity of rice. Today, December 8, another relief unit headed by Dr. José M. Salazar is leaving for Borongan, Samar, with two nurses and a supply of rice, to cover the eastern coast of that province. The southwestern part will be covered by the unit under Dr. Ramon Panlileo Guerrero who, with two nurses and medical and food supplies, will leave Manila tomorrow, December 9. Doctor Estrada has been sent as advance physician to Leyte and two nurses are leaving today to join him. Another doctor, Doctor Escano, is leaving for Capiz tomorrow.

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On wishing the people of the Philippines a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year

(Released to the Press on December 24, 1937)

To the People of the Philippines:

Deep in the hearts of the Filipino people is the tradition of a joyous celebration of Christmas, the season of rejoicing in the present and of boundless hope in the future.

Today it is my sincere wish that the happiness which Christmas brings may reach every inhabitant of the Philippines, to the humblest of our citizens; and that the spirit of affection and goodwill which reigns on Christmas Day may continue through the days that follow.

To all of you, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Statement: President Quezon on retention of Marshal Douglas MacArthur as Military Adviser of the Commonwealth

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On retention of Marshal Douglas MacArthur as Military Adviser of the Commonwealth

[Released to the Press, December 31, 1937]

I have just completed a thorough discussion with General MacArthur, of the National Defense and peace problem of the Philippines. Up to the present time, his connection with this transcendent and all important matter, has been that of an agency of the American Government, detailed to such duty by the President of the United States upon the request of the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, under conditions stipulated in a special act of the American Congress. With General MacArthur's retirement from the active list of the American Army this condition changes. General MacArthur is now a free agent no longer acting under the orders of his government. I am aware of his reported desire to close his public career and return to his ancestral home in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and resume there the brilliant tradition of his famous father, General Arthur MacArthur, former Military Governor of these Islands, and his equally distinguished grandfather, Governor Arthur MacArthur of Wisconsin. In my discussion with the General, I outlined the stupendous importance of carrying to fruition the peace and defense plan for the Philippines. The purpose of the plan is to prevent war. Its object is peace without battle. Its possibility of attainment is based upon a proper neutrality policy for the Philippines and an adequate defense establishment. This latter was to be of such strength as to impose such a cost of conquest upon a potential invader as would exceed any hope he might logically entertain of political or economic advantage to be gained by victory. By thus removing any possibility of conquest representing an economic short cut, the chance of predatory attack would be greatly lessened, if not entirely eliminated. This prospect of peace for the Philippines is properly a hope and ideal for the world because it would constitute one of the strongest guarantees of tranquility in the Pacific. It is an ideal that can and should be supported by every civilized nation of the world. The Philippines, for obvious reasons, can never be a threat to any other nation in the world, so long as it is neutral in its policies and adequately defended against predatory attack by its military establishment. The consummation of such a magnificent ideal, I told General MacArthur, demanded his continued presence, as its success required the highest qualifications, not only of military leadership and judgment but also the highest form of international statesmanship. In its later phases it meant much more than the tactical ability to mold an army, however difficult and important such a task might be, but required a vision and an experience in international relationship that could not be overestimated. The difficulties besetting us are great. Defeatists are everywhere. But from the beginning General MacArthur's faith and confidence in the ability of the Filipino people to achieve success has never varied. They have matched even my own faith in my country and in my countrymen. I frankly told him that I would be at a loss to replace him and that I felt unfortunate consequences might result from his departure. I, therefore, requested him to remain and continue the great task for the Philippines, for America, and for the world, with which he has so completely identified himself. I am happy to say that the Marshal unhesitatingly yielded any personal predilection he may have entertained and agreed to continue and help me.

* Commenting on this statement, General MacArthur said: "This is a call of duty I cannot fail."

Statement: President Quezon on new positions in the 1939 budget, January 12, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On new positions in the 1939 budget

[Released to the Press on January 12, 1938]

A news item which appeared in some papers, referring to the conference held by the President with the members of the Appropriation Committee, may have given the impression that the President has agreed with members of the Committee to permit intervention in the selection of the persons to fill the new positions authorized in the budget. This question was not even discussed in the conference. The President called this conference with the chairman and members of the Appropriation Committee and the ranking member of the Committee on Rules of the Assembly for two purposes:

1. To discuss with the Budget Commission and members of the Appropriation Committee some of the policies with which the 1939 budget is to be harmonized. It was also called to explain that the change of the opening date of the sessions of the National Assembly considerably shortens the period within which the President must submit the 1939 budget and comply with the time allowed for the purpose by the Constitution. Under the circumstances the President wishes it known that the limited time at his disposal for the presentation of the budget will compel him to submit a budget almost identical to that of 1938, subject to such modifications as existing conditions and known policies may require, and the President submitting such supplementary messages as a further study of the budget and the finances of the Government in 1939 may warrant.
2. To request the members of the Appropriation Committee to discuss with the Budget Commission what, if any, of the new positions authorized in the budget should be filled. The budget for 1938 recommended the creation of over two thousand new positions and the National Assembly, not having sufficient time to consider in detail the merits of the recommendation for these new positions, approved it with a proviso that none of these positions should be filled except with the specific approval of the President. The President feels that it would be in the interest of the service to invite the members of the Appropriation Committee of the Assembly to go over these proposed positions and express their opinion thereon as to whether they should be filled or not. While the question of carrying out the provisions of the Appropriation Law is purely an executive function, the President likewise feels that the Executive is not renouncing any of his prerogatives by sounding the advice of the members of the National Assembly in this particular case, in view of the circumstances surrounding it.

Statement: President Quezon on major accomplishments of Department of Public Instruction in 1937,
January 15, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On major accomplishments of Department of Public Instruction in 1937

[Released to the Press on January 15, 1938]

Great strides along educational lines were made last year despite the manifold obstacles which beset the officials in charge of public instruction, a report of Vice-President Sergio Osmeña, Secretary of Public Instruction, to the President discloses. Among the major accomplishments of the Department may be listed the opening of new classes to offset, to a certain extent, the grave school crisis; the progress made in the revision of the courses of study in order to place greater emphasis on character education and citizenship; and the launching of the campaign for adult education by the newly-created Office of Adult Education.

Figures furnished by the Bureau of Education show that last year 3,650 new classes were organized and approximately 200,000 additional children admitted into the elementary schools. This has served, at least, to assuage, if not to remove entirely, a constant source of irritation on the part of the parents paying their taxes and subject to the laws of the country who heretofore had been unable to secure the admission of their children into the public schools. The number of these new classes, of course, was necessarily limited by the appropriation made available by the National Assembly.

The new courses on which the Bureau of Education has been working will place greater emphasis on citizenship training and on the fostering of nationalism, with a view to instilling in the pupils' minds a broad and human patriotism, the report states. These courses are said to be nearing completion and will soon be given final revision.

Regarding adult education, the report mentions that 311 adult education committees have so far been organized in the different municipalities. The number of these committees is increasing rapidly, and it is hoped that within a short time the number will be sufficiently large to cover the whole Philippines. These adult education committees, the report goes on to state have so far organized 58 schools with a total enrollment of 3,686 illiterate adults. There is also an adult school for illiterate trainees in each of the 120 training cadres. According to estimates, one-third of the adult population of the country may be classified as illiterates.

A bill providing for the accommodation of all children of primary school age who seek admission into public schools and, for the compulsion of all children once enrolled in the school to complete, at least the fourth grade, prepared by the National Council of Education, has been submitted by the Department to the National Assembly. The Council has also approved a resolution shortening the elementary instruction from seven to six years. According to the report, as soon as this resolution is received in the Department the necessary instructions will be given the Director of Education so that all children who complete the primary grades next March may begin with the new intermediate course in June, 1938. The aforementioned bill is the result of the Council's study on the problem of providing sufficient funds to admit into the primary schools at least all children seeking admission and of increasing the number of years that the average child remains in school. A large scale program, it is explained, should be held in abeyance first, inasmuch as the figures from the new census will not be available for some time yet, and an accurate data on the number of children of school age is not yet available. The revision of the curricula of both the elementary and secondary schools is still under consideration by the Council.

Statement: President Quezon on government iron ore mines in Surigao, January 18, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On government iron ore mines in Surigao

[Released to the Press on January 18, 1938]

After a conference with the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce and the Secretary of Justice this morning at which the several proposals for mining the government iron ore mines in Surigao were submitted and discussed, the President decided that the Government itself, through the National Development Company, should mine these properties and find the market for the ore. Steps will be taken immediately to have the National Development Company, with the advice of Doctor Bain, world-known authority on mines, to undertake the preliminary work which will provide the Government with concrete information as to whether these mines can be profitably operated or not.

It was finally decided to let the National Development Company undertake this work in view of the provision of the Constitution to the effect that only nationals and, during the life of the Commonwealth, Americans, (and in the case of corporations or associations, only those at least 60 per cent of whose capital is owned by such citizens) can exploit, develop or utilize the natural resources of the Philippines. Since the risk that will be taken by the Government in this preliminary study will not involve in any case more than P200,000, it has been deemed wise to make this experiment to determine whether in some cases of nationally-owned mines, if not in all, the Government itself, through the National Development Company, may not exploit the mines so that all the profits, both from the operation of the mines and from the sale of the products, will accrue to the Government.

On death of former Resident Commissioner Pedro Guevara

[Released to the Press, January 19, 1938]

I am shocked to learn of the death of former Commissioner Pedro Guevara. He was for many years one of the dearest friends I have ever had. Commissioner Guevara had been a devoted and very able public servant as member of the National Assembly, of the Philippine Senate, and for many years as Resident Commissioner in the United States from the Philippines. He rendered this country a service that very few have had the opportunity to render. He was a man with sincere convictions. He stood his ground regardless of whether or not it affected him adversely politically. He was the friend of his friends to a fault. His death is one of the greatest losses that this country has ever suffered.

Statement: President Quezon on attitude of Filipino people toward Congressman O'Malley's proposed resolution on immediate freedom, January 27, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On Attitude of Filipino people toward Congressman O'Malley's proposed resolution on immediate freedom

[Radiogram sent by the President to Commissioner Paredes at Washington, D. C, January 27, 1938.]

[Released on January 27, 1938]

O'Malley's proposed resolution represents an attitude regarding American-Philippine relationship that is not new nor very rare.

Fortunately for the good name of America and the welfare of the Filipino people such an attitude does not represent and never has represented the policy of neither the Executive Department of the United States Government nor of the American Congress.

By taking the Philippines forcibly both from Spain and from the Filipinos themselves America has voluntarily assumed, and it would seem deliberately, moral obligations towards the Filipino people as their guardian and trustee. This self-imposed obligation on the part of the United States has been publicly avowed by the American Government as voiced by McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, and every other President of the United States, including the present incumbent, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who has repeatedly confirmed with deeds his own public pronouncements in this regard. The Congress has adopted as the national policy toward the Philippines those declarations made by American chief executives.

The economic policy of America affecting the Philippines which she promulgated upon her own initiative and responsibility has created an economic situation here that makes imperative the granting of sufficient time for the economic readjustment of this country before the present trade relations are completely terminated, unless the granting of independence is to be made with utter disregard of the economic and financial consequences with all its implications to the Philippines.

The foregoing is our view of American-Filipino relations as established and avowed by acts of the American Congress and of the Executive Department of the American Government.

However, both as the authorized spokesman for our people and as a Filipino, I shall not place myself in the position of refusing independence under any and all circumstances if and when it be so decided by the Congress. No self-respecting people would do otherwise.

My own preference, and I think I represent the consensus in this country, arrived at after mature deliberation, is that it will be equally in the interest of America and of the Philippines if independence were to be granted at the end of this or the beginning of next year and at the same time a trade arrangement between the United States and the Philippines agreed upon substantially in line with the views of President Roosevelt as recently published in the press.

Statement: President Quezon on sanitary condition of the markets, January 27, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On sanitary condition of the markets

[Released to the Press, January 27, 1938]

In my inspection of the City markets, I found that sanitary rules are not being strictly complied with, but I cannot very well blame either the Mayor or the City Treasurer for the unsatisfactory condition of the markets. This is due to the fact that heretofore the policy of the Government has been to consider the markets primarily as a source of municipal income, and consequently the municipal authorities subordinate every other consideration to that primary purpose of raising revenues for the local government. The principal concern of the Government in reference to markets must be to safeguard public health, and everything else should be sacrificed to the accomplishment of this end.

I realize that a little time will be required to bring about the situation as contemplated, but I shall instruct the Department of the Interior to demand from all municipal officials strict compliance with the policy herein enunciated.

Statement: President Quezon on appointment of laborers on municipal and barrio roads, January 29, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On appointment of Laborers on municipal and barrio roads

[Released to the Press on January 29, 1938]

The report appearing in the morning papers giving the impression that the members of the National Assembly will have the right to appoint laborers that will work on municipal and barrio roads is without foundation. The President has repeatedly stated that the matter of appointments is exclusively the function of the Executive Department, and without dereliction of duty he cannot allow this power to be exercised by any other branch or officials of other branches of the Government. The cases where the other branches of the Government are vested with the power of appointment are specifically provided in the Constitution. In the case of officials, employees, and laborers of the Bureau of Public Works, the Executive Department alone has the authority to make appointments.

The President authorized this statement to be made for the last time so that stories of this kind that may appear hereafter may be ignored.

Statement: President Quezon on proposed Public Works Program, February 1, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On proposed Public Works Program

[Released to the Press on February 1, 1938]

The President's message recommending a proposed public works program will be sent to the National Assembly this afternoon.

It is understood that the program contemplates a total expenditure of about P92,000,000.

This amount is to be spent for public buildings, artesian wells, drainage works, hospitals, public dispensaries, health resorts, national and local roads, etc. For local roads, which include inter-municipal and barrio roads, the amount is P10,000,000; for national highways, about P28,000,000; and for hospitals and public dispensaries, approximately P7,000,000.

Statement: President Quezon on advisability of bringing to the court of industrial relations all labor questions arising between employers and employees, February 2, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On advisability of bringing to the court of industrial relations all labor questions arising between employers and employees

[Released to the Press on February 2, 1938]

In view of rumors of impending strikes, especially in the electric light and transportation plants of the City of Manila, the President wishes to remind all concerned that the National Assembly has created a Court of Industrial Relations with powers to hear and decide questions arising between employers and employees, and that therefore grievances, if any, should be brought before this Court rather than appealed to the old method of the strike. The President wishes to point out the fact that in every strike, particularly those affecting the public utilities, there is one third party that invariably suffers, which is the public, and that this party is entitled to the protection of the Government. It should also be remembered that strikes cause losses, not only to capital but also to labor no matter how the strike ends. In view of the fact that there is a means whereby any existing wrong may be righted without recourse to the strike, the President earnestly urges laborers all over the Philippines to use this method and avoid strikes.

In order to expedite decision on cases brought before the Court of Industrial Relations, two assistants for this special tribunal will soon be appointed, and it is hoped that labor leaders will cooperate with the Government in avoiding strikes.

Statement: President Quezon on Strike of Laborers of the Gasoline Companies, February 4, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On Strike of Laborers of the Gasoline Companies

[Released on February 4, 1938]

The strike declared by the laborers of the gasoline companies is most unwise and untimely. It has the appearance of a deliberate defiance to my advice that differences between employers and employees be submitted to the Court of Industrial Relations.

Upon the petition of the Secretary of Labor, the questions involved in this strike have been submitted to the Court of Industrial Relations. If after the Court of Industrial Relations has rendered its decision, any of the parties should refuse to abide by it, I shall employ every legal means at the disposal of the Government to bring about an end to this situation. In the meantime and in view of the fact that the use of gasoline is essential for the transportation services of the community, I warn the strikers against any act on their part that may tend to interfere with the movement of the supply of gasoline. The police of the City of Manila and, if necessary, the Philippine Army will be used to protect the public against any hardship.

Statement: President Quezon on appointment of Honorable Datu Ombra Amilbangsa as Governor of the province of Sulu, March 11, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On appointment of Honorable Datu Ombra Amilbangsa as Governor of the province of Sulu

[Released to the Press on March 11, 1938]

I have today nominated the Honorable Datu Ombra Amilbangsa governor of the Province of Sulu.

Assemblyman Ombra is a Joloano professing the Mohammedan religion, but does not practise polygamy. He is an educated man and is at present a member of the National Assembly. During the time that Assemblyman Ombra has occupied a seat in the National Assembly I have become more and more intimately acquainted with him. He is upright, honest, hard-working, a patriotic Filipino, and has the best interests of the people of Sulu at heart. He is the first Mohammedan native of his province, who is honored by an appointment to the governorship of his province, which involves, in a way, greater responsibilities than the governor of a regularly organized province.

Governor Ombra has been instructed to dissociate himself from any political or factional group in his province. I expect him to respond to the confidence which the Government has placed in him, and to govern his province wisely, justly, and firmly. Upon the success of Governor Ombra will depend the further extension of the policy of appointing native governors in the territories largely inhabited by Mohammedan Filipinos.

Press Statement: President Quezon on the “Realistic Re-examination” of American-Philippine Relations,
March 15, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On the “realistic re-examination” of American-Philippine relations

[Released on March 15, 1938]

The fate of the Filipino people cannot be placed in the hands of anybody, but must be left to the free choice and determination of the Filipinos themselves.

I have listened with very close interest to the speech of High Commissioner McNutt. I think his presentation of the facts as related to the economics of American-Philippine relations is unassailable. Although not in the High Commissioner’s eloquent and forceful language, while in America last year I made speeches referring to the relations of America and the Philippines during the last forty years in substantially the same terms.

No reasonable person who knows that the solution given in the Tydings-McDuffie Law to the Philippine question is not fully satisfactory from the point of view of the Filipinos, can find fault with the proposition of the Commissioner that a re-examination of the whole question be undertaken at once. Everybody in the Philippines knows that the Philippine Legislature, in accepting and when it accepted the Tydings-McDuffie Law, did so despite its objectionable features which were equally recognized by the Antis and the Pros; and that in finally accepting the Act by a unanimous vote of its members, the Legislature bore in mind what President Roosevelt had told the members of the mission that went to the United States to secure some amendments to the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law, that he, the President, would recommend to Congress a further study of the whole situation with a view to righting such injustices or inequalities as may exist, an assurance which presently was made good through a message which President Roosevelt sent to Congress.

It must be noted that the High Commissioner, in proposing the “realistic re-examination” of American-Philippine relations, emphatically takes the position that no permanent political and economic relationship with the Philippines shall be adopted as a policy unless the “Filipinos want it.”

It is unnecessary for me to add that when, upon my return from the United States last year, I found some divergence of opinion among Filipinos as to what policy would best safeguard our national interest, I encouraged the free discussion of the subject as I have always maintained—as I do maintain—that the fate of the Filipino people cannot be placed in the hands of anybody, but must be left to the free choice and determination of the Filipinos themselves.

Statement: President Quezon on public health and sanitation, April 22, 1938

Press Statement¹ of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On public health and sanitation

[Released to the Press, April 22, 1938]

I wish to convey to the members of the Philippine Islands Medical Association now in convention in the City of Zamboanga, my very deep interest in their convention and my sincere hope that, as in the past, their convention would redound to the advancement of medical science in our country. I congratulate the Association in general and its members in particular for the splendid work that they have been doing. I am confident that they will continue their efforts towards making the Philippines a better country to live in.

It is worthwhile repeating to the members of this Association the assurance that the Government is deeply concerned with public health and sanitation. The furnishing of safe drinking water to every community; the liberalization of the provincial hospital law to enable all provinces to establish hospitals and public dispensaries; the expansion of the Philippine General Hospital; and the construction of regional leprosaria, are some of the features of my health program.

The Philippine Islands Medical Association as representative of the medical profession can very well help the Government in its campaign to reduce our general and infant mortality, and to elevate the health and stamina of our people. While it can not be denied that money is of prime importance in the administration of public health, we should not lose sight of the fact that the quality and training of the medical practitioners and of public health officials, as well as their interest in the welfare of others, are of equal, if not of great, importance.

Statement: President Quezon on labor conflicts and their settlement, April 30, 1938

Press Statement
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Labor Conflicts and their Settlement

[Released to the Press on April 30, 1938]

On the occasion of the celebration of Labor Day, I desire to address a few words to the laboring class, in general, and to the labor organizations, in particular. On two occasions when I had the pleasure of entertaining labor organizations in Malacañan, I summed up my attitude toward the workingman and the poor in these words, "My heart is with you but my mind is open and impartial."

I wish to give voice once more to these sentiments and explain their import and implication.

All my sympathies are with the men and women and their children who earn their livelihood by the sweat of their brow. It is my daily hope and prayer that their lot may be improved, and that they may all enjoy the use of those commodities that have become almost prime necessities in our day. And it is my ambition which I do not consider at all impracticable, that in this beloved country of ours, so rich in natural resources, our national economy may be so readjusted that it will permit all who can and desire to work, to live a life of relative comfort. But every reasonable man should see that the task is gigantic, almost chimerical, and that it will require for its accomplishment all the patience, wisdom, fairness, sense of proportion, and a practical mind-by which I mean, of one that can counterbalance and harmonize high ideals and high purposes with realities.

This is what I mean when I said that "my heart is with you but my mind is open and impartial." In the first place in the conflict of interests between the different elements constituting the community, including capital and labor, the Government will have to take into consideration every side of each question as it affects the public as well as the parties whose rights and interests have to be adjusted. I also mean that I realize, as all must realize, that every important task, especially those that have varied and far-reaching consequences and besieged with obstacles and difficulties in their accomplishment, require time to attain fruition. In such kind of enterprises, what is important is that every forward step should be so taken that no unforeseen event may force its retracement.

The policy of my administration and of the National Assembly to give labor its due must need the intelligent and responsible cooperation of labor organizations if the Government is to be permitted to carry out its policies under most favorable circumstances. Unfortunately, I see signs that are not encouraging for it seems that there are indications of impatience on the part of labor leaders who, whether in good or in bad faith, that is to say, who, either inspired by a passionate zeal to improve the lot of the workingman or under the impulse of base purposes so as to benefit themselves from labor unrest, are agitating and counseling labor bodies to present unjust demands or to declare strikes without sufficient grounds.

Strikes have been, in the past and up to the present time, the weapon used by labor to secure recognition for its rights. At best, the strike by its very nature, will inevitably bring harm to the strikers themselves. It deprives them of their wages during the time that the strike lasts, and even when the strike is successful they suffer during the strike hardships that might have been avoided. Particularly in the Philippines, strikes are always seriously prejudicial to the strikers because there are no labor organizations in our country with funds to provide the strikers with means for their daily subsistence while the strike lasts. At the time when governments were prone to take the side of capital or they were reluctant to listen sympathetically to the claims or grievances of labor even when they were fully justified, to strike was the only recourse of labor to secure justice. Such is not the case in the Philippines now. For we have the Department of Labor primarily concerned with carrying out the policy of the Government for the protection of labor, and we have the Court of Industrial Relations empowered to decide questions arising between employers and employees. Every strike in the Philippines, therefore, that is declared before the strikers present their complaint to the Department of Labor, and if not settled there is not taken to the Court of Industrial Relations, is, for such failure to use the means created by law to secure justice if labor is entitled to it, prima facie a defiance against the Government or an expression of lack of confidence in the Government. Therefore, I desire to make public that my attitude toward strikes of this nature is unsympathetic, and that if labor takes the law into its own hands as it is the case if strikes are declared without first recurring to the Department of Labor or the Court of Industrial Relations, it cannot expect sympathy from the Government and it has to face the consequences of its action. May I not then appeal to every labor leader in the Philippines, to every labor organization, to the great mass of the workingmen and women, and to the poor, of my beloved native land, that they keep faith with their Government, that they exercise the virtues of patience and restraint, and that they resort to the methods provided by law for the redress of their grievances. May I not request you, one and all, to avoid strikes, violence, and the disturbance of public order, and to bear in mind that it is only through respect for the law and a proper sense of justice, a love of justice not only for one's self but also for his neighbor, can we make of the Philippines a land of happiness and of plenty for the enjoyment of everyone of its inhabitants.

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PROGRESS, IMPORTANCE, AND PROSPERITY OF THE PHILIPPINES

[A radio talk between General James G. Harbord and the President of the Philippines broadcast through the National Broadcasting Corporation network on Sunday, May 22, 1938, at 11.15 a. m., Manila time.]

[Released to the Press, May 23, 1938]

OPENING ANNOUNCEMENT—NEW YORK ANNOUNCER.

Gen. HARBORD. Mr. President, seeing you again recalls to me the days of long ago, when I was stationed in this beautiful country as an officer in the Philippine Constabulary, and you were a rising and energetic young lawyer, and later Governor of the great Province of Tayabas.

THE PRESIDENT. I well remember those days, General Harbord. Then the Philippines was just beginning the education of the people along American lines and the development of its great resources. Since your return a week ago, you have seen something of how far we have progressed.

Gen. HARBORD. I have indeed. On our recent trip together through the southern provinces of Luzon, I was greatly impressed by the extent of the agricultural development and by the attitude of pride and confidence in their country shown by the people of all classes.

The PRESIDENT. I hope that you also noticed their attitude toward the United States. Your country, the mother country, will always be in our mind. Our people have a real feeling of gratitude and appreciation towards yours for encouraging us and helping us to develop a real American spirit of progress and independence. You have noticed that spirit, perhaps, General Harbord?

Gen HARBORD. It is the first thing that anyone coming to the Philippines does notice. I wish that that spirit and its significance for the future were better understood back home. I wish that all Americans could realize that here are fourteen millions of intelligent, energetic people, in a land where great productivity and natural resources go hand in hand with amazing beauty. They are courageous and independent, and they have had much training in the arts of both peace and war. They have a small but well-disciplined army, and speaking as one who understands something of this matter, I would say that it will be a serious question if anyone has the temerity to challenge them on their native soil.

The PRESIDENT. That fact—and it is unquestionably a fact—should mean a great deal to the United States in the future. The Philippines can supply you with every tropical product and food which you will ever need, in peace or in war. Our position between the United States and Hongkong makes this a necessary air base in the East which will always be available to you for trade or military operations.

Gen. HARBORD. That, Sir, is a fact of the utmost importance. Another thing we must not forget is that the shrinkage of the world caused by radio and aviation has brought Manila nearer to Washington than San Francisco was twenty-five years ago. It is a comforting thought that, because of our attitude toward the Philippines in the past and the intelligent administration of the country during our regime here, we shall always have a next-door neighbor who will look on us as a favored nation and who will be able and willing to maintain that position independently and fearlessly.

The PRESIDENT. I understand that you are making a trip around the world, and that you have recently visited some countries in the Southern Hemisphere. I am greatly interested in your opinion of them, especially as they compare with the Philippines. Have they problems similar to ours?

Gen. HARBORD. I would say that the similarity of conditions, as well as problems, is not great. Only the threat of aggression is common to all of you. In that respect I would say that the Philippines is in a stronger position than either Australia or the Dutch East Indies.

The PRESIDENT. You have had a pretty good review of some of our provinces since you came, haven't you, Sir?

Gen. HARBORD. Yes, I have covered a great deal of ground by just about every modern means of transportation—automobile, train, yacht, and airplane. I have talked to high ranking officers of the United States Army and Navy, and to the commanding officers of the Philippine Army. I have heard a great deal about the possibility of aggression and the steps taken for defense, and I hold the opinion, backed also by my personal knowledge of the physical features of the country, that when the United States steps out in 1946, you will be very well able to take care of yourselves, if danger threatens.

The PRESIDENT. If ever the need arises, you will find that that is so. I remember that between our trip to the south and your trip alone to Baguio and some of the northern sections, you have covered twelve of our provinces, including the great plain of Luzon between Manila and the gold fields of Baguio.

Gen. HARBORD. That is correct. And in doing so, I have talked with hundreds of mayors and local officials and business men.

The PRESIDENT. And how did you find them—gloomy, fearful, poor, and depressed? Were they muttering about hard times, and growling about the Americans?

Gen. HARBORD. On the contrary; in every instance, Mr. President, I found them happy, prosperous, confident, and friendly. I also found a sort of jauntiness of spirit and an initiative—a desire to go ahead and get the job done, just like the average wide-awake American at home—which I didn't find in some other countries.

The PRESIDENT. I suppose, however, that you did observe other things that reminded you of the peoples you have recently visited?

Gen. HARBORD. In other matters, there are comparisons, but not similarities. Australia, for instance, is an independent Commonwealth such as yours will soon be, but its population is only half that of yours and that country has not been nearly so favored by nature as yours. In Java and the Dutch East Indies we find a dependent colony of sixty million non-Christians ruled by a nation of nine million Christians, whereas the fourteen millions in the Philippines have been Christians for nearly four centuries, and for the last forty years they have been governed by a Christian nation of ten times their number.

The PRESIDENT. Yes, General, that is a very important point. It helps us to see eye to eye with you on many matters which are vital to both our countries, and it makes friendship between us a natural, instead of a cultivated, result. I am told also that in Java the population is so large that food for the people might become a grave problem in case of an emergency, whereas in the Philippines we can grow far more than we need. This, of course, is a great protection for us but it does bring up problems of distribution of surplus, and we are very happy that the trade agreement with the United States has minimized these considerably, while at the same time it is of mutual advantage to your country.

Gen. HARBORD. And speaking of distribution, Sir, I want to compliment your Government on the splendid transportation facilities, both by highway and by rail, which I have seen on our recent long trip through twelve of your provinces.

The PRESIDENT. Thank you, Sir. We are very proud of our highways and our railroads, and we are going ahead very rapidly to complete a most comprehensive system of transportation. Within four years every one of the principal islands in the Archipelago will be provided with a network of circumferential and radial roads of concrete and asphalt, connecting at their terminals with ferries from one island to the other. Our railroad system has also been carefully planned to provide quick transportation between the principal cities and towns. As you understand, of course, this is greatly aiding in the development of centers of population and in opening up unused land as well as materially strengthening our national defense system.

Gen. HARBORD. The ability to transport goods and people from one place to another quickly and cheaply is one of the surest and swiftest means of making a country grow and prosper. I have noted with interest in this connection the large number of trucks and city and interurban buses in operation all over the country.

The PRESIDENT. Our people are becoming travel-minded. Perhaps in a few years there will be as many Filipinos sightseeing in America as there are foreign tourists here now.

Gen. HARBORD. I hope so, for there is nothing that makes for better understanding between nations than a liberal exchange of visitors. With Manila, such a short time away from San Francisco now by air, I hope many more Americans will come over here to enjoy the beauty and interest of this land.

The PRESIDENT. You think they will not find it hot?

Gen. HARBORD. Oh, no, I don't think so. It's hot in New York, too, you know. I have noticed in this trip that the people who live in tropical countries complain about the heat more than the visitors do. The Dutch that I knew in Java actually suffered, while I was uncomfortable only on one or two occasions. But Manila, even at this time of the year, is delightful except in the middle of the day.

The PRESIDENT. I agree with you. And you might tell your friends in America that air conditioning is almost as general here as it is in your large cities.

Gen. HARBORD. I should like to tell them many more things about Manila, so that they would understand that it is a modern, progressive city. It fronts on a magnificent bay, with mountains coming down on both sides to the narrow entrance, thirty miles away, where the island of Corregidor, considered one of the strong fortifications of the world, stands guard. Manila gives every evidence of prosperity. Is that appearance backed by facts, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT. Indeed, it is. While prices for some of our principal products, such as sugar and copra, are not exactly as high as we would like to have them, nevertheless our people are making money and every day their standard of living is rising. There is very little unemployment, and no lack whatever of the necessities of life. As you have seen for yourself, we are a happy people; we like to laugh, and we enjoy life very much. We still have much to learn; but we can learn, and we are doing so very fast.

Gen. HARBORD. There is no doubt in either of those statements. When I see the development that has taken place in the twenty-five years since I was last here, I am inclined to believe that no people in the world have ever made such rapid progress in the assimilation and use of modern civilization. Do you attribute that in part to the growth of educational facilities in the country?

The PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly that has a great deal to do with it. Education does not have to be forced on the Filipino. He takes to it readily. He seeks it for his children. As you have seen on our journeys, each town and village has an attractive school, but our chief problem is to keep that school big enough for our growing population. Last year we appropriated five million pesos for new school facilities, which is a large amount of money for a country of this size, but that sum will enable us to do more than keep pace with the needs of the next year.

Gen. HARBORD. What will you do then?

The PRESIDENT. We shall appropriate an additional P12,000,000 at the next session of the Assembly.

Gen. HARBORD. I was thinking of the taxes. Are they becoming a burden on the people?

The PRESIDENT. Taxes are always a burden, whether they are high or low, I'm afraid. But I know your meaning, that large amounts devoted to just one development may make taxes oppressive. However, we have a very long way to go before that can happen. Our people are the least taxed people in the world and they are taxed fairly. No one pays very much but every one pays something. That not only distributes the burden equally, but it makes each man realize that he is part of the Government, sharing its obligations as well as its benefits. Consequently, the Filipino takes a great interest in his government. That is very helpful in building the spirit of loyalty and solidarity among the people, a fact which you undoubtedly have observed.

Gen. HARBORD. I have observed that, and also their very evident affection for their President. The enthusiasm of the crowds that greeted you in every town and village in our trip was proof of that.

The PRESIDENT. It makes me very happy to believe that, Sir. But may I point out, General, that part of that enthusiastic greeting was also for you? The elder people have not forgotten the great services which you rendered to the Philippines, and they have told their children so often about your friendship for our country that your name is as well known among them as that of any American of our time. It also makes me happy that that is so, for we were closely associated in friendship in the old days, and I am proud that each of us has been able to lend a helping hand in some degree to this country that we both love.

Gen. HARBORD. I share that feeling very fully, Mr. President. It has been a privilege and a pleasure to talk with you this beautiful Sunday morning before an audience of American listeners, and I hope that what we have said may instill an even greater interest in the Philippines. Thank you very much, Sir.

Statement of President Quezon of Veto of Bill on Religious Instruction in the Public Schools, June 4, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

VETO OF BILL ON RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

[Released to the Press, June 4, 1938]

The President has vetoed Bill No. 3307 regarding religious instruction in the public schools, which was passed by the National Assembly at the last session.

The President bases his veto of the bill upon the ground that it is unconstitutional (a) because the title of the bill does not express its real object; (b) because the discretion given to an administrative official by the Constitution in the exercise of an executive function is impaired; and (c) because the bill attempts essentially to change the policy laid down in the existing law which has been raised to the category of a permanent national policy by virtue of section 5, Article XIII of the Constitution—a policy that can only be altered, amended or revoked through an amendment of the Constitution itself.

The President holds personally the view that religion is a power for good which not only operates for the benefit of the individual as such but also makes of him a good citizen. In vetoing the bill, however, the President takes the stand that under existing legislation the responsibility for the teaching of religion is placed exclusively upon parents and guardians, and upon the church to which the family belongs, but not upon the Government.

It is the hope of the President that religious questions will not be permitted to divide the people and cause conflicts of a serious character.

Statement: President Quezon on Provisional Appointment in the Regular Force of one hundred reserve officers of the line and ten reserve officers of the Medical Corps, June 13, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENT IN THE REGULAR FORCE OF ONE HUNDRED RESERVE OFFICERS OF THE LINE AND TEN RESERVE OFFICERS OF THE MEDICAL CORPS

[Released to the Press, June 13, 1938]

Upon the specific recommendations of the Military Adviser and of the Chief of Staff of the Army, the President has approved the provisional appointment in the Regular Force of one hundred reserve officers of the line and ten reserve officers of the Medical Corps.

As reported by the Military Adviser and the Chief of Staff, these officers have, without exception, proved, over a considerable period of active duty training, their fitness as to character, education, and professional capacity for transfer to the Regular Force. In order, however, to furnish further test and examination of each individual so selected, the President has directed that these appointments shall be provisional only for the period of one year. At the end of the probationary year those whose full records then demonstrate their complete suitability for appointment will be permanently transferred to the Regular Force.

The number of officers recommended for transfer has been determined by the military authorities on the basis of immediate and pressing needs of the Army for permanently assigned individuals. The policy of the Government is to hold the strength of the Regular Officers' Corps at the minimum level consistent with existing demands, with the purpose of building gradually toward future strength requirements through annual graduations at the Philippine Military Academy. As one means of assuring the efficiency of the Military Academy in producing lieutenants of the necessary qualifications, it has been directed that so far as practicable only officers of reasonable maturity and experience be assigned to the faculty. In line with this policy any instructor less than twenty-five years of age will shortly be transferred to other duties.

The names of Reserve Officers designated for provisional appointment in the Regular Force follows:

Statement: President Quezon on Report of Dr. Jose N. Rodriguez on Endorsement of Leprosy Work in the Philippines by International Congress of Leprosy, June 14, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

REPORT OF DR. JOSÉ N. RODRIGUEZ ON ENDORSEMENT OF LEPROSY WORK IN THE PHILIPPINES BY INTERNA-TIONAL CONGRESS OF LEPROSY

[Released to the Press, June 14, 1938]

World recognition was accorded leprosy work in the Philippines by the International Congress of Leprosy which met at Cairo, Egypt, on May 21-27, 1938, when that body, in one of its resolutions, endorsed the present segregation methods adopted in the Philippines, according to the official report of Dr. José N. Rodriguez, lone Philippine delegate to the Congress. The Philippines also received the honor of being one of the five countries represented by speakers at the solemn inaugural ceremonies held in the presence of His Majesty, the King of Egypt, out of the 417 countries represented in the Congress.

The conference, which lasted a full week, was highly successful and brought to light several important discoveries connected with the control and treatment of leprosy. In his report, Dr. Rodriguez takes special note of two points brought up before the Congress which could be advantageously studied in the Philippines, to wit: the necessity of using high doses of the chaulmoogra preparations amounting to three or four times the usual doses now employed in the Philippines, in order to secure the best results; and the very encouraging results obtained by Dr. Adler of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem who has succeeded in transplanting human leprosy bacilli in Syrian hamsters, a species of rodents. In connection with the first point, Dr. Rodriguez says it is important to study how this can be done without harming patients afflicted with diseases, like tuberculosis, which are common here. With respect to Dr. Adler's experiments, Dr. Rodriguez was so impressed with them that he decided to go to Jerusalem to work in the laboratory of this well-known scientist. He has brought home with him some Syrian hamsters in the hope that these animals may be used in further inoculation experiments in the Philippines where there is plenty of fresh leprosy material so sadly lacking in Jerusalem. It should be recalled that in the study of the prevention of dread diseases not much progress can be made until this transmission of the bacilli to laboratory animals is accomplished successfully, making possible extensive experiments on the same.

Dr. Rodriguez was a member of several important committees of the Congress, and, as Senior Vice-President of the scientific session on March 25th, presided over that plenary session for one day. He was one of two delegates to the Congress formally invited by the International Center of Leprology at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to visit that institution and other leprosy centers in Brazil, at its expense. However, he could not accept the invitation due to lack of time.

Purported Summary of Complete Report of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs as Published by the Philippines Herald, June 22, 1938

JOINT PRESS STATEMENT*

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY PAUL V. MCNUTT
UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINES

AND

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

PURPORTED SUMMARY OF COMPLETE REPORT OF THE JOINT PREPARATORY COMMITTEE ON PHILIPPINE AFFAIRS AS PUBLISHED BY THE PHILIPPINES
HERALD

[Released to the Press, June 22, 1938]

Our attention has been directed to a published account in the Philippines Herald, Wednesday, June 22, purporting to be a summary of the complete report of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs published under the streamer headline: "COMPLETE JPCPA REPORT IS SUMMARIZED FOR FIRST TIME".

The only copies of the report of the J. P. C. P. A. available in the Philippines are in possession of the under signed and Filipino members of that Committee. Persons having copies of this report have not released the whole or any part of it, or any summary of it, for publication. What is printed as a purported summary of the complete report appears to be a reprint of material published at various times during the period the J. P. C. P. A. was in session. We wish to emphasize that it is not an official summary of the complete report. Had an official summary of the complete report been issued, those in the Philippines who hold copies of the official report would have received a copy of such summary. Such an official summary has not been written for publication.

Particular care has been exercised to guard against improper release of the report of the J. P. C. P. A. and we regret its occurrence in the Philippines.

(Sgd.) Paul V. McNutt
United States High Commissioner

(Sgd.) Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines

There are no copies of the report available in the Philippines except those we ourselves, the President and the High Commissioner have; and we are certain not only that these reports have not been seen by others than the persons who have them, but also that no information has been given by them to any one.

The account given of the contents of the report in the self-styled summary is incorrect and misleading. If the purpose in publishing the alleged summary is to draw from us some positive information as to what the report contains, it should be remembered that only the President of the United States and the President of the Philippines can give the information and we are certain they will do so as soon as in their judgment the public interest will thereby be served.

(Sgd.) QUINTIN PAREDES

(Sgd.) JOSÉ E. ROMERO

(Sgd.) BENITO RAZÓN

*The following statement was released jointly by Honorable Quintin Paredes, Honorable Jose F. Romero, and Honorable Benito Razon on the purported summary of complete report of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, as published by the Philippines Herald, June 22, 1938:

Having read in the Philippines Herald's issue of today an article purporting to be a summary of the report of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, we wish to state that the whole article seems to be a clever effort to piece together periodical official press releases which were made in the past, supplemented by deductions from well-known facts and by personal conclusions of the writer. This may be judged from the reference to the sugar and cordage quotas which are nothing but the approximate quotas provided in the present laws; the paragraph reciting the different chapters into which the report is supposed to be divided; and the reference to the "bearing that an advancement of the date of independence will have on the adjustment program recommended by the Committee."

Statement: President Quezon in response to the Pastoral letter of the Archbishop and Bishops of Cebu, June 24, 1938

Pahayag ni Pangulong Manuel L. Quezon:

Bilang Tugon sa Kalatas-Pastoral ng Arsobispo at mga Obispo ng Sebú

[Ipinahayag sa mga Pahayagan bago naglakbay sa Hapon noong ika-24 ng Hunyo 1938]

Napamanghâ akó sa kalakasan ng loob ng Arsobispo Metropolitano at mga Obispo sa lalawigang eklesyástiko ng Sebú, nang sa isáng panayám episkopal, ay tumukoy at magpasya silá sa isáng suliraning náuukol sa mga tungkulin at kapangyarihang kaloob ng Saligáng-Batás sa mga pinunó at sangay ng Pámahalaan ng Komonwels.

Hindí ko inalumana ang mga sábihang, ang matataas na puno ng Simbahang Katóliko sa Pilipinas ay siyáng nangagsulsol at nasa likód ng kilusáng tungód sa ikapagtitibay ng panukalang-batás na nagpáaturó ng relihiyón sa mga páaralan sa Pilipinas. Datapwa't ang kalatas-pastoral na nilagdaán ng Arsobispo Mertropolitano at ng mga Obispo Supragáneo ng lalawigang eklesyástikong yaón, ay di-máikakait na isáng katunayang nápaharáp tayo sa hulíng pulong ng ating Batasán, at náhaharáp tayo ngayon, sa is'a sa mga lalong malulubhang kapangyarihang sukat kásuungán ng pámahalaan at bayan ng Pilipinas, na dilí ibá't ang panghihimasok ng Simbahan sa mga súliranin ng Pámahalaan. Anaki bagá, ang Arsobispo at mga Obispong sumulat ng pastoral na yaon, ay mga bulág na di-nakakákita sa mga nangyayaring sigalót tuwí-tuwinang ang mga pinunó ng Simbahan ay nag-áakalang manghimasok sa mga suliranin ng Pámahalaan. Warí bagáng ang mga matá nilá'y nakapinid sa harap ng mga nangyayari sa Méhiko at sa Espanya. Tila rin namán napawí na sa kaniláng alaala ang mga aral na sukat nang nátutuhan ng kahit sino sa atin na ring pagkakápaghimagsik laban sa Espanya, na di-máikakailáng siyang naging bunga ng pagkakapisan sa pamamahala ng mga suliranin-bayan ng kapangyarihan ng mga pinunong sibil sa Pámahalaang Kastila. Isáng mabuting pagkakataon sa ganang Simbahang Katóliko sa Pilipinas, ang pangyayaring maging ang Pangulong Punong Tagapagpaganáp at maging ang Punó ng Kágawaran ng Karunungan ng Pámahalaan natin, ay kapwá katóliko. Sa kaniláng hangád na máipagmalasakit at máiligtas sa panganiib ang buóng tibay ng kapangyarihan ng Pámahalaan, ay ináakalá niláng napaglilingkurán din namá't natátangkilik ang mga sariling kapakanán ng Simbahang Katóliko; pagkápalibhasá, gaya ng násabi na sa dakong itaas, kailán at saanman ang mga pinunó ng Simbahang Katóliko'y nanghimasok o nagbantang makialám sa mga súliranin at kapakanán ng Pámahalaan, wálang wakás na nasasapit kundí kapinsalaan din ng tinurang Simbahan.

Hindí na kailángang pagpapaalalahanan pa ang mga pinunó ng mga simbahan sa Pilipinas, na ang pagká-kahiwaláy ng Simbahan at Pámahalaan sa bayang itó ay isáng katotohanan at di-hamak na haka-haká lamang, at sa ganáng bayan namán natin, ay talagáng yaring-yari na sa loob ang pasyang papanatilihin habang panahón ang pagkakáhiwalay na iyán, bilang isá sa mga pangunang pátakaran ng pámahalaan natin. Dapat niláng málaman, samakatuwid, na anumáng pagtatangkang sumira't manghimasok sa bakurang nasásaklaw ng pámahalaan tungkol sa násabing súliranin, ay hindí mapabábayaan. Kung hangád ng mga tinurang pinunó ng mga simbahan ng igalang ng pámahalaan ang kanilang mga karapatán at bigyan silá ng lahat ng uri ng pangangálagá sa malayang paggamit ng kani-kaniláng pananampalataya, ay di-lamang kailángang magsisunód silá sa mga batas na umiiral at sa mga nábabatás na kautusan ng pámahalaan, kundí kailángan din namáng tanggapín nilá't pagpitaganan ang símulain ng pagkakáhiwaláy ng Simbahan at Pámahalaan.

Sa mga súliraning talagáng pansimbahan, ang mga obispong katóliko ay maaaring magsalitá silá o hindí sa ngalan ng mga katólikong pilipino; nguni't kung náuukol na sa pagpapahayag ng niloloob o nais ng bayang pilipino, bilang isáng kabuuang polítiko, hinggil sa anumáng kapasyahán o pamalakad ng batasán o ng pámahalaan, ang mga obispong katóliko ay lalampas na namáng totoo sa hangganan ng kaniláng mga kapangyarihan kung magsisipangáhás pang mag-salita sa ngalan ng ating bayan, lalo na't ganyang sa kanilá'y may nábibilang na iláng obispong hindí man lamang mga pilipino.

Kung háhangarin kong manghimasok sa mga súliranin ng Simbahan, kagaya ng tinatangkan gawin ng mga obispong katóliko sa mga súliranin ng Pámahalaan, másasabi ko sa Arsobispo at mga Obispo ng lalawigang eklesyástiko ng Sebú, na ang kakulangán nilá sa pagbubukás ng mga panlinggong páaralan at pálaganapán ng relihiyón katóliko, ay siyáng una-unang dapat sisihin sa umiiral na kamangmangán sa sariling relihiyón ng marami sa kabataang nátuturingan pa namáng mga katoliko rin. Lahát na’y nakababatíd na maramnig bayan sa Pilipinas ang waláng páaralang pansimbahan, at marami ring walá isá mang paring katolikong tagapanḡasiwá nḡ pananampalataya. Tila ang ibig pang sisihin nḡ matataas na pinunó nḡ simbahang katoliko ay ang pámahalaan, dahil sa umanó’y kapabayaán nitó o kakulangán nḡ kaya sa pagpaganáp nḡ kaniláng tungkuling magturó nḡ mga simulain niláng sinásampalatayanan. Sa nábanggit na pastoral ay nátutukoy ang iláng salitâ nḡ ating Panḡinoog Hesukristo na nag-uutos sa mga obispo at mga paring ituró ang kanyang relihiyón, at ang pagkakásabi’y ganitó: “Turuan ninyo ang lahát nḡ bansa turuan siláng igalang ang lahát nḡ mga bagay na ipinag-uutos ko sa inyo.” Ang mga salitáng-diyós na iyán ay hindí iniuukol sa mga Hari sa mga Panḡulo o sa mga Kalihim nḡ Karununḡang-Bayan. Iyá’y iniuukol sa mga pinunong eklesyástiko o mga may-kapangyarihan nḡ simbahan.

Isáng buktot na pagbaka o paninirang-puri ang ibinunsod laban sa pámahalaan, dahil sa diumanó’y hindí namin ináalinsunod ang mga tadhana nḡ Saligáng-Batás hinggil sa pagpaturó nḡ relihiyón. Ang totoo ay ang katumbalikán nitó, gaya nḡ pinatútunayan nḡ pangyayaring, samantalang ang mga nagpatalâ sa mga páaralan upáng mâturuan nḡ relihiyón, nang taóng 1932-1933, ay 29,996 lamang, ang bilang na itó’y lumaki hanggang 187,089 nang 1937-1938. Sa loob nitóng hulíng taóng pampáaralan, may 817 páaralan ang nakapagtuturó nḡ relihiyón at mahigít sa kalahatí nḡ bilang nḡ mga batang diyá’y nanḡatataláng magsipag-aral ang nanḡaturuan nḡ relihiyón. Ganyan din sana ang nangyari sa mga nátitiráng ibá pang páaralan sa Pilipinas, kung ang mga pinunó nḡ mga simbahan ay nagsihinḡ rin disin nḡ karampatang pahintulot, yayamang alinmang páaralang hiningí niláng mapagturuan ay para-parang sa kanilá’y ipinagkaloob namán.

Bukód pa riyán, kung ang hanḡád ay magkaroon nḡ mga sarili’t sadyang oras na makapagturó nḡ relihiyón, na yaón bagáng di-makababawas o makaábala sa mga karaniwang gáwain o palátuntunan nḡ mga páaralan ang tinurang pagtuturo, máipagkakáloob ko ang mga araw nḡ Sábado at Linggo sa lahat nḡ mga ministro nḡ lahát nḡ relihiyóng umiiral dito sa Pilipinas, upáng siyá niláng mangágamit na sadyang araw. Kung mga Sábado at Linggo at hindí ginagamit ang mg páaralang-bayan sa mga karaniwang palátuntunan, dahil dito’y máipagagamit ang mga páaralang iyán sa mga nakakáibig at humuhinḡing makapagturó nḡ relihiyón. Ang ipinagbabawal nḡ mga umiiral na batás at nḡ Saligáng-Batás man, at akinsunod dito’y hindí ko mapahihintulutan, at hindí ko namán títulutan, kásakdalang magsama-sama sa paghingí ang lahát nḡ mga obispo at mga parí at mga samaháng katoliko, at anumán ang kaniláng gawin, ay iyáng magbigáy nḡ alinmang oras sa kapakanán nḡ pagtuturó nḡ relihiyón, kung ang oras na iyán ay kinákailangan sa mga talagáng layunín at karaniwang gáwain nḡ mga páaralang-bayan.

Matibay ang aking pananalig na ang bayang pilipino ay hindí makikinig at papayag na siyá’y makaladkad sa mga tunggália’t sígalutang ukol sa relihiyón, na siyáng sukat mangyayari kung matutulóy ang pagbabantâ nḡ mga pinunó nḡ simbahan, gaya nḡ násasaad sa kaniláng pastoral, na magpanibagong-kilos upáng mapalitán ang kasalukuyang lagáy at pamamalakd sa pagpaturó nḡ relihiyón, alinsunod sa itinátadhaná nḡ Saligang-Batás. Ang magiging kalagim-lagím na bunḡa nḡ ganyang pagtutunggálian nḡ bayan tungkol sa relihiyón, ay sukat nang makapanḡilabot sa bawa’t pilipino; sapagka’t waláng-salang itóng ating pinaka-iiróg na lupá’y magiging isáng lárangan nḡ digmang matitiná nḡ dugo nḡ atin na ring bayan.

Statement: President Quezon on Pastoral Letter of the Metropolitan Archbishop and Suffragan Bishops of the Ecclesiastical Province of Cebu on Religious Instruction in the Philippines, June 24, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

PASTORAL LETTER OF THE METROPOLITAN ARCHBISHOP AND SUFFRAGAN BISHOPS OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL PROVINCE OF CEBU ON RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN THE PHILIPPINES

[Released to the Press, June 24, 1938]

I am amazed at the boldness of the Metropolitan Arch bishop and Suffragan Bishops of the Ecclesiastical Province of Cebu in taking up at an episcopal conference a matter concerning the constitutional duties and prerogatives of the officials and branches of the Government of the Commonwealth.

I had so far ignored charges made to the effect that the hierarchy of the Catholic Church in the Philippines had instigated and was behind the movement for the enactment of the bill regarding religious instruction in the Philippines. But the pastoral letter signed by the Metropolitan Archbishop of Cebu and the Suffragan Bishops of that ecclesiastical province is an incontrovertible evidence that we did face at the last session of the Assembly, and we do face now, one of the most menacing evils that can confront the Government and people of the Philippines; namely, the interference of the Church in the affairs of the State. It seems that the archbishop and the bishops who have written this pastoral letter are blind to the lessons of history, including our own during the Spanish regime. Being a catholic, myself, I am less interested in preserving the independence of the Church from the State than I am in preserving the independence of the Government from the Church.

It should be unnecessary to remind the ecclesiastical authorities in the Philippines that the separation of Church and State in this country is a reality and not a mere theory, and that as far as our people are concerned, it is forever settled that this separation shall be maintained as one of the cardinal tenets of our Government. The ecclesiastical authorities should realize, therefore, that any attempt on their part to interfere with matters that are within the province of the Government will not be tolerated. If the said ecclesiastical authorities desire to have the Government respect their rights and afford them every kind of protection in the free exercise of their religion, they must not only abide by the laws and the lawful orders of the Government, but they must also acknowledge and respect the principle of the separation of Church and State.

On matters purely ecclesiastical, the Catholic bishops may speak for the Filipino catholics; but when it comes to expressing the will of the Filipino people as a political entity on any matter concerning legislation or governmental measures, the Catholic bishops, some of whom are not Filipinos, are assuming too much when they pretend to speak for our people as they do in the pastoral letter when they say that the majority of the Filipino people are demanding the enactment of the bill which I have vetoed. The fact that the majority of the National Assembly voted for the said bill does not necessarily prove that the majority of the people are for it. It only proves that a majority of the members of the National Assembly were for the bill.

If I were inclined to interfere with the affairs of the Church, as the Catholic bishops are attempting to do with affairs of the State, I would tell the Archbishop and the bishops of the ecclesiastical province of Cebu that the lack of Sunday schools and catechists to teach the Catholic religion is mainly responsible for the deplorable ignorance of the Catholic youth on their own religion. Everybody knows many towns in the Philippines where parochial schools do not exist and where there is not even one single Catholic priest. It seems that the high authorities of the Catholic Church would blame the Government for the negligence or inability of the ecclesiastical authorities to perform their duty to teach the doctrine of their faith. The words of our Lord Jesus Christ cited in the pastoral letter, "Teach ye all nations . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," are not addressed to Kings or Presidents, but to the apostles and their successors—the bishops.

A very unfair campaign has been launched against the Government, making it appear that we are not complying with the provisions of the Constitution regarding optional teaching of religious instruction. The truth is the opposite, as evidenced by the fact that while the enrollment in classes in religious instruction during the academic year 1932-1933 was only 29,996, this had increased to 187,089 in the academic year 1937-1938. During this last school year, in the 817 schools where religious instruction was given, more than one-half of the children enrolled in said schools received religious instruction.

Moreover, if the desire is to have hours exclusively devoted to religious instruction in the public schools, so that the regular school activities may not interfere with said instruction, I am placing Saturdays and Sundays at the disposal of all the ministers of all the religions existing in the Philippines. On Saturdays and Sundays, the public schools are not being used for school purposes and, therefore, they may be used for religious instruction if it is so requested. What is prohibited in the existing legislation and by the Constitution, and which, therefore, I may not allow, is that any hour needed for public school purposes be devoted to religious instruction.

It is my earnest conviction that the Filipino people will not heed the call to drag them into a religious controversy such as would result if the threat of the ecclesiastical authorities as stated in their pastoral letter, to wage anew another campaign to change the present status of optional religious instruction as provided in the Constitution, is carried out.

Statement: President Quezon on Ad Interim Appointments as Justices of the Court of Appeals of Honorable Pedro Tuason, Honorable Hermogenes Reyes and Honorable Marceliano Montemayor, June 24, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

AD INTERIM APPOINTMENTS AS JUSTICES OF THE COURT OF APPEALS OF HONORABLE PEDRO TUASON, HONOR-ABLE HERMOGENES REYES AND HONORABLE
MARCELIANO MONTEMAYOR

[Released to the Press, June 24, 1938]

The President has today issued ad interim appointments as Justices of the Court of Appeals to the following:

Hon. Pedro Tuason, Solicitor General
Hon. Hermogenes Reyes, Judge of the Court of First Instance of Pampanga, and Hon. Marceliano Montemayor, Judge of the Court of First Instance of Manila.

The above appointments were made upon recommendation of the Secretary of Justice, who submitted his recommendation to the Chief Executive after consultation with the Supreme Court, and the President and Vice-President of the local councils of the American Bar Association and the Philippine Bar Association.

Justice Pedro Tuason has a long and distinguished service in the Government. Starting as Provincial Fiscal of Agusan and Surigao in 1913, he was successively promoted Provincial Fiscal of Ilocos Sur, Assistant Attorney in the Bureau of Justice, and Judge of the 15th Judicial District. His appointment to the latter position in 1922 started his career in the Judiciary. From 1922 up to his promotion to the position of Solicitor General in 1936, he served as Judge of the Court of First Instance in various provinces and, lastly, in Manila. Justice Tuason would have been appointed to the Court of Appeals upon the organization of this Court, but in view of the fact that the Government needed his services as Solicitor General, he was prevailed upon to accept this position. In justice to him, however, it is believed that his promotion to the Court of Appeals should not be further postponed. Hence, his appointment now.

Justice Hermogenes Reyes was appointed Provincial Fiscal of Bulacan in 1904. In 1907, he was elected member of the Provincial Board of Bulacan. In 1914, he was appointed Judge of the Court of First Instance of the Second Judicial District, and since then, he has been in the Judiciary. His promotion to the Court of Appeals is a just recognition of the valuable services he has rendered to the country since 1904 and in the Judiciary since 1914.

Justice Marceliano Montemayor started in the Government as law clerk. He was appointed Assistant Attorney in the Bureau of Justice in 1918, from which position he was promoted as Judge of the Court of First Instance of the Mountain Province. He was appointed Judge of the Court of First Instance of the Fourth Judicial District, comprising Manila, in 1936.

Statement: Purpose of the President's trip to Japan, June 29, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PURPOSE OF THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP TO JAPAN

[Released to the Press, June 29, 1938]

Although President Quezon is traveling- incognito, yet upon his arrival in Kobe he was met aboard the S.S. Kongo Maru, by a representative of the Foreign Office, the Chief of the American Bureau, the Governor of the Prefecture, and the Mayor of Kobe, all in cutaways and with silk hats. There were also representatives of the Japanese-Philippine Society and different Japanese ship ping and commercial concerns. Likewise the American Vice Consul was aboard to meet the President.

On arrival, the President's aide-de-camp gave out the following statement:

"President Quezon has come to Japan for the sole purpose of taking a short vacation. He will remain in this beautiful country for ten days and will visit some of your best known summer resorts. He has chosen to make his voyage on a freighter and. is returning on another freighter because he is shunning all social affairs that may interfere with his much needed rest. The party had a most enjoyable trip across. President Quezon is very glad to be in Japan once more.

"The members of the President's party are Major Hutter, United States Army, his physician; Major Nieto, Philippine Army, Aide-de-Camp; and Mr. Canceran, his stenographer. Also traveling with the President are Assemblyman Buencamino, Chairman, Committee on Agriculture of the Assembly, and Dr. Fabella, Commissioner of Health.

"President Quezon and his party will spend the day in Kobe and will proceed to Hakone tomorrow. From there he will go to Tokyo to leave his card at the Foreign Office and also at the American Embassy and then visit General Reyes at the Hospital. From Tokyo he will go to Nikko, well known summer resort, and from Nikko to a hot spring near Nagasaki where he will stay until the tenth of July, when he will sail back to Manila."

Statement: President Quezon on alleged negotiations with the Japanese Government for the neutralization of the Philippines, July 19, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

ALLEGED NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE JAPANESE GOVERN-MENT FOR THE NEUTRALIZATION OF THE PHILIPPINES

[Released to the Press, July 19, 1938]

On the occasion of my recent trip to Japan, one of the American press correspondents, gifted with a highly fantastic imagination, sent a dispatch to his newspaper in New York to the effect that I had made that trip for the purpose of starting negotiations with the Japanese Government looking towards the neutralization of the Philippines. The absurdity of the news should have been enough to discredit it, but unfortunately there are many people who, when reading stories printed in the newspapers, fail to use a critical judgment and accept what they read as gospel truth.

In the first place, it should be borne in mind that the Government of the United States has reserved to itself the control and supervision of the foreign affairs of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, and, therefore, any negotiation having for its object the neutralization of the Philippines will have to be conducted by the Government of the United States with such powers as the United States may choose to invite to participate in that compact. In the second place, it is a matter of common knowledge that on several occasions spokesmen from the Foreign Office of the Imperial Government of Japan have let it be known, after the enactment by Congress of the Independence Law which authorizes the President to negotiate a treaty for the neutralization of the Philippines, that Japan was ready and willing, if invited, to be one of the signatories to such a treaty of neutralization. Japanese statesmen seem unanimous in their sympathy for the idea of neutralizing the Philippines. Why then should I go to Japan to learn of something about which I had no right to inquire, and which was no longer a secret to any one? In addition, I may state that I am not one of those who entertain any misgivings as to the attitude of Japan towards the Philippines when we shall have become independent.

Our preparation for National Defense is not due to our fear that any nation has untoward designs against our independence and territorial integrity, but rather to the fact that, in any event, it is the primary function of every government to insure its own protection, and that universal military training is wholesome to the youth of the land, for it stimulates national discipline and patriotism amongst the trainees.

The security of the Philippines, in my opinion, will depend more upon the Filipino people themselves and their government than upon the designs of foreign powers. Fortunately for us we are an archipelago. We neither constitute a menace to any nation, nor can we be of help to any other in its self-defense, unless we become a part of that nation upon our own initiative and will. We are not so extraordinarily rich in natural resources as to make it worthwhile for any nation to conquer our territory at an enormous cost, and our trade can always be had through mutual concessions. There is, therefore, nothing to justify the belief that a wanton aggression against us may be contemplated by any foreign power.

This not to say, however, that we should feel perfectly free to do as we please in our relations with foreign nations without regard to their rights and the rights of their nationals living in or trading with the Philippines. The time is past when any nation can enclose itself behind bidding walls. We are in the world and must live with the world. We must conceive and devise, adopt and execute our national policies with a clear vision and a full consciousness of the realities of the present state of international relationship. We must, above all, be fair and just, tolerant and neutral, so as not to give an excuse on the part of any foreign power to interfere with our affairs or to charge us with jeopardizing the rights of other nations.

I am persuaded that America in granting us independence does it upon the assumption that she has stayed in the Philippines long enough and has given the Filipinos sufficient training to permit them to assume full responsibility for their national affairs, in accordance with the rules and dictates of international justice and amity. America, once she has granted us independence, will not attempt to continue guiding our destiny, nor will she assume responsibility for our mistakes or misdeeds. Every sign points to the conclusion that when America leaves the Philippines she will do it feeling that she has discharged her duties fully and satisfactorily towards the Filipinos. Indeed, the President of the United States went to the extent of appointing, in consultation with me, a Joint Preparatory Committee, charged with the duty of studying and submitting recommendations as to future trade relations between America and the Philippines, in order the better to insure the economic stability of the latter, which, under the terms and provisions of the Independence Act, does not seem to be adequately assured. But it must be remembered that this Joint Preparatory Committee was appointed with definite instructions, that in formulating its recommendations it should have as its ultimate goal the entire elimination of all trade preferences between the two countries after a definite period of time. So, if and when the Congress of the United States shall have enacted into law the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee, the American people may feel that they have done the best that they could do under the circumstances, towards the consummation of the colonial experiment unprecedented in history, to help a foreign people attain the status and dignity of an independent nation.

When we are independent, our fate will be entirely in our hands. We look forward to the future with confidence and hope, knowing that it will be our policy to so conduct ourselves as to win the respect and goodwill of all the nations of the world.

The unfortunate conflict wherein millions of people are now engaged in this part of the globe cannot but arouse our deep sympathy for the sufferings that such conflict brings in its wake.

It is, of course, not for me to pass judgment on the issues involved, but I trust it is not out of place for me to express the hope shared by the people of my country, that this conflict may soon end, and that, when it does end, peace and mutual understanding will be permanently established among the nations of the Far East.

Statement of President Quezon on the Revision of the Present System of Taxation, July 22, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

REVISION OF THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF TAXATION

[Released to the Press, July 22, 1938]

The President met the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee of the National Assembly at 10 o'clock this morning, and it was agreed to postpone consideration of all tax measures for the next regular session of the National Assembly.

In view of the fact that actual collections to date, as reported by the Secretary of Finance, have exceeded the estimates in the Budget, and that, therefore, there will be sufficient funds which may be appropriated for the current needs of the Bureau of Education and other urgent services of the Government, it was the consensus that more time should be taken for a thorough revision of the system of taxation of the Philippines, giving proper consideration not only to the necessity of raising adequate revenues, but also to the problem of relating fiscal proposals to the social economic policies of the Government.

The President also announced to the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee his intention to appoint a Commission, to be composed of members of the National Assembly, officials of the Executive Departments, and private citizens, who will study this revision and make recommendations, having in mind the anticipated increase in the expenses of the Government during the next ten years as a consequence of the political and economic changes that are to come, and of the greater activities of the Government, particularly in education, sanitation, social welfare, and the maintenance of the highways to be built in accordance with the plan approved by the National Assembly at its last session. Having in view these natural increases in the expenditures of the Government, the Commission will be expected to devise a program of taxation which will provide not merely adequate revenues and a more equitable distribution of the burden but an element of stability and certainty by making it unnecessary in the future to make frequent changes in the revenue laws.

Statement: President Quezon on Reorganization of National Economic Council, July 22, 1938

Press Statement
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On reorganization of National Economic Council

[Released to the Press on July 22, 1938]

In view of the fact that the term of the present members of the National Economic Council has expired, I have decided to make new appointments to the Council. The Council will be headed by Assemblyman Manuel Roxas of Capiz, who, in an agreement with me, will not seek reelection. This has been considered necessary by both Assemblyman Roxas and myself, because of the fact that it is not a good policy to appoint a member of the National Assembly to any Government Board or Commission which would require so much of his time and attention as to preclude him from discharging fully his duties in the Assembly. The other members of the National Economic Council will be the Secretary of Finance, the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, who are the three heads of Departments of the Government directly concerned with the national economy, particularly with the industrial, commercial, and agricultural development of the country; the Chairman of the Board of Directors, Philippine National Bank; the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Development Company; the Chairman of the National Transportation Board; the President and Manager of the Manila Railroad Company; the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Rice and Corn Corporation; the Dean of the College of Agriculture, University of the Philippines; Rafael Alunan, formerly Secretary of Agriculture and Natural Resources and Secretary of Finance; and Miguel Unson, formerly Secretary of Finance and until recently Chairman of the Government Survey Board.

It will be seen that I have appointed to this Council, not only the heads of the Departments directly responsible for those governmental activities that have to do with the national economy, but also the heads of the Government organizations which are engaged in activities dealing with agriculture, credit, industry, and transportation. I did not consider it convenient to appoint at this time representatives of private interests, because the membership of the National Economic Council is limited to fifteen, thus making it impossible for me to have every private interest or element of the community represented in the Council. To avoid, therefore, any appearance of discrimination against any one interest or class of the community, I have adopted the policy of not appointing any special representative of such elements. This, however, will not preclude the National Economic Council from seeking from time to time the advice of such persons, either as individuals or in their capacity as representatives of the particular activity in which they are engaged, and in this manner they may offer suggestions or make studies and otherwise take part in the investigations and deliberations of the Council. It is my understanding Chairman Roxas will do this.

The names of the members of the National Economic Council, as constituted, are as follows:

Hon. MANUEL ROXAS, Member, National Assembly, Chairman;

Hon. ANTONIO DE LAS ALAS, in his capacity as Secretary of Finance, Member;

Hon. EULOGIO RODRIGUEZ, in his capacity as Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce, Member;

Hon. RAMON TORRES, in his capacity as Secretary of Labor, Member;

Hon. JOSÉ YULO, in his capacity as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Philippine National Bank, Member;

Hon. ANTONIO DE LAS ALAS, in his capacity as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Development Co., Member;

Hon. MARIANO J. CUENCO, in his capacity as Chairman of the National Transportation Board, Member;

Mr. JOSÉ PAEZ, in his capacity as President, Manila Railroad Co., Member;

Hon. VICENTE SINGSON ENCARNACION, in his capacity as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Rice and Corn Corporation, Member;

Dr. BIENVENIDO GONZALES, in his capacity as Dean of the College of Agriculture, U. P., Member;

Hon. RAFAEL R. ALUNAN, in his capacity as Philippine Sugar Administrator, Member;

Hon. MIGUEL UNSON, former Chairman, Government Survey Board, Member.

APPOINTMENT OF HONORABLE SIXTO DE LA COSTA AS JUDGE OF FIRST INSTANCE OF MANILA

[Released to the Press, August 1, 1938]

Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Justice, I have today submitted to the Commission on Appointments, for confirmation, the appointment of Honorable Sixto de la Costa to fill the vacancy caused by the disapproval of the ad interim appointment of former Judge Zandueta. This course has been decided upon after due consideration of the requirements of the judicial service which have been unduly hampered by the continued existence of this vacancy since last May, due to the pendency of the certiorari proceedings before the Supreme Court, in deference to which it was deemed only proper not to take any action that might be interpreted as interfering with the judicial determination of the pretended title of former Judge Zandueta to his office. The injection of many unnecessary incidents in the case, however, which were finally disposed of by the Supreme Court, has so delayed the consideration of said case, that the interest of the service cannot be sacrificed any longer, especially as it is plainly admitted by former Judge Zandueta himself that the principal question at issue can better and more properly be determined after the appointment of his successor, through the institution of quo warranto proceedings.

Statement: President Quezon on Reorganization of the Provincial and Municipal Police Forces, August 3, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

REORGANIZATION OF THE PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL POLICE FORCES

[Released to the Press, August 3, 1938]

The reorganization of provincial and municipal police forces, as embodied in Executive Order No. 156, is another step which the Government is taking in line with the policy enunciated by me soon after my assumption of office, that under my administration there will be more government and less politics.

One of the greatest handicaps with which democratic governments have been burdened in the past is politics in government. Political parties are indispensable to the democratic system; and political parties, to accomplish one of their purposes, which is to elect candidates to office, have had to create party organizations. These party organizations have invariably attempted, and in many cases have succeeded, in interfering with purely governmental functions. Whenever governments have been run by party organizations, the interest of the party has been placed above the public interest. In such cases the result has been governmental inefficiency, dishonesty, injustice, and all sorts of abuses. When these evils have reached, as in certain countries they did reach, a point where they became intolerable, the democratic system itself has been discredited in the eyes of the people, who came to believe that said evils were essentially and inevitably a vice inherent in the system. Hence the people finally substituted autocracy for democracy. It is my sincere opinion that in the fight now raging between fascism and democracy, unless democracy finds a way of separating government from politics and makes it its business to give the people an efficient, effective, and just government, fascism will be successful.

If all believers in and lovers of democracy, whether in government or out of government, want to save democracy, they must unite in doing away with the evils of politics in democratic governments.

In the past there has been in the Philippines plenty of politics in government, although, to our credit, not so much as in other democratic countries. Nonetheless there has been enough politics in government to make the people believe that the whole government was infested with politics. Since the establishment of the Commonwealth, I have taken steps in looking toward the complete divorce of government from politics. My first Executive Order, outside of the one requiring all officials and armed forces of the Government to take an oath of loyalty to the Constitution and of allegiance to the United States, was the assumption on my part of the direct command of the Philippine Constabulary, which at that time was under the Department of the Interior, in accordance with the existing law. The Secretary of the Interior then was the Honorable Teofilo Sison, now Justice of the Court of Appeals. The whole country is witness to the fact that Mr. Justice Sison, as Secretary of the Interior, never used the Constabulary for any political purpose. In fact the service rendered by Secretary Sison in the Department of the Interior was so free from partiality in the face of political exigencies and demands that, in recognition of his unyielding sense of justice, I appointed him to the Court of Appeals. But I took away from Secretary Sison the command of the Constabulary despite the fact that he had not given the slightest ground for this action simply because the Department of the Interior was looked upon, as it is looked upon today, by the people as the one political department of the Government.

The action taken was for the purpose of impressing the people that I was determined to have the Constabulary absolutely free from any political influence.

Following this step, at a later date, I placed the provincial and municipal treasurers who were under the Department of the Interior, under the Department of Finance, which is admittedly a purely financial office.

The issuance of Executive Order No. 156 is the latest step leading to the same objective. Under the Act, which the National Assembly has recently approved, converting the Philippine Constabulary into the National Police and returning the local police to their former status, insofar as the ordinary extent of their duties for law enforcement is concerned, I am considering to place the supervision of the provincial and municipal police, as well as the Constabulary, under the Department of Justice.

The Department of Justice is vested with the duty of law enforcement and prosecution of violators of the law, and therefore it is right and proper that the agencies of the Government created to enforce the law and prosecute its violators should be placed under this Department. Just as the people have looked upon the Department of the Interior as the political department of the Government, so have they looked upon the Department of Justice as the one nonpolitical department of the Government. In fact, it is well known that in the selection of Secretaries of Justice there have been no political considerations. Former Chief Justice Victorino Mapa and the present Justice José Abad Santos had been Secretaries of Justice. Moreover, the provincial fiscals are now under the Department of Justice; but the provincial fiscals can do very little in prosecuting criminals without the help of the Constabulary and the local police, and until all these agencies have been placed under one department we shall face the same difficulties that we are now facing in the enforcement of the law and the prosecution of its violators.

So the steps that I have taken in taking away from the Department of the Interior those governmental agencies which should be entirely divorced from any consideration of politics, have been taken not because of lack of confidence in the Secretaries concerned, nor because I had reason to believe that they were using those agencies for political purposes, but because I wanted to take positive action showing the people that we are divorcing from politics those governmental functions which should have absolutely nothing to do with politics. No members of my Cabinet have deserved my confidence more than ex-Secretary Teofilo Sison and Secretary Elpidio Quirino.

Statement of President Quezon on the Creation of the National Sugar Board, August 17, 1938

Press Statement
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the Creation of the National Sugar Board

[Released to the Press, August 17, 1938]

In view of the inability of the National Assembly to consider the proposed measure for the stabilization and the readjustment of the sugar industry on account of lack of time, I have today created the National Sugar Board for the purpose of carrying out, in part, the objectives of the said measure.

It is regretted that in spite of repeated remonstrances of the Administration against many of the manifest injustices suffered by certain elements of the industry under present conditions, especially in regard to laborers in tin sugarcane fields, there has been a lack of interest on the part of those responsible for such a situation to correct such a state of affairs. The Administration, therefore, found it necessary to take the initiative in the matter, and proposed the enactment of a measure which was expected to solve the problems confronting the industry.

As, at any rate, the solution of the problems pointed out in my message to the National Assembly, dated August 12, 1938, requires a complete survey of the sugar industry by a competent body representing the various interests in the industry, the creation of a National Sugar Board to undertake that survey has been decided upon. It is hoped that upon the creation of this body, the component units of the industry will voluntarily take the necessary action to correct any unfairness in the relationship now existing among them, so that the industry as a whole may be placed in a position to cope with the graver problems ahead of it and at the same time assist this Government in its efforts to solve the social problems that now confront the country.

In line with the policy of the measure proposed by me for enactment by the National Assembly, I have already approved and authorized the plan submitted by the Board of Directors of the Binalbagan Estate, Incorporated, the only operator of a sugar-producing mill under government control, to set aside, from year to year, from the proceeds of the share in the sugar manufactured by it, an amount equivalent to 5 per cent of its gross production, for the purpose of ameliorating the condition of farm laborers in the mill district in which it is conducting its business. No provision is necessary for the amelioration of planters, because they are now receiving a 60 per cent participation in the sugar manufactured, and any relief that they may need should come from the landowners, in those cases where the lands upon which they are working are merely held by them under lease.

It is expected that the creation of the National Sugar Board, with the power of conciliation with which it is invested, will initiate the process which will eventually lead to the solution of the problems facing the sugar industry.

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

LABOR TERRORISM AND SOCIAL JUSTICE

[Released to the Press, August 27, 1938]

I wish to congratulate you on the occasion of the celebration of your convention representing the antiradical elements of Philippine labor. I am not against any philosophy that would preach any social or economic doctrine. But I am against, uncompromisingly against, any and all individuals or groups of individuals that would pit one class of society against another, or would seek to promote and attain their selfish ends through acts of violence or would try to cajole the people into subservience through terrorism. Nothing can do more harm to the cause of Labor than the blind schemes of self-seeking radicals. In fact harm has already been done in the mounting opinion that the adoption of pro-labor measures would only serve to pamper labor. I need not mention the harm done to business and to the public in the interruption of the normal functioning of industry and the public services in some instances caused by unnecessary strikes, and the deterring effect of such uncalled for industrial strife among the investors. I want, therefore, to give labor this warning: The Government has formulated a program of social justice and is determined to carry it out. But social justice means justice for all, laborers and employers, the poor and the rich, alike. Over and above the interest of any class or group, is the interest of the people: and in the upholding of the supremacy of public interest there will be no hesitation and no compromise. I shall use all the power in my hand towards this end, in the firm belief that in doing so, I am keeping faith with democratic ideals and institutions and promoting the orderly development of our national life, for the benefit of all, most especially of the laboring masses themselves.

PRICE OF RICE SET BY THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE NARIC

[Released to the Press, September 6, 1938]

I have considered the report submitted by the committee created by the National Economic Council to investigate the causes of the prevailing price of rice, and I have discussed this report with the National Economic Council.

According to the report of the Committee, the prevailing price of rice is not exorbitant, and it appears that the NARIC has good reasons for setting the cost of rice at the price at which the NARIC is now selling it. I have come to the conclusion that I would not be justified in interfering with the decision of the Board of Directors of the NARIC in this matter, and I do not intend to do so. I am satisfied that the Board has a very difficult problem at hand; that it has been carrying out its duties in accordance with the purpose of the executive order which created this Company; and that it deserves not only the support of the Government but also the recognition equally of producers and consumers for the work that it has done. This matter, as far as I am concerned, is settled, and I feel that the Board of Directors of the NARIC should be allowed to continue managing the affairs of the Corporation without interference on my part, unless it can be shown that it has abused its discretion. No evidence to this effect has been submitted to me.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE LATE CECILIO APOSTOL

[Released to the Press, September 9, 1938]

The death of Cecilio Apostol leaves a void in our world of letters which will be hard to fill. He was one of the foremost literary figures of his time recognized not only here but also abroad. Indeed, it can be said that with him Spanish literature reached its highest achievement in the Philippines, thus making it possible for this country to play its part in the glorification of a great cultural heritage.

Apostol sang of the glories of his race in epic lines of unexampled beauty.

I wish to commend to all students of literature in this country, especially to the English-speaking ones, the writings of Cecilio Apostol, not only for the precision of his technique as our undisputed master of Spanish, but also for the wealth of patriotic inspiration that they impart to us all. And to the youth of the land, let me offer the simple ways and inimitable modesty of this truly great son of the Filipino race.

Assemblyman Oppus of Leyte came to see the President today and urged that immediate steps be taken to relieve the deplorable condition of the hemp regions in line with the purposes of the law which has been passed by the National Assembly. Assemblyman Oppus submitted to the President a letter from Mr. Lorenzo Escaño, a prominent businessman of the Provinces of Leyte and Cebu, and the President has referred the letter to the National Development Company. The President told Assemblyman Oppus that the National Development Company had been instructed to organize the corporation that will carry out the policies of the law enacted by the Assembly, and that the reason why the corporation so far has not been actually organized and has not started to function is the designation of former Governor Locsin of Albay by the National Development Company to first make a study and submit a report as to the best means of helping the hemp industry.

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

LARGER FREE QUOTA OF REFINED SUGAR FOR EXPORTATION TO U. S.

[Released to the Press, October 7, 1938]

The news item appearing in one of this morning's papers to the effect that negotiations are now being carried on between the United States Government and the Government of the Commonwealth, through the United States High Commissioner, with a view to securing a larger free quota of refined sugar for exportation to the United States, is absolutely groundless. The Government of the Commonwealth is not seeking an increase in the amount of refined sugar that may be exported to the United States, free of duty. It is not even asking for an increase in the quota of raw sugar exported to the United States. The Government of the Commonwealth is satisfied with the present quotas both for raw and refined sugar.

The purchase of two sugar refineries by the National Development Company has been made in order to protect producers and consumers from unfair practices by dealers and speculators operating in the domestic market, and to assist in the readjustment of the sugar industry. Moreover, the owners of these refineries wanted to dispose of their property under terms and conditions which the National Development Company believed offered an opportunity for a profitable investment. It has not been definitely decided, however, whether the National Development Company will continue to operate these refineries or dispose of them to private parties under conditions which will adequately safeguard the interest of both the Government and the sugar industry without loss. This question will be decided later and, meanwhile, the Government will consider any reasonable offer for these properties.

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PURCHASE OF THE DILIMAN ESTATE AND ANOTHER HACIENDA

[Released to the Press, October 8, 1938]

The news item appearing in yesterday's afternoon newspapers to the effect that the Government had purchased two large haciendas, one for the University of the Philippines and the other for a subdivision project for the benefit of the employees of the Government, is not entirely correct.

One of these haciendas, comprising about 600 hectares, is now owned by the Philippine National Bank. It was acquired by the Bank in payment of an outstanding debt. Should the Government finally decide to authorize the transfer of the University of the Philippines, this land is considered one of the most desirable and convenient locations by officials of the University who are now studying this question. Final decision lies with the National Assembly and the President, and with the Board of Regents of the University.

The other hacienda is the Diliman Estate belonging to the Tuason family. It comprises about 1,600 hectares and is situated within a few hundred meters from Calle España.

One of the projects that are closest to the heart of the President is the improvement of the living conditions of the laborers and low-salaried employees, be they employed by the Government or by private concerns. The Government believes that it owes a duty to this class of its citizenry to help them live under wholesome and healthy surroundings, at a cost which shall be within their income. Proper home atmosphere is essential for the poor as well as for the rich, particularly for the children. Social welfare can only be built on decent homes.

All bids must be accompanied by a cash or certified check in the sum of fifty thousand pesos (P50,000.00) conditioned that the bidder will enter into an agreement with the Government to fulfill the terms thereof if the bid is accepted.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids, to waive any informality therein, or to accept such bids as may be considered most advantageous to the Commonwealth Government.

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

DECISION ON THE ADMINISTRATIVE CHARGES FILED AGAINST UNDERSECRETARY GOMEZ OF FINANCE

[Released to the Press, October 10, 1938]

Judge Enage, who is making preliminary inquiries on the charges preferred against Undersecretary Gomez, of the Department of Finance, has made the report that the news published in the afternoon papers today advancing his decision on the case, is not correct. Judge Enage has not yet reported his findings to the President and nothing, therefore, can be advanced regarding this case. Whether Undersecretary Gomez will be exonerated or not from the charges filed against him is a matter for the President to decide.

Statement: President Quezon on Compensation of the Commonwealth Military Adviser, October 10, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

COMPENSATION OF THE COMMONWEALTH MILITARY ADVISER

[Released to the Press, October 10, 1938]

The figures given by Mr. José Topacio Nueno in his statement to the press after the Popular Front-Young Philippines meeting in Tondo last night, regarding the salary paid General Douglas MacArthur, military adviser to the Government, are entirely incorrect. As a matter of fact, General MacArthur's salary is considerably less than that of an officer of his rank in the British Army. It is much less than what is reported to have been paid military advisers employed by other countries, such as China and Bolivia.

The salary of the military adviser was fixed by the Commonwealth Government, General MacArthur having offered to serve in this position without pay if necessary.

The rates of compensation paid technical experts of the Government are much less than those paid to similar experts employed in business enterprises in the United States.

The Government does not wish to publish the full details regarding these salaries in deference to those gentlemen who are thus employed, who are certainly entitled to the same privacy in such matters as is customary in commercial life, the positions not being permanent Government posts but temporary and entirely professional.

Statement: President Quezon on further postponement of Census Day, October 11, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

FURTHER POSTPONEMENT OF CENSUS DAY

[Released to the Press, October 11, 1938]

Census Day, set for November 15, 1938, has been postponed by His Excellency, the President of the Philippines, to January 1, 1939.

The President has decided that Census Day be further postponed in order that the tremendous task of collecting data on the social, economic, cultural, and other phases of the life of the people of the Philippines, may be completely removed from all political influence and in order to prevent the appointment of prospective census supervisors and enumerators from having any effect on the forthcoming elections.

As January 1, 1939, will be almost two months after the elections, its designation as Census Day will give the Commission of the Census more time to consider the appointment of the best qualified persons available for the positions of census supervisors and enumerators. Ample time will also be afforded for the training of census supervisors and enumerators in order to acquaint them with their duties.

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On Designation of the Vice President as special representative of the President in the United States

[Released to the Press, October 15, 1938]

I am sending the Vice-President to the United States as my special representative to present the views of the Government of the Commonwealth regarding contemplated legislation covering the report of the Joint Preparatory Committee. The Resident Commissioner is, of course, the representative of this Government in its relations with the Government of the United States, and the Vice-President is not going to perform those duties, but his activities will be specially devoted to that one task and others which relate to the functions of the Department of Public Instruction. The Resident Commissioner, who is informed of the mission which I have given to the Vice-President as my special envoy, will naturally cooperate with the Vice-President.

APPOINTMENT OF BRIGADIER GENERAL GUILLERMO B.
FRANCISCO AS CHIEF OF CONSTABULARY

[Released to the Press, October 17, 1938]

In recognition of his excellent service in the Constabulary as well as in the Philippine Army during his command of Camp Murphy, I have appointed Brigadier General Guillermo B. Francisco Chief of Constabulary. Under the existing laws, while the officers and men of the Constabulary possess the same status as the officers and men of the Army so that by order of the Commander-in-Chief they are interchangeable, the Constabulary, however, is the national police force vested with police powers, and as such national police force, is an organization entirely separate from and independent of the Army. The Chief of Constabulary is directly under the President of the Philippines and is responsible to no other superior.

COMMUTATION OF THE PRISON SENTENCE OF FRANK LOPEZ

[Released to the Press, October 17, 1938]

Frank Lopez alias John Halstead alias Tom Simms alias San Anderson alias Sun Light alias San Sanderson, a parolee from the Folsom Penitentiary of California, U. S. A., who, it will be remembered, at the point of a gun held up an American businessman in this City and compelled the latter to issue a check for more than P3,000, the proceeds of which were turned over to the bandit, and who was confined in Bilibid to serve a total sentence of 1 year, 2 months, and 3 days, and 11 days of subsidiary imprisonment, by reason of his conviction in two cases for robbery, one for theft and one for illegal possession of a firearm, has just left this port on the S.S. President Coolidge which sailed for San Francisco early this morning.

His total sentence will expire on October 30 of this year, but His Excellency, the President, commuted said sentence on October 16 to enable the proper authorities to transfer this American convict to the United States on the above named trans-Pacific boat. The day of the sailing of said vessel being the nearest to the date of his release from Bilibid upon the expiration of his sentence, it was deemed advisable that his confinement in Bilibid be shortened by commutation by a few days. He is traveling on the S.S. President Coolidge in the custody of the Captain of the ship who has been designated as Deputy Marshal, and upon arrival in San Francisco he will be turned over to an agent of the California Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, arrangements to this effect having been made with the California authorities through the Office of the United States High Commissioner who has kindly and cooperated with the Philippine Government in the happy settlement of this matter.

INAUGURATION OF THE CITY OF BACOLOD

[Released to the Press, October 19, 1938]

I am happy to congratulate the people of Occidental Negros on the inauguration of the City of Bacolod. I have been watching the growth of this town and the tremendous progress it has achieved; and I signed the bill changing its status from that of a mere town to a city, because I believe that the change is just and deserved.

I feel certain that Bacolod will be one of the most prosperous and progressive cities of the Philippines, just as it has been one of the leading towns in the past. If the people of this province will continue cooperating with the government of this new city in the same manner as they have done in the past, I am sure that this prediction will come true. I hope that this will be the case, for I know that the man whom I have chosen to head the new city deserves the cooperation of the people of Occidental Negros to the limit.

Again, I congratulate them on this great event in their province.

[Released to the Press, November 2, 1938]

The address to the nation of President Quezon on the Grandstand at the New Luneta on November 15, at 11 o'clock in the morning, immediately after the civil and military parade, on the occasion of the third anniversary of the Commonwealth of the Philippines will be broadcast by remote control over Stations KZRM and KZIB simultaneously on long wave for the Philippine audience and on short wave for interested listeners in Far Eastern countries and other parts of the world.

Widespread interest is shown every year since the inauguration of the Commonwealth in the anniversary address of the President, who has often made it an occasion for the announcement of an important policy of the administration. It is recalled that it was on the first anniversary of the Commonwealth that the President delivered his celebrated address on social justice. Last year immediately after the military parade the President explained the policies of the administration on taxation, and immediately after the speech he signed at Malacañan the bill abolishing the cedula tax which was passed by the National Assembly upon his recommendation.

Statement: President Quezon on Celebration of Bonifacio Day, November 30, 1938

Press Statement* of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On Celebration of Bonifacio Day

[Released on November 30, 1938]

On this day, which we celebrate every year in honor of the patriot Andres Bonifacio, we need not so much be told as to be reminded of the virtues that were the attributes of his character. The yearly celebration of Bonifacio Day, far from making it a commonplace holiday despoiled of its original significance, should lend to it the color of a beautiful tradition, inviolable and revered.

At present, when the measure of service seems to be, with most people, the yardstick of personal gain, a dose of the fine qualities of Andres Bonifacio would ameliorate the current widespread spiritual poverty. The story of his life and death should re-impress upon us more deeply the fact that no sacrifice is too dear that we cannot afford to make it for the sake of this land that we call ours. Bonifacio made a lasting one, the ultimate sacrifice. Those of us who are forever appalled at the idea of personal loss will find new courage in the life of the Great Plebeian.

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On the Appointment of the Honorable Manuel V. Mohan as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court

[Released on December 8, 1938]

President Quezon today appointed the Honorable Manuel V. Moran as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippines vice the Honorable Jose Abad Santos, recently appointed to the Cabinet as Secretary of Justice.

In filling the vacancy in the Supreme Court, the President is not unmindful of the long, faithful, and efficient service of the Honorable Antonio Horilleno, Presiding Justice of the Court of Appeals. The President, however, feels that in the present circumstances the interest of the public service requires that Presiding Justice Horilleno be retained at the head of the latter court. The office of Presiding Justice is of great importance.

Statement: President Quezon on the Conferences between the President and Assemblyman Buencamino regarding the Philippine Railway Bond Case, December 14, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On the Conferences between the President and Assemblyman Buencamino regarding the Philippine Railway Bond Case

[Released on December 14, 1938]

With reference to a statement of Mr. Juan Sumulong published in an evening paper commenting upon the conferences held between the President and Assemblyman Felipe Buencamino and asking that “light and more light” be given to the public about the subject of these conferences and about the facts of the Philippine Railway bond case in which Assemblyman Buencamino is involved, this office wishes to state:

1. That the President, upon his own initiative, has already given to the public all the information that he has on the subject.
2. That the President’s conferences with Assemblyman Buencamino have been of a purely official character and not “intimate” as Mr. Sumulong asserts—meaning, evidently, personal friendly visits.
3. That the purpose of these conferences was to discuss the trip of Assemblyman Buencamino to the United States which the President promised the Federal authorities he would facilitate. In those conferences, however, Assemblyman Buencamino took occasion to explain to the President his dealings with Buckner, but this information the President felt he should not give out to the public, lest his action in this respect might be considered as an effort to influence the public mind in favor of Assemblyman Buencamino. The matter is being investigated by the Federal authorities and the President is cooperating with those authorities as he has so offered and is desirous to do. If Assemblyman Buencamino wishes to disclose to the public the explanations he has given to the President which in his (Buencamino’s) opinion clears him of any guilt, it is Assemblyman Buencamino’s privilege to do so.
4. That Mr. Sumulong is absolutely wrong when he states that it would be the Philippine Treasury and, therefore, the Filipino people, and not any one in New York or in the United States, who would be the victim of Buckner’s alleged fraudulent operations. This statement of Mr. Sumulong shows plainly that he is either grossly ignorant of the facts which have already been given to the public both in Manila and in New York, or that he is actuated merely by partisan political motives in a vain effort to discredit the President. The President has on several occasions publicly stated in Manila that the Government of the Commonwealth would not buy the Philippine Railway bonds, and in New York, Mr. Caffrey, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, has given out statements to the effect that his investigations revealed that the President had repeatedly denied that the Government of the Commonwealth had any plan to buy the bonds of the Philippine Railway. Moreover, Mr. Caffrey said that the President has even used his official position to prevent people from being misled by Mr. Buckner. How could the Philippine Treasury be the victim of Mr. Buckner’s activities when the Government of the Commonwealth is neither going, nor obligated, to buy the bonds?

The absurdity of Mr. Sumulong’s assumption must be evident to all but himself. The indictment against Mr. Buckner is for using the mails to defraud the public, in that he made them believe that the Government of the Commonwealth would buy those bonds when, as a matter of fact, the Government had repeatedly announced it would not buy them.

Since the Government is not buying the bonds as repeatedly stated by the President, the Philippine Treasury will not be affected and the Government can, therefore, suffer no loss of any kind.

Statement: President Quezon on the Conferences held by the President with the Secretary of Labor and Different Heads of Local Labor Organizations, December 16, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On the Conferences held by the President with the Secretary of Labor and Different Heads of Local Labor Organizations

[Released on December 16, 1938]

There have been several versions appearing in the morning papers regarding the conference held by the President yesterday morning with Secretary Villanueva, Mr. Cresenciano Torres, President of the Federation of Labor, and Mr. Felix Cortes, President of the Union of Manila Railroad Workers, and the conference in the afternoon between the President and a committee of Manila Railroad men.

These are the facts: The President asked Secretary of Labor Villanueva to bring Mr. Torres and Mr. Cortes to the President's office, and the President told these persons why he had decided not to permit the Department of Labor to intervene in any question affecting the employees or laborers of the Manila Railroad Company, and why he would not recognize any outsider as spokesman for the Manila Railroad employees and laborers. Mr. Torres and Mr. Cortes accepted the reasons given by the President as satisfactory, and stated that their only purpose in their intervention in the matter was to cooperate with the President in his social justice program and to prevent strikes among the Manila Railroad employees. The President expressed his gratification over the statement of Mr. Torres and Mr. Cortes. In the afternoon, the President ordered former Assemblyman Felipe Jose, who is now an employee in Malacañan assigned to matters connected with labor, to bring the committee of the Manila Railroad men to the President's office. The members of the committee were Ciriaco Almanzor, Tomas Laxamana, Juan Fernando, Agaton Paraz, Daniel de la Cruz, and Ceferino Gonzales. The President reiterated to them this determination not to hear them unless their petitions were presented exclusively by Railroad men to the management of the Railroad Company or, on subsequent appeal, to the President, and warned them that if there were to be any strikes he would consider every striker as voluntarily separating himself from the Railroad Company. The President told them: (1) That he would refer their petitions to the management of the company and order the investigation of such charges as they have presented against individual employees; (2) That he has absolute faith in the honesty and ability of the Manager of the Manila Railroad Company, Mr. Jose Paez, and was resolved to uphold the manager's stand; (3) That he would advise the General Manager that his (the President's) order of P1.25 as a minimum wage in Manila includes the laborers of the Railroad who are working in Caloocan; (4) That he would ask the management to build a clubhouse for the employees and laborers of the Manila Railroad in Caloocan where they may meet socially or to discuss the affairs of the company, which clubhouse may also be used as the headquarters for the Labor Union of the Railroad employees; (5) That he had no objection to the employees of the Railroad Company organizing a union among themselves, if it is exclusively among themselves; (6) That steps would be taken for the improvement of living conditions of the laborers of the Manila Railroad Company; and lastly, (7) That the question of the increase of their salaries and wages would be submitted to the management of the company.

I was shocked to learn of the murder of ex-Governor Fugate. It was an act of savagery, pure and simple, and no stone will be left unturned to discover and punish the criminal. Ex-Governor Fugate had been governor of Sulu for many years and had rendered the Government and the people excellent service. His heart was in his job and he performed his duties in a spirit of self-sacrifice. He was one of those Americans who have written their names in the history of the American noble work in the Philippines.

I mourn deeply his death.

Statement: President Quezon on the Conference with Professors of the College of Law, U. P., who were affected by the report on sale of textbooks, December 20, 1938

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On the Conference with Professors of the College of Law, U. P., who were affected by the report on sale of textbooks

[Released on December 20, 1938]

At my request, the President of the University of the Philippines brought to my office for conference, Dean Jose A. Espiritu and Professors Vicente G. Sinco, Pedro Ylagan, Gerardo Florendo, Francisco Capistrano, and Vicente Santiago. I called Dean Espiritu and the other professors to this conference because two of the professors had presented their resignations and the others were contemplating to do the same, for they felt that the findings of the Board of Regents were a reflection upon their character and terminated their usefulness to the university. I gave these gentlemen my view of the whole matter. I told them that having heard the statements of members of the Board in connection with the report of the committee, declaring the integrity and competency of Dean Espiritu and the other professors, and after carefully reading the findings of the committee, I was positively of the opinion that their character and integrity had not been in any way impugned and that all that the Board did was to express its opinion that the practice of the sale of textbooks and notes without following the regulations which the Board of Regents had already adopted but which were not fully enforced by the committee for that purpose, was erroneous and should, therefore, be discontinued. I told Dean Espiritu and the other professors that during the discussion by the Board of Regents I made it a point to find out the qualifications of all of them as professors and that there was a unanimous opinion favorable to their ability and character. For this reason, I told Dean Espiritu and the other professors that, in my opinion, they had no sufficient ground to present their resignations and to sever their connection with the university. Moreover, I expressed the hope that they would show their spirit of cooperation and willingness to serve the university by withdrawing their resignations, however badly they may feel about the findings of the committee. I am glad to say that all of them agreed to continue teaching in the university, and accepted my opinion as final.

With reference to Professor Sinco, whose connection with the Community Publishers and the U. P. Press was questioned, I told him that I went into this matter after the report of the committee created by the Board of Regents had been approved by the Board and I am satisfied beyond doubt that what Professor Sinco did was in the interest of the U. P. Press. The reason why he did not seek authority from the Board of Regents to organize the Community Publishers was that, having been authorized by the Board of Regents to accept the position of manager of the U. P. Press, Professor Sinco took it for granted that whatever he did in the interest of the University Press was a part of his duty as manager of the Press. Moreover, everything that he did in this connection was approved by the Board of Directors of the University Press itself. From my investigation, it appears that really Professor Sinco has not profited but, on the contrary, has suffered financial loss in the Community Publishers, and that all his acts were done for the benefit of the U. P. Press.

Statement: President Quezon on Decision of the Board of Judges of the Rizal Biography Contest, December 19, 1938

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

DECISION OF THE BOARD OF JUDGES OF THE RIZAL BIOGRAPHY CONTEST

[Released to the Press, January 16, 1939]

MANILA, December 19, 1938

His			Excellency
Honorable	Manuel	L.	Quezon
President	of	the	Philippines
City of Manila

SIR: In behalf of the Board of Judges designated by Your Excellency, charged with studying the merits of the different manuscripts submitted in the Rizal Biography Contest, called at Your Excellency's initiative, I have the honor to transmit to Your Excellency a brief resume of the work of the aforementioned Board, and to forward to you the findings setting forth the decision of the aforesaid Board, which has conducted a most careful and conscientious study of the various compositions.

The adjoined findings show that the Board has adjudicated the first prize, consisting of the sum of P3,000, to the composition drafted in Spanish, under the pen name of "Lankan-Dula"; and the second prize, consisting of the sum of P1,000, to the manuscript in English, under the pseudonym of "Tamaraw." Likewise the Board has decided to make an honorable mention of the two manuscripts, under the pen names of "Talo-Saling" and "Apó-Ni-Dimas," respectively, both of which were written in English. In all, twelve manuscripts were submitted in the contest, eleven in English and one in Spanish, viz., that of "Lakan-Dula."

In the performance of their duties, the members of the Board noticed one thing; namely, that in some of the manuscripts the fact as to whether it is true or not that, shortly before his death, Rizal did recant his anti-Catholic ideas, is discussed pretty thoroughly and emphatically, the negative side being held by some, especially by the writer under the pseudonym of "Lakan-Dula", and the affirmative, by the rest. This question is discreetly avoided in a few of the manuscripts.

The Board charged me with the special mission of setting forth in this Report to Your Excellency that, in studying the merits of the compositions submitted to it. it has wholly disregarded the views of the writers concerned on the retraction attributed to Rizal, not only on the ground that the same is a matter of opinion, and cannot therefore be deemed a norm of historical accuracy, but also for the further reason that the Board thinks that neither side of the controversy can substantially affect the figure and the work of Rizal, as a patriot, and as a social, political, and moral leader of his people and race. We have, for instance, the manuscript under the pen name of "Lakan-Dula" which, according to the decision of the Board, deserves the first prize. All that portion thereof relative to the retraction attributed to Rizal may be omitted and yet the manuscript still would be the best of all those submitted in the Contest, not only from the literary and biographical standpoints, but also because of the keen critical sense displayed in the analysis of the life and achievements of Rizal throughout the work. Certain superior features not found either in the competing manuscripts or in any of the biographies of Rizal heretofore published, are given in the work under the pen name of "Lakan-Dula." For instance, the critical study made in it both of Rizal's novels and of their characters is thorough and superb in the highest degree. In addition, new facts which shed additional light on Rizal's genius and multifarious talents, such as, for instance, the tremendous quantity of writings bearing on his proposal to found a Philippine agricultural colony in Borneo, are not only set forth, but a s general rule, his figure towers throughout the manuscript and through peculiar, though appropriate, features.

One thing is undeniable, and is given prominence throughout the manuscripts deserving of prizes, and that is this: That from infancy and on through young manhood, Rizal had always been a deeply religious person. Consequently, in an appreciation of his colossal moral nature, the question of the faith formally professed by him is not important. Moreover, the more completely our natural prejudices and biases, engendered by our proximity to the historic moment of Rizal, are weaned away from our minds, this feature of Rizal's life shall gradually lose interest and insensibly be merged in time's remote perspective, and it is even likely that the historian and biographer of the future will wholly neglect it in his calm and objective survey of the life and achievements of Rizal.

Very respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL C. BRIONES
*Chairman, Board of Judges
Rizal Biography Contest*

CELEBRATION OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S BIRTHDAY

[Released to the Press on January 25, 1939]

The President of the United States has wisely and generously permitted his birthday to be celebrated annually in a manner that will secure funds for the control of infantile paralysis. It is a noble act on his part and merits the approval of all right-thinking men and women.

In the Philippines we have been fortunate thus far in avoiding epidemics of infantile paralysis. Yet the disease occurs among our children and adults. Our physicians and scientists must be ready to meet any situation that may arise and to conduct constructive scientific research. To make them ready to the extent of present human knowledge and foresight, every centavo given for the purchase of tickets at modest sums to assist in the observance of the President's birthday, goes to a worthy cause.

I pledge my personal wholehearted support and the aid of the Commonwealth Government, and urge generous cooperation by the Filipino people to make the celebration of President Roosevelt's birthday in the Philippines an unqualified success.

Statement: President Quezon on Jewish Settlement in Mindanao, February 15, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon: *
On Jewish Settlement in Mindanao

[Released on February 15, 1939]

Sometime ago, the President created a committee composed of Cabinet members to study the question of political refugees seeking admission to the Philippines and to make recommendations. This Committee had Secretary Roxas of Finance as its Chairman, and Secretary Alunan of the Interior, Secretary Santos of Justice, and Secretary Vargas, members. In view of recent publicity given to this matter, the Committee has, by authority of the President, prepared the following statement for publication:

Recent occurrences in Europe have forced upon the world the problem of providing an asylum for political refugees. These refugees have been estimated at over 500,000, mostly Jews. Under the leadership of Great Britain and the United States, an Intergovernmental Committee on Political Refugees has been organized in London to formulate plans and to raise the necessary funds for the convenient settlement of these refugees in other countries. Yesterday this Committee appropriated $300,000,000 to defray the expenses of transportation of refugees and to provide them with capital to start with in productive enterprises in countries which should express a willingness to accept them.

The interest shown by many governments in the solution of the refugee problem is predicated upon broad humanitarian grounds. These political refugees, regardless of race or religious belief, allege that they have not been free to think their own thoughts, to express their own feelings, or to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. Democratic governments, both in Europe and in the Americas, have assured the Intergovernmental Committee of their unstinted cooperation. The Commonwealth Government, upon invitation of the United States, could not turn a deaf ear to the sufferings of these unfortunate people. The Philippine Commonwealth, founded as it is upon justice and righteousness and the preservation of essential human liberties, could not but view with sympathy the opportunity to do its share in meeting the situation.

In line with these sentiments, His Excellency, the President, with the cooperation of the State Department of the United States, authorized the admission of political refugees on a selective basis. Only those whose professional qualifications, particularly in science, could supply needed services in the Philippines, have been admitted. In his inaugural message to the National Assembly, His Excellency, the President, explained fully his action in this matter. He emphasized the fact that the present immigration laws do not inhibit the immigration of such refugees into the Philippines, irrespective of their number or personal qualifications. With the cooperation of the Department of State, however, the President has succeeded in limiting the number of immigrants only to those who would be of advantage to the Commonwealth.

Sometime ago, representations were made to the Philippine Government by authorized spokesmen of these refugees, proposing the settlement of several thousand refugees and their families in Mindanao or other sparsely populated areas in the Philippines. It was indicated that these refugees would be provided with sufficient funds to establish them in farming communities, and that they would be assisted by competent personnel to plan and direct the development of the land that may be assigned to them. It was also intimated that only experienced farmers would go to this settlement, and that they would immediately take the necessary naturalization papers to become Filipino citizens.

The Philippine Government considered this proposition in connection with the project to settle and develop Mindanao. The Government believed that here was an opportunity to cooperate with an international enterprise inspired by a most laudable purpose, and that it could be accomplished in the interest of a national program, without in any way depriving Filipino citizens of the opportunity of enjoying the benefits of that undertaking.

Moreover, the Philippines could gain positive advantages from the execution of this plan. The proposed settlement would provide Filipino settlers in neighboring areas with a practical example of modern farming methods practised in the most advanced farming sections in Europe. Also, these refugees could develop new crops familiar to them and which might be profitably produced here. These settlements would have the advice of competent technical men, agriculturists, land chemists, irrigation experts, and such other technological assistants as are needed in projects of this nature. As this settlement is to be undertaken chiefly on a cooperative basis, Filipino farmers would see a practical application of the principles of cooperative farming and marketing as well as the working of consumers' cooperatives.

There is, of course, a limit to the number of settlers that can be admitted under this plan. Realizing this fact the Government has advised the Intergovernmental Committee on Political Refugees that it was favorably inclined to a plan for the settlement of selected refugees in Mindanao or other sparsely populated areas of the Philippines, to be determined by the Philippine Government. The number of such settlers is to be fixed from time to time by our Government, having in view the interests of our national economy and subject to the following conditions:

1. That a responsible committee representing the refugees or acting on their behalf shall submit a satisfactory plan to finance such settlements;
2. That the settlers shall agree to engage in subsistence farming or such other activities as may be compatible with the best interests of all the Philippines ;
3. That they shall take out naturalization as early as possible, thereby expressing their intention to become Filipino citizens;
4. That until they become Filipino citizens they shall reside on the land reserved for them;
5. That the number of refugees to be admitted as settlers shall be fixed from time to time by the Commonwealth Government acting upon the recommendation of the committee in charge of settlement in course of preparation, having in view the committee's ability to take care of the settlers and the consequences of large-scale settlement upon the national economy of the Philippines; and
6. That the plan contemplated and its execution shall be subject to the immigration laws now in force or which may hereafter be passed by the National Assembly.

It is believed that the conditions prescribed by the Government are sufficient to safeguard the interests of the Philippines. Moreover, it is expressly stipulated that the admission of these refugees should be at all times subject to the provisions of the immigration laws now in force or which may hereafter be enacted by the National Assembly.

There is no plan to settle large numbers of immigrants in Mindanao or any other part of the Philippines. It is the policy of the Commonwealth Government to preserve the natural resources of the nation for the Filipinos and their descendants. The areas that may be allotted to the proposed settlement for political refugees will be insignificant compared with the vast tracts of vacant lands that now exist.

Footnote: * On February 17, His Excellency, the President, received from the Refugee Economic Corporation of New York, the following cablegram:

“Your noble attitude toward unfortunate refugees publicly announced in London will have great influence throughout the world. We take this opportunity of expressing our deeply felt appreciation of your humane spirit and generous cooperation respectfully.”

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

GRANTING PARDONS AND PAROLES TO BILIBID PRISONERS

[Released to the Press on February 19, 1939]

It has come to the knowledge of His Excellency, the President, that there are some persons who approach prisoners, or relatives or friends of prisoners, with an offer that, for a fee or other consideration, they would work to the end that a prisoner now serving sentence may be given pardon or parole. His Excellency desires to make it known to everyone that pardons and paroles are granted by him only after a thorough investigation of the merits of every case by the Board of Indeterminate Sentence or by the Board of Pardons and after the receipt by him of appropriate recommendation from the Secretary of Justice and the Secretary to the President, and before granting pardon or parole, His Excellency personally looks into the record of every case presented to him. No other consideration, except merit, is taken into account. Therefore, prisoners are advised that their petitions for pardon should be submitted to His Excellency, without outside help except perhaps that of their immediate relatives, and for the purpose of formulating such petitions, they may avail themselves of the services of prison officials, who are now being instructed to forward immediately such petitions to the President's Office.

Statement: President Quezon on postponement of action on Philippine Omnibus Bill by the Senate Committee on territories and insular affairs, April 20, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On postponement of action on Philippine Omnibus Bill by the Senate Committee on territories and Insular affairs *

[Released on April 20, 1939]

With reference to the action taken by the Senate committee on the bill to effectuate the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee, while I am of course disappointed because of our failure to secure at this time the approval by Congress of said measure, I must confess that the action taken by the Senate committee was not wholly unexpected. In his statement, Senator Tydings made it perfectly plain that the refusal of the committee to act at this time does not in any way involve any change in the policy agreed upon between the United States and the Philippines regarding independence. Recent developments in the international situation must have had something to do with the decision of the committee as indicated by the reports received in the Philippines relative to the committee's action.

Vice-President Osmeña and Commissioner Elizalde have done a fine piece of work, and I do not believe that under the circumstances anyone could have done better, if as much, as they have. In the negotiations concerning the bill, they represented the Philippines both in the executive department and in Congress with signal ability deserving of commendation.

Confident of the sense of fairness of the United States, I have not lost hope that we will secure remedial legislation before 1941 when the export taxes will take effect under the present law, and which, if allowed to take effect without modification, will have serious consequences upon our national economy. I am satisfied that Congress is aware of the difficulties we will encounter unless such legislation is enacted in due time.

Senator Tydings, the chairman of the Senate territories' committee, and Congressman Kocalkowski, the chairman of the House committee on insular affairs, are well acquainted with our problems and we have every reason to rely upon their friendly and sympathetic interest.

Footnote: * Vice-President Sergio Osmeña has informed the President of the Philippines of the decision of the Senate committee on territories and insular affairs in postponing all action on the economic adjustment bill now pending consideration before it.

In taking this step the committee, through its chairman. Senator Millard E. Tydings of Maryland, has issued a statement explaining its stand.

The Tydings statement, as transmitted to His Excellency, the President, by Vice-President Osmeña from Washington. D. C. on April 19, 1939, follows in full:

“The bill before this committee does not deal with the political aspects of the Independence Act. It deals only with the economic aspects as contained in the original law (Tydings-McDuffie) passed in 1934.

“After full discussion of the subject matter of the bill it was intimated that President Quezon was likely to visit this country probably in June. The committee felt that in order to avoid all possible misunderstanding in dealing with the economic phases of independence it would be wise to have President Quezon before the committee, if he is coming to this country, so that the matter might be dealt with in the light of all the facts obtainable. The committee, therefore, decided not to take action on the pending bill at this time.

“It should be emphasized, to avoid misunderstanding, that the pending bill does not deal with the political side of independence for the Philippines which, under existing law, would be finally obtained in 1946.

“There was no suggestion in the committee that any action would be taken by it which would alter the objective of the United States to give the Philippines complete, absolute, and unconditional independence and on the part of the Filipinos to obtain complete, absolute, and unconditional independence. The question the committee had under consideration was purely the economic phases of the matter insofar as they had to do with permitting the Philippines, when the country becomes independent, to set up an economy which would enable her to start on the road to nationhood without being confronted by economic difficulties too great to cope with.

“As was said before, the committee feels it is wise, in view of the probability of President Quezon’s visit to the United States, to withhold final action in this matter until it can acquaint President Quezon with the point of view and interests of the American people in line with the point of view and interests of the Filipino people on the economic phases attending independence.”

Statement: President Quezon on possibility of constructing airplanes in the Philippines, May 12, 1939

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

POSSIBILITY OF CONSTRUCTING AIRPLANES IN THE PHILIPPINES

[Released to the Press on May 12, 1939]

The possibility of constructing airplanes in the Philippines with the use of native materials has been demonstrated by the Philippine Aircraft Corporation, whose first product, a two-seater low-wing monoplane, has passed every government test and performed very satisfactorily in the last few months, according to a special report of the Bureau of Aëronautics forwarded to Malacañan. The monoplane Snipe, which has flown for over 380 hours in different trips to various parts of the country, has proved its airworthiness and reliability.

The airplane was built with the aid of the Bureau of Aëronautics, whose technical men were consulted freely during its construction. The bureau also conducted rigid tests to insure the airworthiness of this craft and the strength of every one of its parts. After the various tests, the plane was finally submitted to a flight test, which was successful. A license for the airplane was thereupon granted by the Bureau of Aëronautics.

According to the bureau, airplanes which can perform just as well as most airplanes built in other countries, if not better, can be built in the Philippines at a much lower price. The use of Philippine woods in airplane building has been gradually increasing, as a result of the successful experiments conducted by the bureau with calantas, manggachapui, and white lawan, which have encouraged prospective aircraft builders in this country to adopt them for airplane construction. Manggachapui, which has a strength and weight ratio comparable to that of the American spruce, was recently used to replace the damaged spars of a commercially-licensed plane bought in the United States. The repaired craft is none the worse for the change. Experimental propellers have been built of manggachapui wood by the bureau for the purpose of finding a suitable substitute for American wood in aircraft construction.

On National Hospital Day

[Released to the Press on May 12, 1939]

This year's nationwide celebration of National Hospital Day serves as another milestone in the steady progress being made in safeguarding the life and health of every Philippine community. The Government has built additional hospitals, sanatoria, and maternity homes; it has established free clinics and puericulture centers in towns, and is now providing remote communities with adequate public dispensaries.

Indicative of the people's interest and support to those undertakings is the increasing number of patients admitted and cases treated in those institutions where modern hospital equipments and the latest methods of treatment are used to protect public health and promote public welfare. I trust that the present observance of National Hospital Day will bring home more effectively to the people the incalculable benefits that are derived from our hospitals.

Statement: President Quezon on approval of Bill raising the amount that may be loaned by the Philippine National Bank for agricultural purposes, June 9, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On approval of Bill raising the amount that may be loaned by the Philippine National Bank for agricultural purposes

[Released on June 9, 1939]

Under its charter, the Philippine National Bank may grant agricultural loans up to 60 per cent of its capital and surplus. But, having reached this limit, the bank can no longer grant such loans.

Bill No. 563 proposes to raise the amount that may be loaned by the Philippine National Bank for agricultural purposes from 60 per cent to 75 per cent of its capital and surplus. On the basis of the present capital and surplus of the national bank, the approval of this bill will release an additional amount of about P3,000,000 for agricultural loans.

On May 9, 1939, the National Assembly approved a bill (No. 965), which I have just signed, creating an Agricultural and Industrial Bank to meet the credit needs of agriculture and the industries. In view of the fact, however, that it will take a few months before this Agricultural and Industrial Bank could begin to operate, it is deemed necessary to authorize the Philippine National Bank to continue granting agricultural loans in the meantime.

I have signed this Bill No. 563 merely as a temporary measure, pending the establishment of the Agricultural and Industrial Bank created under Bill No. 965. When the Agricultural and Industrial Bank shall have been established, there will no longer be any need for the Philippine National Bank to grant long-term agricultural loans, and it is to be expected that the bank will cease granting such loans and devote its activities purely to commercial banking, for it is not a good policy for a commercial bank receiving commercial deposits to tie up such a large portion of its assets in long-term credits. A commercial bank should, at all times, maintain a highly liquid position, and it is my purpose to see to it that the Philippine National Bank be maintained in that state.

Statement: President Quezon on approval of Tax Code, June 15, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On approval of Tax Code

[Released on June 15, 1939]

I have carefully considered the objections presented against the Tax Code and have come to the conclusion that, under the circumstances, it is my duty to approve the bill. Although under the Constitution I am empowered to veto any separate item or items in a revenue bill without affecting the validity of the rest of the bill, in the present case I cannot veto any provision of the Tax Code without causing great loss of revenue to the Government for the repealing provisions of the code do away with all laws now in force governing internal revenue taxes with few exceptions. For instance, if the provisions of the code relative to the sales tax were vetoed and the remaining provisions of the code were approved, the result would be the complete elimination of the sales tax.

It is my impression that most of the criticisms presented against the Tax Code were directed more to the manner and procedure of collection than to the respective taxes or their rates. The Bureau of Internal Revenue may be depended upon to enforce the provisions of the law in a manner that will be practicable and just, and if difficulties are encountered such as were predicted by some businessmen the matter could be remedied at the next session of the National Assembly.

While Bill No. 770, entitled “An Act to provide for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by naturalization, and to repeal Acts Numbered twenty-nine hundred and twenty-seven and Thirty-four hundred and forty-eight,” is an improvement over the present Naturalization Law, I do not consider it sufficiently liberal to allow the naturalization of those who, in good faith, desire to become citizens of the Philippines. It is, therefore, my purpose to ask the National Assembly to amend its provisions at its next session, so as to shorten the period of residence required for those applying for Philippine citizenship.

[Released on July 11, 1939]

A representation of the National Commission of Labor came to see me this morning to protect against the rise in the prices of commodities of prime necessity, particularly those which have not been in any way affected by the Tax Code. There seems to be a concerted effort among the dealers in these commodities to raise the prices to an exorbitant degree. This may be due either to a desire to make undue advantage of the Tax Code in order to mulct the consuming public, or to an intention to discredit the Government in its attempt to raise sufficient revenues to meet the demands of the public service. The Government cannot tolerate such a situation. I am, therefore, instructing the Department of Justice to make an investigation, with the help of the Bureau of Commerce, in order to determine the facts and to proceed against those who may be found guilty of unlawful trade practices.

Statement: President Quezon on Unauthorized Publication of News Regarding the President's Conference with Labor Leaders, July 21, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On Unauthorized Publication of News Regarding the President's Conference with Labor Leaders

[Released on July 21, 1939]

Some morning and afternoon papers of yesterday—Friday, the 21st—have published unauthorized and, worse still, false news regarding the conference which the President had with certain labor leaders, on Thursday afternoon, the 20th. It is not true that there has been any misunderstanding between the President and the labor leaders or any one of them on any question discussed during the conference, and as far as the allusion to the speech of Pedro Abad Santos was concerned, which was only touched upon incidentally, all that happened was this: The president said that he had been informed that, in his speech in Cabanatuan, Pedro Abad Santos advised the tenants not to pay their debts, and Mr. Feleo told the president that stenographic notes had been taken of the speech and suggested that the transcription be read. Furthermore, Mr. Feleo said that Pedro Abad Santos referred only to the debts that are usurious, and the president answered that in the case of usurious debts, of course, the tenants should not pay them.

In view of this misinformation given by some of yesterday's papers, this Office requests the newspapers to refrain from publishing any news in which they attribute a statement to the President, or in which they assert that something has taken place in a conference held by the president, unless the statement is authorized by this Office or they have given us a chance to verify the truth of the statement.

Statement: President Quezon on Re-election of the President, July 24, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On Re-election of the President

[Released on July 24, 1939]

The President has stated nothing new in his speech in Atimonan yesterday. He merely reiterated and emphasized what he has said time and again that he is not a candidate for reelection; and that, if his term of office is allowed to run until 1941, he will retire at the end of that period, and even the whole world would not be able to induce him to accept a reelection.

The point that the President tried to bring home to his fellow Tayabenses is that he is not seeking a reelection; that he does not want to be reelected; that anything he does or says is not influenced by any idea or ambition to remain in office; and that he is absolutely determined not to accept a reelection if he is permitted to continue as President until 1941, which is the end of his present term of office. And to show that his determination in this regard is irrevocable, he added that if he would run for the Presidency after 1941, the people of Tayabas should vote for the opposing candidate.

There is nothing new in this attitude of the President. He has repeatedly stated that he would not seek a reelection, and does not want to be a candidate. But that if an amendment to the Constitution is approved, shortening his term of office from six to four years, then he would consider it his duty to be a candidate to obtain a vote of confidence from the people; and in the event that the vote of the people is favorable to him, he would, under no circumstances, remain in office one day more than eight years.

In conclusion, the President directs me to say for him:

1. That he is not a candidate for reelection;
2. That he does not want to be a candidate for reelection; and
3. That he feels he would have done his full duty by our people if he is allowed to remain in office until 1941, and would not, therefore, accept a reelection at the end of that period.

Statement: President Quezon on appointment of Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre as United States High Commissioner in the Philippines, July 27, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On appointment of Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre as United States High Commissioner in the Philippines

[Released on July 27, 1939]

Following the submission by President Franklin D. Roosevelt of the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre as United States High Commissioner in the Philippines, vice the Hon. Paul V. McNutt, to the United States Congress, His Excellency, the President, in an interview with Miss Violet Sweet Haven, of the International News Service, today gave out the following statement:

The choice of Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre to succeed the Honorable Paul V. McNutt as United States High Commissioner in the Philippines has been, in my opinion, the happiest that could have been made at this time. Mr. Sayre was adviser to the Government of Siam for many years, and in that position he had occasion to know the people of the Orient as well as the problems confronting them. Moreover, he has been at the head of the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs for the last three years and is, therefore, well informed of the situation prevailing here. As everybody knows, he has been specially charged by President Roosevelt with the formulation, as well as the presentation to Congress, of the bill (now pending before that body) affecting the trade relations between the United States and the Philippines. During my last trip to America, I had the privilege of knowing Secretary Sayre, and I found his ideas regarding the Philippines not only correct but very sympathetic with the policies of the United States to grant the Filipino people their freedom in a spirit of helpfulness and cooperation. I believe no better choice could have been made, and I am confident that the interests of the United States and the Philippines will be properly safeguarded through the cooperation of Secretary Sayre as United States High Commissioner with the Government of the Philippines.

No informed person can fail to see the grave problems confronting the Filipino people in the task of preparing their country for an independent national existence. The world is in a state of turmoil; political and social conditions are unsettled; governments are suspicious of one another; and a feeling of uncertainty as to the future permeates the whole human race. I think it may be truthfully said that no one would be surprised if any day now a war should break out in which human freedom and civilization itself might be at stake. This world-wide condition naturally has its effects upon the Philippines, and if to this we should add the radical change that will take place in our national economy due to the forthcoming modifications in our trade relations with America, it will be realized that this task of nation-building, which we have at hand and which, under the most normal and favorable conditions, always entails serious difficulties, becomes a gigantic task that will require the combined talent, wisdom, and patriotism of our people, and the sympathetic assistance of the United States, if we are to have any hope of success.

Fortunately for us, we have succeeded in setting aside partisanship and selfish motives, and the whole people are inspired by the single purpose of laying the foundations for a stable government and an enduring nation. We are devoting our energies mainly to the two most pressing problems we have to face; namely, the building of our national defense and the strengthening and improvement of our national economy. A carefully considered program of national defense is being systematically carried out. The Government of the Commonwealth has been privileged to have in this monumental work the advice of one of the best soldiers of our days, General Douglas MacArthur. In its field of economic development, we are making great progress. We have started the development of Mindanao, we have created the Agricultural and Industrial Bank, we are establishing new industries, and we are rapidly completing our system of communications that will facilitate the settlement of sparsely populated sections of the country.

The bill now pending in Congress, if approved, will greatly aid in the adjustment of some of our economic problems. After coming to the Philippines Secretary Sayre will be able to acquaint himself more fully with other important matters pertaining to our relationship with America, which will likewise need action by the United States Government for their proper solution. As I am certain that Secretary Sayre will give us his unstinted cooperation in finding a way for meeting these problems, so I particularly welcome his appointment to the high and distinguished post to which he has been called by President Roosevelt.

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On appointment of Francis B. Sayre as United States High Commissioner

[Released on July 27, 1939]

In my opinion, no better appointment could have been made. Mr. Sayre has been at the head of the Interdepartmental Committee for Philippine Affairs during the last three years and is, therefore, well acquainted with the situation here. During my last trip to the United States, I had occasion to be in frequent contact with him, and I know that his ideas about the Philippines are correct and that he is sympathetic with the policies of the United States to grant the Philippines independence under the most favorable conditions possible.

Statement: President Quezon on unfounded report that amendments to the constitution will be disapproved in Washington, July 27, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On unfounded report that amendments to the constitution will be disapproved in Washington

[Released on July 27, 1939]

There is not the slightest foundation to the report that amendments to the Constitution will be disapproved in Washington.

In the first place, the President has never advanced any information as to the action he would take regarding any contemplated measure by the Philippine Government, even in those cases where under the law he has the power of intervention until the measure has been approved by the Legislature and is actually before him; and there is no reason to assume that the President will deviate from this course of action which is not only wise and proper but is in fact the legal procedure.

In the second place, no one knows as yet what the National Assembly will finally decide to do in this matter of proposing amendments to the Constitution—and it should be borne in mind that the Assembly alone has the power to initiate action regarding amendments to the Constitution.

In the third place, it is reasonable to assume that the President of the United States will allow the Filipino people complete freedom of action in the matter of amending their Constitution so long as the amendments do not violate fundamental principles of democracy and/or justice. In granting to the Filipino people the right to adopt their own Constitution, the United States has left to them the choice of the kind of constitution they want to have so long as it provides for a republican form of government.

Statement: President Quezon on Work of Floor Leader Quintin Paredes on Passage of Philippine Bill, August 1, 1939

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
On Work of Floor Leader Quintin Paredes on Passage of Philippine Bill

[Released on August 1, 1939]

Floor Leader Quintin Paredes has given me a very satisfactory report of the situation as he found it in Washington.

It will be recalled that when Floor Leader Paredes left Washington, the Philippine bill has already been reported out of the Committee of Insular Affairs and we had assurances that Congress would approve it this session. This is the reason why we asked the Floor Leader to come back so that he might be here and discuss with us the calling of a special session of the National Assembly to consider the amendments to the Constitution that may have to be adopted in accordance with the terms and conditions of the new Philippine Bill.

Floor Leader Paredes should be congratulated for the passage of this bill. From the very beginning, he took part in every important action taken in connection with it. He was the Resident Commissioner when negotiations were started for the appointment of the Joint Preparatory Committee and, as ex-officio member of the Committee, he took part in these negotiations. Then he became member of the Philippine Mission headed by Vice-President Osmeña and was in Washington at the critical time when new amendments were being discussed. He will go down in history prominently connected with this very important piece of legislation.

August 15, 1939

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

INAUGURATION OF RADIO-TELEPHONE SERVICE BETWEEN MANILA AND HONGKONG

[Released to the Press on August 15, 1939]

On the occasion of the inauguration of the radio-telephone service between Manila and Hongkong on August 15, His Excellency, the President, had a short conversation with His Excellency, the Governor-General of Hongkong, from his office at the Malacañan Palace at 10 a.m.

The text of their conversation follows:

GOVERNOR-GENERAL: Good morning, Mr. President. It gives me much pleasure to renew our acquaintance.

PRESIDENT QUEZON: Good morning. Mr. Governor. I am happy to hear your voice again.

I am gratified that today we are inaugurating a radio-telephone service that will make it easier and speedier for us to communicate with one another. It has been somewhat difficult for the outside world to understand why, while we in the Philippines can talk by radio-telephone with our friends in America and in Europe, we could not do so with those in Hongkong, a close neighbor.

It is my pleasure to congratulate the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company for its persistent efforts in making possible this new Manila-Hongkong radio-telephone service, and also to express my thanks to the officials of the Hongkong Telephone Company, Limited, without whose wholehearted cooperation this new line would not have been made possible.

In greeting Your Excellency let me express the hope that the establishment of this radio-telephone service, which is a milestone in the progress of Hongkong and Manila, will mark a closer and friendlier relationship between the people of Hongkong and the people of the Philippines.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL: The occasion is, as I am sure you will agree, a specially happy one marking as it does the forging of a new link between the Philippines and the British colony of Hongkong. This radio-telephone service which you and I are helping to inaugurate today stands in my view for at least three different things. It is a witness of the already extensive connections which have been formed between the Philippines and ourselves; it is also a proof of our firm belief that those connections are going to multiply to an extent which requires the setting up of this very convenient form of communication between you and us. Nor is that the end of the matter, for obviously the establishment of a wireless telephone service to the Philippines holds out the promise of quicker and easier communication in the future with the United States of America a very desirable consummation for us.

It is not possible to enumerate in the space of two or three minutes the full list of commercial activities existing in our two territories. Those who will derive benefit from this new service are the banker, the shipowner, the trader, the broker, and a host of others who will be the gainers thereby. Nor will its advantages be confined to the field of commerce, for they will also be felt both in administrative matters and in the social and domestic affairs of the two populations that are today being brought into yet closer touch with one another.

While therefore we, the beneficiaries of the new service, congratulate ourselves, it is only just that the courageous faith and enterprise of Cable and Wireless, Limited, should be acknowledged with deep gratitude and most heartily commended. With every confidence I wish, on behalf of the colony of Hongkong, the best of luck to this new departure of that far-seeing and public-spirited company. To this I would add my congratulations to the Hongkong Telephone Company for their effective cooperation.

Lastly, my dear Mr. President, I should like to take this opportunity of giving voice to the warm friendship which this colony feels towards our good neighbor, the Philippines. We have a thriving trade with you and many of us go yearly to you for the holiday amenities which your beautiful lands and waters provide so plentifully. And whether our object is pleasure or business, we always find there a friendly welcome and fair treatment. I am confident that this radio-telephone service will make such contacts more easy, more frequent, and more fruitful than ever before; and it gives me great happiness to help in inaugurating it.

Goodbye and good luck.

PRESIDENT QUEZON: Goodbye, Governor.

Press Statement of President Quezon on the National Assembly's approval of proposed amendments to the Constitution, September 16, 1939

PRESS STATEMENT

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY'S APPROVAL OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

[Released to the Press on September 16, 1939]

I feel that the National Assembly deserves commendation for having approved the proposed amendments to the Constitution. The amendment providing for the creation of the Senate speaks eloquently of the very high sense of duty of the immense majority of the members of the Assembly who voted for it, for they willingly gave up the great powers now vested in the Assembly in the interest of the public welfare and security. The creation of the Commission on Elections will better safeguard the purity of elections and thus insure the stability of the Philippine Republic.

Although the proposed amendments seem to open the door for my reelection for two years, I wish to state once more not only that I am determined not to be a candidate, but that I would decline nomination if the Nationalist Party should nominate me as a candidate for the presidency. Moreover, I think that I would be ineligible for reelection under the new Constitution.

I am convinced that the coming generations of Filipinos will bless the names of the Assemblymen who voted for the proposed amendments to the Constitution.

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

RIGHT TO EXPRESS PERSONAL OPINION ON PHILIPPINE QUESTION

[Released to the Press on September 26, 1939]

The President is proceeding in accordance with the policy embodied in the Tydings-McDuffie Law, that is to say, preparing the Philippines for complete independence in 1946. He was aware that Secretary Aquino would speak of independence before the Rotary Club just as he was informed that Assemblyman Romero would make the speech which he delivered before the National Assembly.

The President feels that everyone has the right to express freely his opinion on such a vital question as the future of the Filipino people, but that it is the duty of the Government of the Commonwealth to take every step necessary to prepare the country for the responsibilities of an independent republic.

CRITICIZING GOVERNMENT MEASURES WITHOUT OFFERING CONSTRUCTIVE SUGGESTIONS

[Released to the Press on September 29, 1939]

The Government welcomes criticisms of the measures we are adopting to meet the social and economic problems that are facing the country. We do not claim that what we are doing is the only remedy. Nor do we claim that we are right in every respect. But the Government cannot remain inactive in the face of the problems confronting us and it must do, and does the best it can and knows how. To find fault with what we are doing without suggesting other methods, to criticize without offering suggestions as to what should be done, is worse than useless. We shall not be deterred from carrying out our policies merely because certain persons oppose them. We shall follow another course only when better remedies are offered.

ASSEMBLY

[Released to the Press on September 30, 1939]

The National Assembly should be congratulated for the emergency and other measures which it has approved in its last special session.

The legislative branch has given the Executive sufficient power and authority to safeguard the interests of our people and the neutrality of the Philippines.

I hope no one will attempt to make profits out of the miseries that the war is inflicting upon belligerents as well as upon neutrals.

The Government will deal severely with those who would contravene the rules and regulations which we shall issue to protect the people.

PRESS STATEMENT

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

CREATION OF EMERGENCY CONTROL BOARD

[Released to the Press on October 10, 1939]

The Government feels deep concern over the unjustified increase in the prices of commodities which constitute prime necessities of life and it earnestly hopes that the merchants will cooperate with the Government in its effort to lower these prices to reasonable levels. There is no desire on the part of the Government to deprive the merchants of their legitimate profits; but at the same time, it expects that the merchants will take into consideration the interest of the public.

In pursuance of the law passed by the National Assembly in its last special session, there is a plan of fixing maximum prices both for wholesale and retail business in Manila as well as in the provinces. The Emergency Control Board has appointed a technical committee to study this question, presided over by Director Cornelio Balmaceda of the Bureau of Commerce. Mr. Benito Razon is the Executive Officer of the Board. Merchants who are willing to offer suggestions are invited to present their views either to Mr. Balmaceda or to Mr. Razon at the offices of the National Economic Council in the Metropolitan Water District Building. If it should be necessary, in order to make the control of prices effective, the Government itself will import direct those articles of prime necessity that are generally consumed in the country.

Statement: President Quezon on Public improvements in Manila that were undertaken by the National Government since 1935, October 18, 1939 PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS IN MANILA THAT WERE UNDERTAKEN BY THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT SINCE 1935

[Released to the Press on October 18, 1939]

Public improvements in the City of Manila, which have been undertaken since the establishment of the Commonwealth Government, have reached the total amount of P27,262,857.81 up to last June 30. Of this huge sum the National Government spent more than P21,000,000, while the City of Manila appropriated P3,000,000, and the Metropolitan Water District contributed over P2,700,000.

The main public projects constructed during this period are government buildings, particularly those composing the government center, like the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and the Department of Finance buildings, the Customs House, the Bureau of Science wing building, and improvements in Malacañan.

Improvements were also made on Aviles and Santa Mesa Streets, while work on the Dewey Boulevard extension is rapidly progressing. The construction of two city bridges has also been started. When finished a bridge will connect the port areas, and the new Colgante bridge will greatly lighten traffic in Santa Cruz district.

Port improvements undertaken during the period included those of the north harbor and the seaplane basin. The National Government likewise provided appropriations for the new buildings of the Philippine General Hospital and for improving the drainage of Manila with a view to meeting the health and sanitation problems of the city. The Metropolitan Water District spent funds for the construction and improvement of Manila's water supply and sewer system.

The City of Manila spent during this period P893,388 for bridges on national roads and city streets, P3,000,000 for street construction and maintenance, about P300,000 for drainage. For its school buildings and the new city hall, half of which has been completed, appropriation of more than P2,000,000 was spent.

At present all government projects in Manila which have already been started are being completed with the amount appropriated by the National Government for their construction.

Statement: President Quezon on payment of pension or gratuity to Philippine Army Officers separated from the Service, October 30, 1939

PRESS STATEMENT

ON

PAYMENT OF PENSION OR GRATUITY TO PHILIPPINE ARMY OFFICERS SEPARATED FROM THE SERVICE

[Released to the Press on October 30, 1939]

In order to remove from the public mind any misconception arising from misrepresentation of facts—such as that contained in the article of Judge Mariano H. de Joya, published in the Tribune of October 19—regarding the separation of some officers from the Philippine Army, the following is hereby released:

When the Philippine Constabulary became a part of the Philippine Army, a new law, Commonwealth Act No. 190, took into full account the services rendered by officers and enlisted men during their previous connection with the former Philippine Constabulary, and prescribed for the granting of retirement pay to the officer or enlisted man who severs his connection from the Army.

In addition to the above, the National Defense Act, by its section 22 (g) as amended by Act No. 385, has made ample provision for the granting of a gratuity upon separation from the service of officers, including former Constabulary officers who became Army officers, whenever upon recommendation of an Efficiency Board they shall have been recommended to the President of the Philippines for separation from the service for inefficiency.

By virtue of such provisions of law, an officer that may be discharged from the service for inefficiency or for reasons other than his own misconduct, willful failure, the intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquor, or vicious or immoral habits, shall be entitled to a gratuity equivalent to one month of his current pay received by him at the time of his separation, multiplied by the number of complete years of service, including his length of service in the Philippine Constabulary. It is undeniable that, instead of getting nothing as claimed by Judge de Joya and notwithstanding the inefficiency of an officer, the law grants him a gratuity commensurate with his term of service, so that his separation may not work hardship on him or on his family. A number of officers, it should be made clear, are to be retired because they have honorably fulfilled the requirements for retirement. They are entitled to monthly pensions or, if preferred, to gratuity in lump sum, as ample reward for their past services. Others will be separated—for the best interest and general efficiency of the military service—because these officers have not come up to the required standard of efficiency, honor, or integrity. To retain them unjustifiably is to be unjust to other officers who are trying their best to measure up to the traditions of the Army. However, no officer shall be separated from the service until his case has been thoroughly investigated and proved that he falls below the Army standard.

[Released to the Press on December 7, 1939]

After the luncheon given by His Excellency, the President, this noon at Malacañan Palace in honor of governors and city mayors, a conference was held in which the governors and mayors expressed the opinion that the National Assembly should be requested to amend the law to the effect that the plebiscite on the constitutional amendments be held separately from the election for provincial and municipal officials.

This is deemed necessary in order that the people may be well informed of the nature and scope of these amendments, and so that local issues may not be injected in the consideration of national problems.

The governors and mayors also expressed the opinion that the date for the election of provincial and municipal officials should not be changed in order to maintain the stability of governmental institutions.

“The people of the Philippines cannot remain indifferent to the terrible suffering of the Turkish people. Our country must render all the help that is within our power to give. I shall authorize the collection of special contributions for the victims of the catastrophe in Turkey.”

Simultaneously President Quezon sent a radiogram to the President of Turkey expressing the Filipino people’s sympathies because of the earthquake disaster which devastated the Turkish nation.

The reply of the Turkish Chief Executive, as translated from French into English, follows:

“His

Statement: President Quezon on the Fall of Bataan

Press Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:

On the Fall of Bataan, April 11, 1942

The fall of Bataan closes a chapter in the history of the Filipino people for freedom as heroic, if not the most heroic, that we have ever fought. Side by side with their American comrades, first under the personal leadership of General MacArthur and later of Lieutenant General Wainwright, our forces fought without air support against a foe that had, at all times, absolute command of the air and the seas, and an overwhelming superiority in number of land forces. This fight lasted as long as resistance was humanly possible, for our forces gave up only after they had become exhausted from lack of food and continuous battle. I am proud of the part that the Filipino forces have taken in this epic battle and I am profoundly grateful to the whole army which has thus vindicated honor and right of the Filipino people to become an independent nation. Their country and countrymen will consider every man who took part in this battle as a national hero and will feel undying gratitude for the service they have rendered.

The loss of Bataan has not ended the war in Philippines. Corregidor, the Visayan Islands, and Mindanao are still fighting the enemy and I am certain that all these places will be defended as long as there are means with which to defend them. The Filipino people will stand by and with America and our allies to the bitter end.

Statement: President Quezon on Japan's new policy of Anti-semitism, February 18, 1943

Japan's New Policy of Anti-semitism Attacked by President of Philippines

February 18, 1943

Washington (Feb. 17)

President Manuel L. Quezon of the Philippine Commonwealth today called Japan's new policy of anti-Semitism a tribute to the patriotism of Jews in the occupied islands. Praising Philippine Jews as "quiet, energetic and productive," he expressed the hope that he would be able to work with them again after the war in accordance with the Philippine principle of religious freedom.

There are between 1,000 and 1,500 Jews in the Philippine Commonwealth. Several hundred came as refugees from Nazi Europe. President Quezon gave some of them land from his personal estate on the Island of Luzon, and took great interest and satisfaction in their progress as farmers. Others went into business.

On January 26, Berlin broadcast the following news items for distribution to German papers: "The Japanese military administration in Manila has issued a stern warning to Jews living in the Philippines. Owing to the lenient and magnanimous attitude of the Japanese authorities, it is stated that the Jews have tried to obtain advantages for themselves and made themselves guilty, not only of black market dealings and profiteering, but also of attempted espionage. In the future the authorities will meet such attempts with drastic measures." The Tokyo and Japanese-controlled Manila bodies echoed this report.

PRAISES LOYALTY OF PHILIPPINE JEWS; SAYS JAPAN IS APING GERMANY

In his statement today, replying to the Japanese anti-Jewish allegations, President Quezon said: "Translated from the crude tongue of Nazi-Japanese propaganda, these words are a tribute, unintended, to be sure, to the Jewish citizens and residents of the Philippines. They testify to the fact that the Jews are standing loyally and firmly at the side of the other groups in the Philippine population, risking their lives and their goods in opposition to the Japanese invaders. I am proud of this evidence of the rightness of the Philippine principle of religious freedom. It proves that all the religions in my beloved country are helping each other and fighting together in the cause of freedom.

"The people of the Philippines have never been guilty of the barbarous and divisive error of religious bigotry. Ever since the commonwealth was established, the majority of the Filipinos, who are Catholics, have lived peacefully and in friendship with their non-Catholic neighbors – whether Protestant, or Jewish, or Mohammedan, or Pagan. The small number of Jews in the Philippines is a respected section of our population. After Hitler introduced official persecution into Germany, we offered our hospitality to a number of refugees, who came to the Philippines and quickly adjusted themselves to our way of life. These people were quiet, energetic and productive. They have become a welcome and loyal part of the Filipino population.

"Now the Japanese are aping Nazi Germany by manufacturing their own anti-Jewish propaganda and persecution. I am convinced that Tokyo has announced this policy as a cheap way of pleasing the fanatical Nazis who are its allies, and as a trick to destroy the unity of Philippine resistance. The Nazi propaganda machine is undoubtedly exploiting this story to justify its brutal philosophy among those of its own citizens who are beginning to doubt.

"There is a sharp contrast between the principle of equality as practiced by the Filipino people, on the one hand, and the principle of prejudice and discrimination practiced by the Nazis and Japanese, on the other. This contrast marks one more sector in the moral conflict underlying this war. We shall be victorious in this as in every other sector. I look forward to the day when all the peoples of the earth are again able to work together peacefully and fruitfully to build a better world."

Statement: President Quezon in comment on the Pacific War Situation

Statement of President Manuel L. Quezon:
In Comment on the Pacific War Situation

[Released on April 15, 1943]

I am very seriously concerned over reports from the Pacific area that the Japanese are concentrating large forces near Australia and that they have in fact already made several air attacks against Australian defenses greater than ever before.

The whole world knows that my heart is in the Philippines: and I cannot forget that the fate of the Filipino people, who are now under the iron heel of a ruthless enemy, is bound up with the course of the war in the Pacific.

Japan must not be allowed to make further gains. She must not be granted time to devote all her energies to consolidating her position and mastering the immense natural resources now available to her—resources even greater than those available to Hitler. To give Japan the chance to do these things would mean very serious risks for the United Nations and would raise tremendously the price of her ultimate defeat—in lives and in sacrifices.

I hope, therefore, that steps will be taken—and taken immediately—to strengthen our arms in the Pacific, at least enough to stop Japan in her tracks.

It is true that, in waging this global war, many coldblooded decisions must be made. There have been, and no doubt will continue to be, times when whole battlefronts and even whole nations will be considered temporarily expendable in order to win the final victory. But it is impossible for me to conceive that the entire Far East is expendable.

Statement: President Laurel on the Seventy-Second Anniversary of the martyrdom of Fathers Jose Burgos, Mariano Gomez, and Jacinto Zamora, February 17, 1944

‘An Unequal Fight for Racial Vindication’

Statement on the Seventy-Second Anniversary of the martyrdom of Fathers Jose Burgos, Mariano Gomez, and Jacinto Zamora, Manila, February 17, 1944:

Filipino churchmen today in particular and their countrymen at large face an increasing challenge in the memory of the three martyred priests of Bagumbayan: Fathers Burgos, Gomez, and Zamora. The three priests blazed the way for responsible nationalism and racial self-respect. They set a tradition and a standard of moral leadership for Filipino leaders of the cloth to go by in sharing the responsibilities of nation-building under the young Republic.

Seventy-two years ago today, the three Filipino priests quietly met their common destiny at Bagumbayan Field. They suffered martyrdom on the garrote, for daring to voice the grievances of the Filipino people against the corruption and the injustice of certain civil and ecclesiastical authorities. Especially did they incur their hatred for advocating the secularization of the clergy in this country.

There was an unequal fight for racial vindication. Their efforts threatened the supremacy of obscurantism in this country. And, in their confusion and fear, their enemies sought wildly for means to destroy the obstacles to the continuation of the established order. Blindly and without regard for justice and truth, they pinned the guilt of the Cavite Revolt on Fathers Burgos, Gomez, and Zamora. Happily for its good name, the church itself upheld their innocence.

Today the Filipino people cherish their memory, as their posterity will continue to do so, in reverence of the spirit of freedom of the will to determine their own destiny, implicit in the martyrdom of Fathers Burgos, Gomez, and Zamora. Suppressed, it may smolder for a time—only to flare out again with greater brilliance and vigor. Hardly were the bodies of the three martyr-priests cold in their graves, when Rizal’s voice, more insistent and more compelling, flung the challenge against injustice, tyranny and corruption. And then was heard the tramp of the Katipunan, putting to rout the combined forces of oppression and obscurantism.

We are the heirs of the blessings for which the blood of such men as Burgos, Gomez and Zamora was offered freely as an earnest of the dignity and beauty of the life of subsequent generations. It is for us to keep the light of their sacrifice forever aflame. We should guard it with zeal, protect it with our very lives, lest our right to determine our destiny be snatched from our hands again.

HISTORICAL PAPERS AND DOCUMENTS

Memorandum of the Auditor of the General Auditing Office to President Quezon, July 24, 1936

COMMONWEALTH OF THE PHILIPPINES
GENERAL AUDITING OFFICE
MANILA

July 24, 1936

Memorandum for the President:

In compliance with Your Excellency's request, I have in honor to inform you that the appropriation for the National Assembly for clerks of the members thereof is being paid directly to the clerks appointed by the members and not the members themselves. There is no definite number of clerks employed by each member. Some have only one while others employ even more than 10, but the average number is about 5 clerks for each member. This Office has found nothing irregular in the disbursement of this appropriation since the employees themselves, after having rendered the service, receive their salaries direct from the Government.

Respectfully submitted,

(Sgd.) J. HERNANDEZ
Auditor General

Memorandum of President Quezon on interspersion of small landholdings between large areas of public land applied for for pasture purposes, July 29, 1936

Memorandum
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Interspersion of Small Landholdings between Large Areas of Public Land applied for Pasture Purposes

[Delivered on July 29, 1936]

Memorandum
The
The Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce:

for—
Honorable

His Excellency, the President, desires that, as a matter of policy, small landholdings be interspersed between large areas of public land which are applied for pasture purposes either under the Forest Law or the Public Land Law. If a parcel of land applied for for pasture purposes adjoins vacant lands, such adjacent public lands should be reserved for disposition only in the form of small parcels. In case the land applied for for pasture abuts upon another tract of land already applied for for the same purpose, a certain portion of the land newly applied for and immediately contiguous to the latter should likewise be reserved for disposition only in the form of small landholdings. The reason for following such a policy is to prevent the pasture permittees or lessees from extending their holdings, thereby avoiding the clandestine occupation of big areas of public land in violation of the area requirements of the Public Land Law and the Forest Law and also to provide available areas for small pasture landholders.

Press Conference Notes of President Quezon, August 14, 1936

PRESS CONFERENCE NOTES

AUGUST 14, 1936

THE PRESIDENT. Good morning, gentlemen. Please be seated. Well, I am ready for your questions.

THE TRIP TO THE UNITED STATES

THE PRESS. Mr. President, have you any special plan for your proposed trip to the United States?

THE PRESIDENT. Nothing.

THE PRESS. Have you fixed the date for your trip, Mr. President?

THE PRESIDENT. Well, I have none for my trip because out of ninety per cent of every hundred trips that I make, the original plan is always changed. (Laughter) So, if I change my plan, that will be news.

THE PRESS. Are you planning to cross the Pacific, Mr. President?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes.

TAGAYTAY RIDGE

THE PRESS. Mr. President, can you tell us something about the Tagaytay ridge? Do you have any plan of transferring the capitol of the government to Tagaytay?

THE PRESIDENT. There is no such idea to transfer the capital. In the first place, that is not a very large ridge, but I have a plan of transferring the capital there as has been recommended by the Bureau of Public Works that it would be advantageous to create a new city there, and I understand this plan of improving Tagaytay had been adopted by the Government, at least by the Department of public Works long before I became President. One day, when I went to Liang, I found that they were building a road from the crossing of that road, that is, from Mendez-Nuñez to Silang and, I called one of those men. "What are you doing?", I asked. "We are building the road to Manila through Silang," was the answer. That is the road where I used to pass to go to Tagaytay. I said: "You stop that and if the Bureau of Public Works orders you to go ahead with the work, tell them that I gave you instruction to stop it." I thought then that it was one of the unnecessary roads we were building, so two months thereafter, Williams asked me if I gave orders to stop the building of the road, and I answered him, "yes."

"Why Mr. President," he said, "that is a very important road because if this road will be improved, it will make Tagaytay accessible to Manila, and Tagaytay is one of the nicest places in the Philippines. Tagaytay is much cooler, three degrees cooler than Manila, and it is never warm there." Well, I said to him that I would go one day with him there, and I went.

I went to Tagaytay with Williams, it was a very hot day, and we started at ten o'clock in the morning. My idea was to arrive there before noon because it is only an hour's ride from Manila, it was last May, and when I left Manila I was perspiring all the way through and upon my arrival I walked through the ridge and when I came back to my car. I found that my perspiration had already dried up. It was so nice and cool, and I asked if there was water. They told me that there was sufficient water for a population of 15,000, and if the population should increase, still they would have enough water. As I have said, I walked through the ridge, and I found it to be the most beautiful place in the Philippines. If the government is going to spend money in building this road, we better think of something big here. I am planning to talk to the owners of the land and ask them if they will give the land free to the government where streets have to be built and if they are going to sell it at a very low price, every piece of land that may be needed for public purposes. If they will, we will go ahead with it; otherwise, we will just stop. My idea will be to create a city there, chartered city, like Baguio and have Arellano prepare a plan for the city and take advantage of every place that is worth taking advantage of for people to enjoy the beauties of nature. From Tagaytay, you can see Laguna de Bay and the China Sea. You can see Marikina very well. The sunset is marvelous, and when you look toward the lake, you behold the most glorious sight of the place. I want to have the Manila Hotel a branch there, a golf court, a place for a national building, a fine park, etc. In other words, I should like to build a modern city there and if that is done, we will have the busy people in Manila, at least, to spend their week ends. When the road is finished, it will be fine and what improvements we could not make in Baguio, we will make here. The busy people cannot make to Baguio, as often as they want to because of the distance. If they go, they go occasionally, and if they go, they have to abandon their work, which is not the case when they go to Tagaytay for you can reach the place or return to Manila in an hour. If you leave the place at 7, you will arrive in the office at 8. In other words, the people who have business in Manila can spend their week ends in Tagaytay. Another advantage Tagaytay has over Baguio is that Tagaytay is within reach of the people of the middle class who can take advantage to take their vacation in Tagaytay, which they cannot do in Baguio. So we are studying now this matter. I am not going to do anything until we have secured the land at a very low price for public use, like golf court, hotel, roads, parks for the city, school sites, municipal buildings, etc.

THE PRESS. Will there be a government building like offices of the government?

THE PRESIDENT. Well, I do not know. I should like to have the land, and in case the Assembly cares to build their Offices there, why, they can do it. They can hold sessions there too — we could have the Legislative Building transferred to Tagaytay, we could have a branch of the University there. I have always found out that the University of the Philippines has been located where it should not be located — in the center of this metropolitan city. The boys are exposed to all kinds of temptations and all sorts of things. Tagaytay is a place where the boys would have a fine climate and where they will have no occasion for going to places that are not the places for young people to go whose health might be affected, and I think that with the exception of the college of Medicine, the whole University may be taken there. The only question is the expense. But Dr. Bocobo suggested to me that if the National Government could use for its offices the buildings of the University, instead of building the offices of the government we could do it. If they could use the building of the University it would be good because the people would not have to go from one place to another. I do not know whether it is favorable or not. I have not gone as far as that.

We are going to prepare Tagaytay as a place for tourists, as a place for business men living in Manila and as a place for the middle class who want to go for a change as there is a difference in climate between Manila and that place. That is the most important use of the place for tourists once the road is made, and I do not believe that any person who comes to Manila does not go to Tagaytay.

THE PRESS. Will Tagaytay be a good place for sightseeing to tourists?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, but I am not doing anything in that connection until we build hotels. That, in my opinion, is the first thing. We have to advertise the Philippines, and people who come here will see, not only the place inside, but also see places outside. As it is now, we do not have good hotels to go to and people do not live on sceneries alone; they also live on bread. My own experience as a traveler is that unless I had a good bed and place to stay, by Gosh! I would leave the place immediately with anger and disappointment. But we have very few places in the Philippines that can be developed for tourists' purposes. One is Tagaytay, and in Mindanao there are also several places. Mindanao is a wonderful place.

THE PRESS. Do you not think that if Tagaytay is purchased and the government build hotels so that the Manila will have a branch there, it will not discourage private capital?

THE PRESIDENT. No, unless they build the hotels on the roads. Nobody seems to be interested in the business of building hotels; I am not interested in building hotels at all. Of course, the government has made lots of investments, but if anybody should offer to buy Manila Hotel for 500,000, I would let it go.

ANOMALIES IN THE ARMY

THE PRESS. Has Assemblymen Oppus brought to your attention the alleged anomalies in purchasing supplies for the Philippine Army?

THE PRESIDENT. No, nobody has brought then to my attention except the newspapers, and I tell you it is going to be a very strange thing if anything that appears in the newspapers should be true and of which I know nothing about. I do not need Oppus to tell it to me because I would have known it even without anyone telling it to me.

EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS

THE PRESS. Is the government taking a hand in the preparation for the arrival of the delegates to the Eucharistic Congress?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir.

MINDANAO

THE PRESS. Some time ago, in our discussion of the Davao situation, you said that you would study and perhaps you would recommend it to the Legislature. Is that in line in this period of the Legislature?

THE PRESIDENT. Well, have you not read my message about Davao? That settles the question. I said everything about it in that message of mine to the National Assembly.

THE PRESS. But you said something about constructing a railroad line there, Mr. President?

THE PRESIDENT. As a matter of fact, we are doing it. There are many people working there now and they are going ahead with that road working from three different provinces. We are gaining time in that way. They are going to meet, that is, we have started from three different places, so as to accelerate the work, and I expect to make an automobile trip next June from Davao to Cagayan.

THE PRESS. I think the District Engineer is sending many men to work on the road.

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, many of those fellows will remain as settlers there. You know what I am going to do is this. I will have the Bureau of Lands survey all the lands along the roads; we would not permit the people to take land except at a distance of 60 meters on either side of the road. We are reserving the land beyond that. The land connecting with that is being subdivided for homesteaders. The homesteads will be long so that the front of the homestead will be toward the road and will not be very wide. The idea is to give to as many people as possible the opportunity to own land. Then next to that is the land that we are reserving for the corporations to take. In other words, we do not give the roads to corporations and we are reserving lands for roads that will permit the owners of the public lands that are beyond to take their products to the main road. We are not going to permit discrimination of any sort as has been done in the past, and we are going to give preference to the men who have been working on the road, to men from other provinces who are coming there with a little capital to buy carabaos and implements and settle there.

THE PRESS. Where will you use this 60 meters, Mr. President?

THE PRESIDENT. In case we want to extend the road and plant trees along the roads. You see, the Philippines is a hot country and if every road is provided with trees, people walk along the side road. We have lost a lot of money, I mean, it is going to cost the government a lot of money to reserve lands sufficient for the roads to be widened. I think that 50 years from now we shall have enough roads. I think 60 meters is enough for roads, for we may be travelling in airplanes; perhaps even in going to the assembly we may be travelling on the air and the accident will be on the air.

ANOMALIES IN THE ARMY

THE PRESS. Mr. President, In connection with the anomalies in the purchase of army supplies, has Assemblyman Oppus reported to you about it?

THE PRESIDENT. I do not know anything about it. As I have said, I can only say that I am not informed about it. Well, I am going to keep it not for some of these people because I believe that that matter should have been brought to my attention. They are making the investigation, and I am not placing any obstacle in that, that is, any investigation that the National Assembly may care to make along that line will be welcome, but the Chief Executive must be informed first because it is disrespectful on their part – what they are doing now. Of course, I want to make the investigation when there is ground for it. I think the charge is that the army has bought several revolvers at a wary high price. What did they buy?

THE PRESS. Revolvers, beds, etc. They said that in ease of beds costing P12 each offered by one was preferred to beds at P7 of the same material.

THE PRESIDENT. If that be true, the man who accepted the bid will have to go to jail. Beds of the material selling at P12 was preferred to beds costing P7 each, why, that means an increase of the population of the laity. You see what we are doing in the Army is this: we have bought guns for the Army and we have saved several million pesos out of this. In the end, when we have bought the rifles that we need, we would save from 15 to 20 million pesos. In the purchase that we have already made, we have saved already 3 million pesos.

THE PRESS. Did those savings comes from the purchase of rifles only, Mr. President?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, before we bought rifles at from $30 to $45, now we buy them at from $3 to $8. And we are making a lot of those purchases.

THE PRESS. Are you at liberty to disclose whether these rifles are good?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, and all I know is that they are American arms.

THE PRESS. Can you tell us the shipment of these rifles?

THE PRESIDENT. I think they are around 50,000.

THE PRESS. Has the government taken any step in purchasing artillery of heavy arm?

THE PRESIDENT. We are going to buy some of those.

EXEMPTION OF DONATIONS FROM TAXES

THE PRESS. What that do you think of the measure now before the Assembly regarding the place that property donated to be charitable and religious institutions be exempted from the payment of inheritance tax?

THE PRESIDENT. I am against the exemption, for this reason. The government, at least, this government, is spending money for educational purposes, for charitable institutions and if that is the case, why should there be exemption when the donation is intended for a charitable purpose, why should it be exempted from the payment of taxes when the government is also doing that work?

THE PRESS. How has this tax exemption gone thus far?

THE PRESIDENT. I understand there is no exemption, and of course, there was no exemption. I still prefer that the exemption be stricken off. I understand there is no exemption in any of those things. Well, the most charitable institution is the government any way.

PUBLIC WORKS

THE PRESS. Mr. President, have you approved the hydraulic plan in Infanta, Tayabas?

THE PRESIDENT. I do not know anything about it.

THE PRESS. But there is a bill presented before the National Assembly

RELEASE OF NEWS

THE PRESIDENT. It is not surprising that notice of this sort was published before the President should know it. But I am criticizing my own people and I am going to make it hot for some of them. For instance, the Herald published the story the other day with this headline: "THE SURVEY BOARD IS TALKING THROUGH ITS HAT. THE ROAD BOARD SAYS SOMETHING." I have not seen the report, but a Herald reporter tried to communicate it to the chairman of this Board. Why, this was printed before I saw it. It is an official discourtesy that the report la published before it is submitted to the president. It is an official discourtesy. Of course, I do not blame the reporter for publishing it for if I were the reporter, I would steal the news if I could, but in that case, I understand the report was given out before it was submitted to me. When communications are addressed to the President, the president is the only one that can give then to the press. The other party has no right to give it. Nobody has the right to tell to the press, anything about the conversation had between the President and another person, but what happens Is that the minute they leave me, everybody knows what it is about.

THE HIGH COMMISSIONER

I understand that publication which appeared in the Bulletin was bases on an information given by a member of the House. Well, the information given by that member of the House was not correct. I do not mind telling you, gentlemen, what happened there, I have an understanding with the High Commissioner that whenever I wish to make use of his office I am free to call, which I think is very nice and gracious for the High Commissioner to do. And in view of that, on more than one occasion, I have asked Mr. Jones to go over a certain matter that has some bearing on financial aspect, and to let me know his views about it. Well Mr. Jones never expressed any views whenever I asked him to give a little memorandum expressing his arguments in favor of this; he does not say he is against this because it is against a certain precedent, etc. That is the way he does things, even though I have asked him to give me his views. Now, in this particular case, I have a project for the issuance of seven million peso bonds and I asked Mr. Jones that he personally go over that and let me know what he thinks about it. Well, Mr. Jones Just wrote down the argument pro and con, the good side and the bad side, but he expressed no opinion. Well, one day the Chairman of the Public Works of the House, Mr. Cuenco, came to see me and he was accompanied by another member, no, he was Mr. Marabut. He asked me if I were going to recommend to the National Assembly a bill authorizing the issuance of seven million peso bonds. I said I was not sure yet because I was studying the memorandum Mr. Jones had given me. Well he left me. Now, about 20 minutes later, Nazario asked me, "Mr. President, is it true that the office of the High Commissioner objects to the issuance of the seven million peso bonds?" I answered, no don't print that because it is full of dynamite." Then I said, "call Vargas and have him telephone all the newspapers not to print it because it is full of dynamite." Nazario told me that it was not necessary because there was nobody besides him that knew about that. "I am the only one who knows that, Mr. President." Evidently, that statement of Nazario that nobody was given this news came true and I forgot all about it. Monday morning, as usual, at give o'clock, I walked around the building. I had a terrible headache. Evidently I got an indigestion from Calauang. I went to my room. I got the Bulletin and I saw there this news. I immediately got out of my bed with fever and all, and I got my pen and I myself wrote my statement. I felt very bad about it; I know that Mr. Jones would give his own statement. After all, he was the most affected about that news. I do not know how Cuenco stated the matter, but I have an idea. The trouble about these reporters is this. I suppose Cueneo told Nazario that the president does not know whether he is going to issue the bonds because there is some doubt about it after my consultation with Jones. As I have said, I knew what was going to be the reaction to the news because I said that that is charged with dynamite. Cuenco might have understood I was hesitating because the High Commissioner was objecting. As a matter of fact, Williams thought that Jones didn't get you. He came to me with this complaint, "I thought, Mr. President, Jones didn't get you. I asked him, why, and he answered: "Because here, from the beginning to the end, he has not expressed anything." I told Williams that Mr. Jones does not express an opinion; he just calls attention to arguments in favor of this against that, etc. He is adopting a very wise and conservative policy. The papers like "The Philippines Herald" and "The Tribune" to which I am thankful, did not take notice of the fact, they just presumed it. But the editorial of the Bulletin and, perhaps, it is well that it did happen because I hope that because it happened, it will never happen again.

THE PRESS. But Mr. President, the use of the word "mischievous" in your statement is the reason for writing that editorial.

THE PRESIDENT. Now, Mr. Smith, no one has the right to say of this government in that language, and I am not going to permit that such language be used as long as I am the head of this government, when you said the High Commissioner "put thumbs down." The government of the Commonwealth deserves to be respected. When you say "Put thumbs down", you were treating the government of the Commonwealth as government run by irresponsible kids. You could just as well say that the High commissioner has some objection or doubts the wisdom of the issuance of this bond. But when you speak of that government as irresponsible, by Gosh! You....

Let me tell you that I sent for Romulo for that statement, and like any newspaperman he likes to shorten that and since I was sick, he took the liberty of shortening the statement. I ordered that before publishing the statement, I would have to see the correction made by Romulo; and before 12 o' clock I asked Vargas for it, and he brought the copy with the correction. I tell you I have deliberately put every word in that statement and that was prepared by me. I resented the editorial; I am resenting it still. You can see how I have reacted to this. I think the Government of the Commonwealth deserves some courtesy from the people of this country and of every other country. We are trying to do our best to make this government worthy of the respect of civilized and progressive peoples of the world. I am working like a dog, and if somebody will take the advantage of every opportunity to criticize and treat this government as if it were run by irresponsible kids, my Gosh! I would not tolerate it.

THE PRESS. Your reaction, Mr. President, clarifies your stand when you said that because it did happen, it might not happen in the future.

THE PRESIDENT. My statement clarifies the position of everybody because that statement is in accordance with law. I myself have a copy of the Tydings-McDuffie Law; I have to keep it in my own hand. Do you know how much temperature I had then? I had 103. It was very important news considering the fact that it affects the establishment of the Government of the Commonwealth. It appeared that there was an agreement between the Government of the Commonwealth and the High Commissioner,—you see the High Commissioner has the right to express an opinion, of course, at least in the spirit of helpfulness. The position of High Commissioner has been created by congress, not with any idea of embarrassing the Government of the Commonwealth, but with the idea of being helpful to the Government of the Commonwealth, and, of course, to safeguard the interest of the United States who is the sovereign power. Well, the High Commissioner has three rights which, I think, he has in his article, expressed very well. The Commissioner has the right to be consulted, the right to advise and the right to warn. This is a joint responsibility in a way with the American people. The success of the government will be a credit to America as well as to the Philippines. If we fail here, it will be a discredit to the Philippines as well as to the United States if the High Commissioner, after I have consulted him, can advising anything well and good; but after getting his opinion in those matters within his jurisdiction, I still reserve the right to act against his advice, if I think that should do it. But he knows that after getting his opinion, we decide otherwise, which may not be to the interest of the government or of the people, he could say: "Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with this case. That is your privilege, but as well-wisher of this government, may I make some suggestions?" "Why certainly," I would answer. Then he can continue saying, "It is true that what you intend to do is all right, but it might have this effect, etc." Then I would answer, "My Gosh, you are right; thank; you very much. It is good you have called my attention to it for I would have simply overlooked it."

(Continuing)... The President can on a few specific cases such as his power to annul certain laws. The purpose of the law is to give power to the Government of the Commonwealth and by virtue of that power assume responsibility for what is going on here. Therefore, I have to act when it is a matter of policy by issuing executive orders.

THE PRESS. President, do you have a right to a hearing?

THE PRESIDENT. certainly.

THE PRESS. Is it not the High Commissioner that makes the report direct to the President of the United States?

POWERS OF THE PRESIDENT

THE PRESIDENT. Yes. As I have already said there are only few instances where the president can annul a certain law. Supposing a law was passed which is contrary to the constitution of the United States, supposing we pass a law impairing the performance of a contract. In that case the President may suspend the enforcement of the act.

THE PRESS. Mr. President, will it not affect the performance of some important public works to be done if there is no meeting of the minds?

THE PRESIDENT. I do not think so. In the case of public works, the President can suspend that. I will give you an example. Suppose the Bureau of Public Works enters into a contract for the building of a palace for the Chief Executive worth 50 million pesos, the President can suspend that because the Government of the Commonwealth has no money to build that palace for 50 million pesos, the President can suspend the construction of that palace; we have the right to do that work. The same thing is true if we have a contract to build a one million peso palace. The President could not suspend that, but if we sign a contract with the contractor and the President knows that the contractor will build a palace, when it comes to the payment and the government pay, the president can suspend that work. Well, gentlemen, do you have any more question to ask me?

THE PRESS. Mr. President, in the name of the morning papers, I would suggest that we hold our conference in the afternoon.

THE PRESIDENT. You know the reason why we have chosen Friday morning for holding our conference, it is because we are supposed to discuss matters which affect the interest of the representatives of foreign papers. It is said that the best time for holding the conference in order that the news may be printed in the largest number of papers is on Friday; at least that is what I have been told. Now, gentlemen, it is up to you to choose the hour and the day you want to hold our conference. As for me, I can meet you any day, except Saturday and Sunday because I think you are more inclined to enjoy a little vacation on those days. So just fix the day among yourselves.

THE PRESS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that we hold our conference in the morning and the following Friday in the afternoon.

THE PRESIDENT. I think that will be all right. Good-bye, and thank you gentlemen.

Conference with Members of the National Assembly, September 26, 1936

CONFERENCE WITH MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

SEPTEMBER 26, 1936

10:55 A. M.

MR. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, may I have the floor with the consent of the President?

THE SPEAKER. Si, señor.

MR. OSIAS. I just wish to inform His Excellency that I was not present when the resolution was approved, nor did I take part in the discussion, but merely heard certain observations from our recognized Leader. As a humble member of the National Assembly, I should like to say, knowing as I very well do know of my own colleagues, this isolated case did not in any way reflect the views of the Assembly, either collectively or individually, with respect to their attitude toward the Chief Executive. I realize the seriousness of the question and how fundamental it is, and that is one reason why I should like to say, to state in this juncture, because I myself may have occasion to propose amendments that will affect certain offices and public functionaries. But what I should like to say before my colleagues and before the President is that when I do so, I do not do it with a view to present a challenge to the Executive and I do not give anybody else or any of the Assembly

THE PRESIDENT. I should like the members of the national Assembly to understand that in this particular case, I consider that an attack upon the prerogatives of the Chief Executive, because the proposed amendment was to suppress the appropriation for the Director of Posts, not based upon any theory, that the position was unnecessary, that the economy accomplished, if the amendment is passed, is in the interest of public service. It was based upon a statement publicly made that the suppression of the appropriation was in order to punish an executive officer of this government for some alleged discourtesy to the members of the Assembly. So I just went to say this to the Assemblymen of La Union (Mr. Osias), or to any member of the Assembly, so that they will not have the idea that any amendment, even the suppression of the position, that I will consider as acts against the prerogatives of the Chief Executive.

MR. OSIAS. I want to state that I am happy for no other reason than to hear such statement from the President, that I would like to continue in our labors in the confident belief that when I go after a certain item in the budget or after a certain person in this government, it is not with the intention of personally or officially offending the Chief Executive, nor is it for the purpose of challenging the prerogatives with which the President is constitutionally clothed. I rose because I have clearly understood, that in both branches of the government that when any member or group of members of the National Assembly seek to discuss certain actions that may affect a member of the executive branch of the government or even a member of the executive family of the President, that it is done in the interest of the whole, of which the National Assembly is a part. I think, Mr. Speaker, every Assemblymen feels a joint responsibility with the President in the success of this joint enterprise. It is a common responsibility and common obligation before the country and before the world, but I do not like to have it understood that the manifestations of the President mean that an executive official hereafter is going to wear a sort of placard upon his person, a sort of "Noli Me Tangere." I think the President is entitled to call the attention of any member of the Assembly to the spirit of true coalition,—if he be in error—and I doubt that that in the case with our colleagues here who voted in favor of the resolution when they acted as they did.

THE PRESIDENT. What do you mean when you say that the members of the National Assembly voted as they did, gentlemen from La Union?Mr.

MR. OSIAS. I said "voted as they did," Mr. President, because there was not the slightest thought in the whole discussion, even in the highest heat of its discussion. While I was there and while it was agreed at a caucus that they were not taking a step that was in any way offensive to the Chief Executive, it is precisely of our confidence in him that a member of the committee was appointed that this sentiment may be brought to your attention.

THE PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from La Union will permit (Mr. Osias), the procedure itself is already an attack on the prerogatives of the Chief Executive because while the Assembly is authorized and any member of the Assembly is perfectly authorized-under the law and the Constitutions propose amendments to the Appropriation Bill, to strike out any item of the appropriation when the reason for that is the desire of the Assembly to demand from the Chief Executive that a certain official of the government be removed from office, the Assembly is not exercising constitutional precaution and the mere fact that the amendment created for the appointment of a committee to tell the Chief Executive the wishes of the Assembly already proved the fallacy of the amendment, because it was an amendment intended through an unconstitutional procedure to remove an official of the Executive Department of the government from his office, because I was going to be asked that Ruiz be removed or be punished. If the Assembly has some complaint against a certain official of the government,— I just want to say that every time an amendment is presented to suppress a position or to reduce an appropriation, not from the point of view of economy but of punishing an official of the government, or proposing that his position be abolished, I will consider that an unconstitutional way of doing it.

MR. OSIAS. Mr. President, the very fact that that action was not taken in a formal session of the Assembly but it was taken in a manner, let us say, with the family circle, is proof positive that the members of the Assembly were animated by no other than by the spirit of cooperation and in the consciousness that they are bearing with the chief Executive.

THE PRESIDENT. My answer, Mr. Speaker, in this is, if that amendment has not been presented on the floor of the house; if the reasons for the amendment were not published as agreed in a caucus held on the floor of the Assembly and a committee was appointed to see me, I would have looked this matter from a different angle. And even if the amendment was presented before in a caucus, or if the amendment had been withdrawn so that the question had been brought to me either independently or as the official action of the Assembly, I might have viewed it from another point of view. But bearing in mind the amendment was presented for the suppression of that item and before a vote was taken and while the amendment was pending, a resolution was adopted asking me to remove Director Ruiz, how else can I interpret that resolution except that if I do not remove Director Ruiz, the position would be abolished in the appropriation? That involves a threat; that is the only way I interpret that.

MR. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to proceed further, I think if the matter is looked at from one point of view and from the different angle of those in the Assembly, may it not be interpreted that the steps taken was somewhat akin to the fact that every time that the President or a member of his family as permitted by the constitution could come to the Assembly or before a caucus, I trust that it is the same spirit that the delegation from the assembly and their family may be received. It happened so suddenly—perhaps we did not adopt the right procedure—, but the fact that we went immediately in executive session following the suspension of a formal session of the Assembly is, in itself, self-evident that the members thereof saw the gravity of the situation and, therefore, they preferred to talk the matter over among themselves, not when the Assembly was in session, but in caucus, when the Assembly was not in a formal session.

Now, to conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I say, although I have not been the object of discourtesy on my part as a member, but for the sake of strict policy of the government, the time has come when together we must be doing something to uphold the dignity and the prestige of the members of the Assembly. These things comes in succession with what the papers publicized, either wrongly or rightly, of the occurrence in Baguio—all this if they are permitted to continue, cannot but result in undermining the confidence of the people in the functionaries of the government and the institutions of the government. I plead, Mr. Speaker, that the President do not interpret this act of ours as a challenge to him personally or to his prerogatives as our chosen leader, and I plead further that he make common cause with the members of this Assembly in their desire to see that in this unicameral system which is in the nature of experimentation in the country, merit the credit and the confidence of the public beginning with the moaners of the official family of the President.

MR. CONFESOR. Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to make some explanation on this matter?

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iloilo (Mr. Confessor) has the floor.

MR. CONFESOR. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to have the status of the caucus explained with the officials of the Assembly when they held that caucus, that is, in relation with certain matters which affect the individual member of the Assembly and the chief Executive as the Leader of the party. In other words, if we passed a resolution in a caucus, what is the status of that resolution? Could a caucus, for example, pass any resolution which is not formal, of course, no official standing, it is not even made a matter of record, could it be taken by the Chief Executive as an official act of the Assembly itself so that in the future, Mr. President, we would guide our action as to your attitude towards the caucus which the members of the assembly may hold from time to time?

THE PRESIDENT. Is that your question?

MR. CONFESOR. Yes, sir.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, I am going to answer the Assemblyman from Iloilo (Mr. Confesor), but after I have answered that question, I am going to take my leave because I have not come here to enter into any discussion with anybody. I have come plainly to inform you of my stand on to tell you that my stand is such that bearing in mind all the fateful consequences of a breach between the Assembly and the Chief Executive, I shall not move an inch from that stand. I have carefully considered everything I have said here, I have studied this question thoroughly, I have placed in my hands my conscience and the oath of office that I have taken and, nothing, nothing can make me change the stand that I have already expressed to you. Now, I am going to answer your question.

I prefer not to discuss any further question because, gentlemen, you are going to confuse the terms of the subject at issue, and when the terms of the subject at issue are confused, the discussion is interminable. The best answer that I could give is the attitude you had taken with reference to that caucus—when you held your caucus about your pork barrel. The Chairman on public works came to see me; I had not considered that as an offense; I did not consider that as an attack upon my prerogatives to initiate the budget. Anything that you might do here is perfectly right and legal. The action of the caucus was act official, of course, but in this particular case, the action of the caucus is intimately connected with an act which has taken place upon the floor of the National Assembly, and I cannot look upon the action of the caucus except as an act of the Assembly itself. It is not necessary to clarify further what I have said and as for the courtesies that are due the member of the Assembly. Why, my goodness! No one of you has taken as much at heart the credit, the reputation, and the good name of this nation more than I have done myself, when secretly or openly I have always upheld the dignity and integrity of this Assembly.

As I have just told you a little while ago, in my conference with the members of the cabinet, chiefs and assistant chiefs of bureaus, I instructed them to give the members of the Assembly due respect and consideration. I cited the case of Assemblyman Rama who received from me immediate attention when I got his telegram complaining against a provincial treasurer for disobeying his order. I sent a telegram to said treasurer, asking him to explain why he did not answer the call of Assemblyman Rama. The answer I received was satisfactory, which I transmitted to Assemblyman Rama; but instead of thanking me, Assemblyman Rama insulted me in his telegram. He said, "That is all right if you are satisfied with liars, I am not." My God! that was stated in a telegram which all the employees of the government of Cebu must have read—the kind of telegram addressed to the President. That is terrible, because instead of thanking me for giving him my immediate attention, instead of recognizing and appreciating the immediate action that I had taken on the alleged discourtesy, for I was in Iloilo when I received that telegram, I told Secretary Vargas to write to Assemblyman Rama explaining to him why the explanation of the provincial treasurer of Cebu was satisfactory. Of course, later on, he admitted that he made a mistake. I know Assemblyman Kama did not intend to insult me because that insult, he thought, is not intended for my office, but it is kept on record just the same in my office.

Now, I have no objections to your coming to me if you have something to ask me. You can ask whatever you want. I have suggested that you come to me whenever you have some complaint to make, but I just want to tell you that you have no right to act that way for the purpose of asking for the removal of any official of the government; even in a caucus you ought not to do it. If you find among yourselves that there is an official of the government who is not satisfied with the majority of the members of the Assembly, and I am not speaking of the majority party, let the Speaker or the Floor Leader come to me. If the members of the Assembly are not satisfied with a certain official, just bring the matter officially, and I will order the investigation. Of course, we will have to abide by the result of the investigation. I will not object to ordering an investigation of Ruiz, but don't take action on the floor of the Assembly and hold caucus for the purpose of removing from office a certain official. I told De la Paz yesterday to tell these men to come to me if they have some complaint against Ruiz. Now Emilio...

MR. CONFESOR. I should like to find out...

MR. DE LA PAZ. The first thing I did on arriving at the session was to tell the floor leader that there had been a conversation between Your Excellency and myself, and the floor leader communicated this to the other Members. For Your Excellency's information, the reason why that amendment was neither passed nor rejected was that I, though I was then unworthily presiding at the session of the Assembly, believed that said amendment, if put to a vote, would be passed, and having received Your Excellency's admonition, I found it necessary to suspend the session.

THE PRESIDENT. I do not believe there is any further need of my staying and I am ready to leave, because I might to a certain extent, curtail the liberty of the Members of the Assembly, hence I believe it will be best if I leave.

MR. CONFESOR. We would like to have Your Excellency enlighten us as to the best manner...

THE PRESIDENT. I have already said all I have to say.

MR. CONFESOR. As the Assembly had not the least intention of raising an issue with the President, why is the President leaving us now?

THE PRESIDENT. In order that you may discuss this matter.

MR. CONFESOR. Being among ourselves here, let us deal with this matter among ourselves. As the President has gone to the trouble, which is quite a condescension, to come here, why would he not enlighten us as to the best manner of straightening out this matter without obstructing the working of the government? We do not want him to leave here with this issue undecided. We know that the President has solved many more difficult problems. Why should he not solve this problem now?

MR. HERNAEZ. We would like to take advantage of the presence of the President. I believe the matter has come to a stage where we must take some definite action. I want to say here, and repeat what the colleagues have just said, that there has not been any intention of attacking the President. Our intention was to take some action against the Director of Posts, Ruiz, and we never thought that that attack could possibly reflect upon our Executive.

I did not attend yesterday's session; but I can say that I have, with many of our colleagues, been opposed to Mr. Ruiz, solely from esprit de corps. If I had been here when the movement against Director Ruiz was being hatched, I would have suggested the introduction of a resolution against Mr. Ruiz instead of eliminating the salary of the Director of Posts. However, I believe that in view of the lack of time, and as we were passing the Budget page by page, our colleagues had not time enough to proceed in accordance with that proposition.

Now, I say this: as our intention in taking yesterday's action was merely to obtain justice for what we considered unjust treatment by Director Ruiz, I would propose to my colleagues here, in the presence of the President, the withdrawal of the amendment so far as it refers to the elimination of the salary of the Director of Posts, and if the President believes that the resolution, as drafted and adopted in the caucus yesterday, is not proper, we can also amend it. If the President is ready to hear and receive our complaints, if you believe that we must file a formal complaint against Director Ruiz, let us do it.

THE PRESIDENT. If I am to accept the statements of Members Confesor and Hernaez as voicing the sense of all the members of the Assembly, that there has not been the slightest intention... (Several voices: never!) I want to tell you this: the worst of it is that you have placed me in an embarrassing situation, because people will think that anything that I may do now is camouflage and that I have compromised with you in the sense that the amendment will be withdrawn now, and I shall remove Ruiz later. If Member Hernaez or any other, is ready to file an official complaint, I shall order an investigation. That changes the aspect of the matter. What has been done was an act of thoughtlessness. If those who were complaining against Mr. Ruiz had come to speak to me, as I told De la Paz, I would have demanded Ruiz' resignation without the need of any investigation, because in the case of a Director it is not necessary that there be charges: my not being satisfied with him or having lost confidence in him is sufficient cause for me to demand his resignation. He is not a civil official who cannot be removed without due investigation. In the case of a director, if I believe that he has ceased being useful to the Government and the entire Assembly is against him, his usefulness is gone. It is not a question of competency or incompetency, honesty or dishonesty. A director of a bureau who has incurred the antagonism of the entire Assembly has ceased being useful to the Government, and I will not sacrifice the Government for any man. I would have sent for Ruiz without making much noise about it and would have told him to tender his resignation. But as things are now, that can no longer be done. You will have to make the complaint, and I shall decide in accordance with the result of the investigation. I shall have to act as judge, and you must not feel aggrieved if I judge the question on its merits.

There would not have been any necessity for this if the amendment had not been introduced. I told De la Paz so confidentially. I said to him: "I am glad of this, old fellow, because I am tired of Ruiz; he is a worthless fellow," and I also told him not to bring up the matter on the floor because I should then have to support Ruiz. As I had said I was ready to ask Ruiz for his resignation, your insisting upon bringing the matter up on the floor could be interpreted only one way: I had to feel offended and had to consider your attitude as an imposition.

MR. VERA. I did not arrive in time to hear the explanations. It seems that Mr. Hernaez and others have said that there was no intention of creating an issue with the President. As it was I who made the motion, I wish to reiterate what my colleagues have said, that we had not such intention. On the contrary, we made it appear clearly in last night's discussion that we did not want to have any issue with the President and that we merely desired to transmit to the President the sentiment of the Assembly.

MR. HERNAEZ. The matter having been explained, I make a motion in the sense that the amendment abolishing the salary of the Director of Posts be withdrawn and that the resolution adopted yesterday in the caucus meeting be withdrawn; but that a resolution be adopted to the effect that the proper charges be preferred against Mr. Ruiz.

MR. LAVIDES. In the name of my colleagues I shall say two or three words. I fully agree with what Mr. Hernaez has said. I also want to make public the fact that I have no personal complaint against Mr. Ruiz. I have said so on the floor of the Assembly. When I was chosen to state the reasons for the amendment, I stated them frankly. I said to my colleagues: "You have gotten me into this, and I am going to see it through."

All that was done yesterday was really not against the Executive nor against the Executive Department. I merely wished to reflect the general sentiment of the members of the Assembly against Mr. Ruiz' official acts. Personally, Mr. Ruiz has been my friend for the last 25 years; and when I acted yesterday, I did not act as Lavides, but as the colleague of the Members of the Assembly.

I shall concur in all that may be decided here. If my colleagues desire to proceed in one way or another, it is up to them to decide it. All I did was to state what they wanted me to state.

MR. YARANON. Just a word, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say here that I did not have the least intention to make issues with the Chief Executive in including myself as one of the co-authors of that amendment.

THE SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the adoption of the motion of Member Hernaez? (Silence) The Chair does not hear any. Adopted.

MR. REVILLES. Mr. Speaker, let me say this: I have not the least intention of offending the Chief Executive. In fact, I am one of the co-authors of the amendment to suppress the item for the Director of Posts. One of the principal reasons is that not because I have been informed that Director Ruiz is discourteous to the members of the National Assembly, but one of the important reasons is that according to the information we received, that His Excellency has stated that Mr. Ruiz is not doing the work of the Director of Posts, but it is the assistant director. It was also our belief, Mr. President, that in ranking that amendment, we do not have the least intention of making issues with the Chief Executive.

THE PRESIDENT. That is not true. I do not even know the assistant director of Posts. (President continued his speech in Spanish)

THE PRESIDENT. In view of what Assemblyman Reviles has just said, I wish to state my opinion of Ruiz. I do not believe that Mr. Ruiz is not doing the work and that the assistant director is doing all the work for him, because if I had believed that I should have made him resign. If I had believed that Ruiz was not doing the work and that he was incompetent, I should have done my duty, removing him from office.

The reason why I told De la Paz that I was tired of Ruiz and that I was glad that a complaint had been made against him was that I had heard rumors to the effect that the people were not satisfied with him. But nobody has come. I am tired of hearing that gossip and I was hoping that somebody would complain to me, especially in a country where there is more gossip than certainty. Here gossip brands the purest woman as being the impurest, and there is no means of convincing the people. Hence, when De la Paz spoke to me about Ruiz, I told him I was glad because I was tired of Ruiz, I do not care to have a bureau chief who causes me annoyance.

Transfer of certain administrative supervision from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of Finance

Transfer
of
Certain administrative supervision
From the Secretary of the Interior
To the Secretary of Finance

[Released on September 29, 1936]

Gentlemen of the National Assembly:

Our Government is confronted with new problems and obligations which involve increasing demands on the public treasury on the other hand the financial relations between our central and local governments are most intimately intertwined, not only in the matter of revenue collections, but also in the granting of loans, extending of financial aid, and guaranteeing bond issues. Having in view the fact that the financial responsibility of the Commonwealth under the Constitution is not confined to the central government but also extends to its divisions and subdivisions, it is necessary to review the organization of our fiscal agencies and establish strong, coordinated and integrated financial organizations and policies.

I have, therefore, issued Executive Order No. 42, transferring to the Secretary of Finance the administrative supervision formerly exercised by the Secretary of the Interior over the offices of provincial, municipal, and city treasurers, thus consolidating the organization for collection work in an effort to insure the highest possible efficiency. A further step needs be taken for the completion of the plan by transferring, also from the Department of the Interior, the powers and supervision over the assessors, assessment of property, appropriations and other financial affairs of local governments to the Department of Finance which, by the nature of its functions, is the branch of the public service entrusted with the financial administration of the Commonwealth.

A bill intended to accomplish this purpose is submitted herewith. Considering its importance, I trust that it will deserve your early consideration.

Respectfully,

(Sgd.) MANUEL L. QUEZON

Memorandum of President Quezon upon signing Bill No. 2029, giving longevity privileges to commissioned officers of the United States Army joining the Philippine Army, November 8, 1936

MEMORANDUM

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

UPON

SIGNING BILL NO. 2029, GIVING LONGEVITY PRIVILEGES TO COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY JOINING THE PHILIPPINE ARMY

[November 8, 1936]

Memorandum

for—

The Chief of Staff, Philippine Army:

I have today signed Bill No. 2029, entitled “An Act to provide for the payment of longevity pay to commissioned officers of the Army of the United States joining the Army of the Philippines and to include service in the Army of the United States and/or in the United States Military or Naval Academy in determining the pay and rights of retirement of commissioned officers in the Army of the Philippines,” which has become Commonwealth Act No. 150.

It is proper that the commissioned officers of the United States Army to join the Philippine Army should be given such longevity privileges as are authorized for the officers of the former Philippine Constabulary now in our Army in order to place them all on the same footing as regards pay and allowances.

I believe, however, that the section of this bill which would include service in the United States Army in determining rights of retirement from the Philippine Army would result not only in the payment of two full pensions, one from the United States and the other from the Philippines, in certain cases for the same length of service, but would also in effect require payment of pensions on service not rendered to the Philippine Government. I, therefore, propose to recommend that this provision of the Act be either repealed or amended at the next regular session of the National Assembly so as to provide a more equitable basis for the retirement of officers of the United States Army joining the Philippine Army.

Quezon invites the people to pay homage to our unknown heroes

Bonifacio Day always brings back to mind the untold hardships and sacrifices of our fathers for the liberty of our country. It is meet that we dedicate this day to the memory of all of those of our race who, like Bonifacio, fought and fell in defense of our inalienable right to live under a government of our own choosing. Thousands of unknown heroes, men who gave up their lives on the altar of liberty, lie under Philippine sod today with nothing to mark their resting place. On this blessings which we enjoy now under a progressive and benevolent government which they, in a great measure, have helped to bring about.

There are still a few living veterans of our political struggles in the past, and they are entitled to that gratitude and respect which we owe their dead comrades. To them this day has a far greater significance because their hearts are linked with their fallen comrades by ties of friendship and love of country. They grieve for the double loss of friends and patriots.

But to both the dead and the living patriots, we, the people, owe an immense debt which we and our children can never hope to repay. To them, salute!

Press Conference Notes of President Quezon, December 18, 1936

PRESS CONFERENCE NOTES

DECEMBER 18, 1936

4:30 P.M.

CHINA

THE PRESS. Tell us about China.

THE PRESIDENT. I know Chiang Kai-shek very well. I was in Canton when the news of his capture was reported. It was after the banquet that the government of Kwantung gave in my honor. They received the news and they were very much upset.

THE PRESS. Did you meet T.V. Soong?

THE PRESIDENT. I saw him in Hongkong. We had luncheon together at the house of General Wang and I had one of the best Chinese dishes that I had ever had in my life. It was home-cooked Chinese food. I was very much pleased with what I saw there in Canton. It will be a very unfortunate thing for China in Chiang Kai-shek is not set free, because the movement for the unification of China undoubtedly was going on rapidly and strongly. The province of Kwantung, as you know, has been paying but lip service to the Nanking government in the past, and they were very jealous of their independence there and disrespectful of any outside authority. Now, I found, when I got to Canton, that the sentiment for a united government in China was very strong, and the higher authorities in Canton – both military and civil – were very proud of their loyalty to the national government.

The progress that the city of Canton has made is marvelous. I remember I was there on my first visit, way back in 1919 when Dr. Sun Yat Sen was still living, and I was his guest there. At the time there were hardly more than one or two wide streets – they were mostly old, narrow streets. This time, however I did not see any narrow streets there. Their streets are as wide as our Taft Avenue and our Rizal Avenue. They received me with all honors. They had battalions at the railroad station and they played the national anthem and they also had the Philippine flag all over the streets. I was wondering where they got so many flags in such a short time, and they had not only the but the gendarmes and the soldiers lined up at every fifty meters on every street where I was passing. There was a soldier with a rifle, and I was escorted by more than one-half of a company of soldiers carrying machine guns in their hands. By God! And then when I went out to see the University – the University campus there is out of the city – at every fifty meters there were two soldiers with rifles on the right side of the road, facing the country. When I asked the gentleman who was accompanying me what that was for, he said: “That is for your protection.” But what is really important is this. The reason I was very much impressed is that they are real soldiers. They are no longer soldiers of fortune or men paid by a war lord, recognizing no other authority but that of their war master. They were soldiers of the government. When I reviewed those soldiers and walked in front of them, they had a real military bearing and they looked straight at me, not one of them ever shifting eyes. When I reviewed our soldiers here, the officer, while the soldiers are doing military honor, faces me. He is supposed to look at me. When I look at the officer, however, he begins looking somewhere else. But those Chinese – my goodness, every soldier looked at you straight in the eyes.

Then they asked me to visit the Military Academy. It is a wonderful institution. They had 800 cadets there at least. I addressed them, and those people were like statues. Not a move while I was talking, they looked at me straight, made no motion of any sort. When they were ordered at ease, every time I mentioned the name Chiang Kai-shek they automatically stood at attention. Those people are really determined. The moral progress of these men, to me, is nothing short of marvelous.

THE PRESS. As to whether the method in the reconstruction of Canton can be adopted in the Philippines.

THE PRESIDENT. We ought demolish every house that is in the way of our widen the Escolta. Here is what the Cantonese did. They first planned the city and then destroyed everything that was in the way of its realization, but paid for the building so razed.

THE PRESS. Crisis with Japan, General attitude of Canton.

THE PRESIDENT. I do not like to have this printed... But those fellows want to fight Japan. They want to fight Japan. You know what impressed me. They do not talk in a boastful way. They speak with perfect self-control and they measure their words. But I gather this from what they tell me: That if Japan forces China into a situation, China is going to fight this time and they are prepared, they think, for war. I also gathered from them that they have not given up Manchuria; that it is only a questions of time; when they feel strong enough they will fight to regain Manchuria. YOU ARE NOT GOING TO PUBLISH THIS, at least as coming from me anyway. I think the Chinese have a grim determination about Manchuria. I believe they will be willing to let Manchuria wants. But I do not think they are going to let Japan keep Manchuria forever.

Now then, here is my reaction to that. I am still speaking confidentially and not for publication. My reaction to that is this: Whether China will fight for Japan in Manchuria or not will depend on the progress that China may make in arming herself and the extent to which she can arm herself. That, in my opinion, will take some time, before China can make a war of conquest. But Japan will not want to give up Manchuria for nothing. I think Japan will put up a fight to keep Manchuria. I think China had been really ready to fight when Japan took Manchuria, then Japan would not have insisted on taking Manchuria. She would have been satisfied with having her rights or what she claimed to be her rights, especially her economic ones, etc. She is now going to try to keep Manchuria and it is going to cost a lot of life and money before China can recover it f she ever does. But the effect is going to be: that Japan will feel uneasy about her situation in Manchuria, and she will not be considering extending her territory some more; so that I feel very safe, much safer now, than I did before I saw Canton. Canton is very far from Manchuria. The situation of Manchuria does not affect Canton at all. If there is no sense of oneness amongst the Chinese in Canton, that very deep feeling about Manchuria and the Manchurian question is the best thing that has happened to China. It is what is making China it is today. That is really a blessing in disguise.

THE PRESS. How Russian would stand in case of China's growing strong?

THE PRESIDENT. My answer to that would be merely a guess. I could not say for sure. Japan's special policy. We read that it Tanaka's documents, and I think that is true. But if China is not weakened, if she goes on as she is going now, there will be no trouble, and Japan will be much more than satisfied to hold Manchuria; and she will find that she has eaten more than she can digest.

THE PRESS. How about a Philippine Commonwealth alliance with China?

THE PRESIDENT. We are going to adopt the policy of Washington: No alliance.

NEUTRALIZATION

THE PRESS. The Tydings-McDuffie Act seems to be compatible with itself namely, the provisions for neutralization, or attempt to secure the neutralization of the Philippines – and the negotiation looking towards the establishment of an American naval base here – will these provisions be proper from the standpoint of Philippine interest?

THE PRESIDENT. The neutralization treaty, at least for the time being, has lost all attract on for me. To me it is meaningless, and unless during the next three, four or five years the attitude of the great powers toward international agreements and accords change, I do not believe that any treaty of neutrality for the Philippines will mean much. However, I would not object to the neutralization of the Philippines will be considered a neutral territory and will not involve any guaranty of that neutrality on the part of the other nations. In other words, if the treaty will merely se that the signatories of it declare and will consider and respect the Philippines of it declare and will and respect the Philippines as neutral territory, there will be no objection to that, for that is good. I do not want any guaranty among themselves because that will give them an excuse to interfere. Now a treaty of that sort would not be incompatible, I think, with any treaty that the Philippines may have with the United States whereby the United States may retain some naval stations in the Islands. Of course, the part whereby the naval stations is established would be outside the treaty. The would be the result of it, I suppose. Whether any nation would want to recognize the neutrality of the Philippines or to consider the Philippines a neutral territory, if there were an American naval station here, I do not know. Now, whether it will be to the interest of the Philippines to have this naval station or not, that again will depend upon the attitude which the United States may take with reference to this naval station. If that were made a part, or even if not, if it were consistent with the special trade relations between the United States and the Philippines – which would indicate a close association, even if only economic, between this country and the United States – it would seem to me that such a basis of relationship with the United States, with her naval station here, would be justified and in the interest of the Philippines, as well as in the interest of the United States, because that would mean the stability of America to protect her trade routes. But if the United States had no further connection with the Philippines, even of an economic nature, I do not see really any justification for such a naval station in the Island, even from the standpoint of America. I am not in a position to speak, at this time, of the attitude we would take in reference to an American naval station here. That is a matter that will have to be considered when the question is really up for serious consideration.

POLITICAL INDEPENDENCE

THE PRESS. Regarding the political provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, has absolute political independence been decided upon, without any possible chance of reconsideration?

THE PRESIDENT. I think that the mental attitude of our people is fixed. I think that they will want to have complete independence. It always happens so, on matters of this kind. It happens to everything of the same nature. When you give individuals, whose freedom of action has been limited, greater freedom to move, the more freedom you give them the more freedom they want to have. Well, after we started this government of the Commonwealth as we found out that we are able to run its affairs well, we now feel that we want to run its affairs well, we now feel that we want to it run it more independently of other people. There is a duplication of effects the way things are run now; it uses more time that is necessary. For instance, under the Act certain things must be approved by Washington. We approve an Act here and then we have to wait pending approval, this is a question of practical government. The question of tariff, for instance, the right to enact a tariff is an essential power for any government that desires to be self-sufficient – but we have no such power at all. On the question of tariff, on the right to initiate tariff legislation, the power of the President of the United States to disapprove our tariff laws in the Philippines is absolute. Again, in the disposal of our financial and economic resources – this again in a way is subject to the supervision and control of the President of the United States. In other words, in everything affecting the economy of the Islands, we are tied up; and that is a fact. Even if we know that there is entire good faith, equally on the part of the Philippines and on the other part of Washington, regarding measures we are enacting affecting the economics of the Islands, there may be differences of opinion, differences of views; and when there is that difference of views it is not our view that will prevail, the law having been given the President of the United States the power and responsibility to make the final decision; he cannot conscientiously make any other decision but one consonant with his views and his opinion, therefore, the right one. Well, we shall always think that our decision is right, because we shall always feel that we know better the conditions prevailing here, naturally if and when these decisions occur in the future, there will be little satisfaction. We have been fortunate in having, as the financial adviser for the Office of the High Commissioner and now as the Acting High Commissioner, a man who is very broad-minded and who is very sensible and who looks at every question from a practical point of view Mr. Jones. Well, Mr. Jones has been a great help. He has been no hindrance whatever to our plans on the contrary he has been of great help because of his advice is sound. He does not advance his views; he does not interfere; but when, at any time, the Government of the Commonwealth desires to have this views, on any question, he is ready to give his advice, and does it in a very impartial, objective way. He gives you the facts, submits to your consideration the implications of every act that you may take, and then he lets you decide for yourself. He has really been very good, and to Commissioner Murphy he was also helpful in what we are doing in the Philippines. So far he has been very helpful but there is the possibility of disagreement.

THE TRADE CONFERENCE

THE PRESS. How about the trade conference in the United States?

THE PRESIDENT. I doubt its efficiency because the problem is something that it cannot remedy. I think that the minute that America is willing to give up the authorities that have been retained by the President by Act of Congress, the minute they give up, the Philippines is absolutely independent; and so for the protection of the United States, as long as the American flag is here, they must have those powers. They cannot have any less, I am reasonable enough to admit that. They can have no less power than what have been retained by Congress in the United States President. As long as the American flag is flying in the Philippines they are going to be responsible for the Government of the Philippines, even for the international relations. Otherwise, they will be holding the bag. However, in Canada, Australia or in New Zealand, in those governments Great Britain retains none of the powers that are retained by the United States. The British flag is there but these governments can do what they want to do in the matter of tariff or currency, or in anything, and the Government of Great Britain has nothing to say. But that has been a development of many, many years. These Commonwealths have been gradually exercising these powers and no one has been withholding these from them. And there have been no cases wherein these governments have done anything to involve Great Britain in a conflict with any other nation; so that, at least, they feel that Great Britain has to supervise them. We as a people are not only different from the America and England, but we have as Commonwealth newly established, and I think that America has no ground for complaint: we certainly given her no ground to complain about our loyalty and character, nor have we involved her in any difficulties with any other nation. I do not think Congress would consider this.

DOMINION STATUS

THE PRESS. At the end of this 10-year period a dominion status for the Philippines might be mutually expected.

THE PRESIDENT. It is very hard to say. I do not think the American people will consider any proposal of that kind. I do not believe they will permit a situation whereby America will be responsible for the foreign relations of the Philippines and exercise no authority whatever over the government of the Islands. If she does not, the Filipino people will insist that they may enjoy all those rights necessary for the independence, so that they may enjoy all those rights necessary for the decision of questions affecting their national life.

THE PRESS. What Relief Measures have been done for the flooded region?

THE PRESIDENT. I am going there. We are in perfect control now of the situation; that is to say, we have all the personnel that is necessary and we are going as fast as we can in repairing damages that have been done and in affording help to the sufferers from the flood. I myself am going there as soon as I have decided on the pressing questions before the government, as soon as the road is in better condition. We cannot do more than what we are doing now.

THE PRESS. As to the calling of a Special Session of the National Assembly.

THE PRESIDENT. I am not going to call any special session. This is what I said – you reporters misinterpreted my statement: The Members of the National Assembly will be here next February. I take that for granted because there is going to be held here a Eucharistic Congress. They come here during the carnival every year so that I take it for granted they will again be here. I am not going to call a special session. I have had enough for one year. My blood pressure has gone up. The National Assembly has passed enough laws for the next 10 years. It will take time to carry them out.

PURCHASE OF HACIENDAS

THE PRESS. Any truth, Mr. President, in the rumor that the government is considering the purchase of large haciendas for distribution?

THE PRESIDENT. The ability of the Secretary of Agriculture and Commerce to speak is incomparable. We have not got the money appropriated for that. We are going to expropriate that portion of the landed estates which is occupied by tenants for their homes. We are going to take those up immediately, expropriate them; that is all the money the government can dispose of at present, because that is all that has been appropriated. I would advocate expropriation of all those landed estates if we had the money to do it. But we have not the money to do it.

THE PRESS. How much money?

THE PRESIDENT. I guess it would reach the amount of ten million pesos anyway.

THE PRESS. More than that!

THE PRESS. How about the Hacienda Esperanza?

THE PRESIDENT. You include those that are owned privately? I thought you were the only speaking of the Estates of the Church. My goodness, I would need about 50 million pesos for that. We would wreck the whole government. You can not do it. Well, I tell you it is worth considering very seriously whether a great part of that tax should not be used for that. As a matter of fact, I have been thinking to use a part of the money.

THE PRESS. Mr. Sotto, in behalf of the Socialist Party, sent a petition to Washington asking for the payment of those funds (coconut oil tax) so as to buy the big haciendas.

THE PRESIDENT. Is he (Sotto) afraid that I shall use the Army to shoot him and the rest of his gang?

I tell you I would recommend it to the Assembly. The matter requires a little further study but I would not hesitate to say this: My idea was to recommend to the Assembly that a part of this money be earmarked to pay our bonded indebtedness – the purpose being that, if congress knows that we have set aside many millions more than necessary for us to have, to insure the payment of our bonded obligation, then it will be wiser for us to get Congress to do away with the export tax. You see the export tax. One of the reasons given in Congress for the export tax is that we may thereby have money with which to pay our bonded indebtedness. It is not in the law; that is only in the speeches. We have never deviated from that. Every year we have set aside the necessary amount for our bonded obligations. If we earmark, say 30 million pesos. To be kept in the Treasury for this bond, we shall be preparing the ground for the amendment of that part of the Independence Law which requires the payment of the taxes.

THE PRESS. The United States is so scrupulous about this. The United States is responsible for the financial stability of this government.

THE PRESIDENT. That is one thing. The other is to appropriate this money for the purchase of such landed estates as are occupied by tenants, with the purpose of re-selling these to them. Those are two purposes that should be, in my opinion, good purposes, because you see there are not large landed estates in the coconut-growing provinces; not one. In the coconut-growing country the land is parceled amongst the small land owners. It is only in the rice-growing regions and in the sugar region that there are large landed estates. In all other places there are no haciendas except in Davao.

GOVERNMENT BONDS

THE PRESS. Is it entirely equitable for this government to use a tax on one product to redeem the bonds of the government?

THE PRESIDENT. The Congress of the United States has our hands tied there because the provisions of the law directly or indirectly affect it.

THE PRESS. Simplify the sales tax at the present time – the tax from the coconut oil.

THE PRESIDENT. I should like to do that very much. But if we did that would be one indirect way. We passed a law here, I do not remember now which.

In the last session we passed a law, I do not remember it this minute. It had nothing to do with this copra region.

THE PRESS. Copra Centrals?

THE PRESIDENT. They cannot consider it that way because it would be repetition on the sugar centrals. I would never dare to do anything like that without the previous knowledge and approval of the government of the United States. Yes, I would present the case very plainly to them. Otherwise, you would be taking the risk of losing this money, which is very big money for beggars like is here.

FUND FOR INDEBTEDNESS

THE PRESS. How about the valuation for indebtedness?

THE PRESIDENT. When I was in Washington and we are negotiating this with the government of the United States, with the Treasury Department where, I was not willing to yield one cent, not a cent. I wanted every cent returned to the Philippines and I got the President to approve it. I discovered one day that they got Singson, who was then the Secretary of Finance, to agree on ten million pesos. Singson said: 'Mr. President, we better take what we can get now.' And Congress approved the law. But then you also know what Congress did when it came to the matter of appropriation. What I mean to say is this: I will take one-half of that now and call it square. But really, from the standpoint of moral obligation, the United States has a very plain, moral one there, and the President has recognized it and will pay to the Philippine Government. But I want you, gentlemen, to know this: I am not going to lose that money. When they see the whole situation here much more impartially and with equanimity, I have no doubt that we shall get something. We shall get the amount, if not in money actually appropriated, then in something that they will give to the Islands. You must remember this, that after the Philippines becomes independent, there will be some accounts that have to be settled, and it is a good thing that we have this money in the treasury of the United States and we can then charge these accounts to that. We will get that.

ARMY BARRACKS

THE PRESS. As to the Trade School being used for Army barracks.

THE PRESIDENT. It has long been referred to me that the Provincial government has permitted that because the school really does not need all the space. We are not taking anything from the school. What is actually being used by the school will not be taken.

THE PRESS. It was a military camp.

THE PRESIDENT. It does not belong to the school at all. It is not true. The United States Army can transfer to the Bureau of Education. That has been transferred to the Government of the Philippines and temporarily it has been lent there and those buildings are provincial buildings. They are not buildings of the National Government, but we are not taking any building that is being used by the students. That is not true. I am sure of that.

THE PRESS. What is your attitude, Mr. President, on the question of Japanese sub-leasing in Davao.

THE PRESIDENT. The law does not permit it.

THE PRESS. Any move to cancel these leases that have been granted?

THE PRESIDENT. There seems to be no evidence of any sublease. There is evidence that these Japanese that are working there are working for the account of the Filipinos who have leased the land.

I want to say something more on the Army business, because this is one important single thing that the government is doing. We have a crowd of people here that are being influenced by these pacifist philosophers and if the Island become the field, a productive field for these pacifists, then we might as well say good-bye to all our dreams and ambitions. This is nonsensical talk that is going on about militarizing the Philippines. The maximum strength of our regular Army is not even going to be two divisions, which is less than 2,000 men. We shall have the smallest army in the world even among the smallest nations. Even Siam has nearly 100,000 men. For maximum, we will have between 7,000 and 10,000 men. Now, we do not even have 7,000 men. That is our regular army and in that number the Constabulary, which is doing police work already included.

THE PRESS. Really, is this militarization of the Philippines?

THE PRESIDENT. We ought to train every man and woman. Every citizen in every civilized community where there is the spirit of duty ought to be trained to defend the country. This is the paramount duty of every citizen, for we cannot defend our country with our tongue. But Sotto talks much about independence, making foolish speeches, and actually does nothing. That is what such fellows do when confronted by an enemy. It would be murder to attempt to defend oneself unless one has been prepared by the government. This talk of militarizing the Philippines is getting on my nerves. And after I have seen China, more than ever am I determined to carry out that policy. China would never have been a disorganized nation if there had been military training there. We need that even in peace. Even if we have no war, it is better that our citizens gave national discipline.

I do not want people, specially people of other countries, who believe that living consists only eating plenty and dancing and doing nothing. I do not want to have such people in my own country.

THE PRESS. How about your first plan that the constabulary should consist of 10, 000 men and the standing Army of 19, 000.

THE PRESIDENT. We have come to the conclusion that it will not be necessary. There will always be one division composed of those that are receiving the training and those that may be called; but the other, which we may term the regular army, will be 10, 000, including the Constabulary.

THE PRESS. How large is this Constabulary.

THE PRESIDENT. Three thousands.

I am already having trouble listening to those fellows. However, the rest will always be ready to support and cooperate with the Constabulary. The 3,000 Constabulary men that we now have, or that we shall have in one year, will be more effective than the 7,000 that we used to have. Because we shall have airplanes, gas, tanks, and armored cars. The 3,000 men thus equipped are worth more than 7,000 that we used to have, who had only rifles. So 3,000 men will be sufficient.

THE PRESS. About twenty years ago you said the Filipino loved to wear the uniform.

THE PRESIDENT. I still believe that every Filipino loves the uniform. If I could give everybody a uniform and a gun, and if tomorrow I should happen to have 50,000 guns here and 50,000 uniforms for everyone, in about half an hour there will not be any gun left. You will see them shooting everyone who opposes.

One-Minute Talk of President Quezon delivered for Fox Films upon his arrival in Los Angeles, February 14, 1937

One-Minute Talk
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
Delivered for Fox Films upon his arrival in Los Angeles

[Released on February 14, 1937]

GREETING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

I am happy to be in the United States again. I have been here so often that I consider this country my second home. I am a regular commuter between Manila and Washington and New York. I bring with me not only the greetings of the Filipino people to the people of America, but also a message of gratitude for the great work accomplished in the Philippines by the altruism of the American nation culminating in the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Philippines. May the friendship now existing between your great country and mine endure forever.

From interview with Mr. Vicente J. Guzman of the Tribune Staff and other newspapermen on board s.s. President Hoover, August 16, 1937

FAR EAST CRISIS NO DETERRENT TO THE ADVANCEMENT OF PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

[From interview with Mr. Vicente J. Guzman of the Tribune Staff and other newspapermen on board s.s. President Hoover,
Aug. 16, 1937.]

The crisis in the Far East will not influence President Manuel L. Quezon with regard to his proposal for the advancement of independence, which he emphatically reiterated upon returning to the Philippines.

President Quezon told newsmen who met him aboard the President Hoover yesterday morning that he stands by his petition to shorten the transition period. The reiteration of his independence proposal in the light of recent developments in the Orient was given considerable importance in local political circles, considering that the President and the members of the joint preparatory committee on Philippine affairs had just passed through the troubled area.

The President and the experts were passing through Japan shortly after the outbreak of fighting between Japanese and Chinese troops in north China. The s. s. President Hoover barely missed the fighting in Shanghai, leaving that city shortly before Japanese and Chinese troops clashed.

The President was given one of the warmest receptions ever accorded any official here as some 150,000 jammed the waterfront and the route from the New Luneta to Malacanang. He returned in good health and in good humor, and answered his critics during a press interview and in the speech in Tagalog he delivered from the Malacanang balcony.

Putting into effect the first practical result of his seven-month trip abroad, he signed an executive order last night, the first official document he issued, increasing the minimum wages of national government laborers in Manila to P1.25 and of laborers in the provinces to P1.00.

Last night, he also had his first personal conversation with U.S. High Commissioner Paul V. McNutt over the telephone, during which he requested the High Commissioner to include Filipino nationals in Shanghai in the evacuation of American citizens.

The 15-minute press conference on board the s.s. President Hoover began at 8:45 a.m. Surrounded by representatives of the local and foreign press, President Quezon, dressed in white sharkskin, began by saying that he had no statement to make but that he was ready to answer questions.

He said that the petition he addressed to the American government for advancement of the date of independence from 1946 to either 1938 or 1939 stands, despite the critical situation in the Far East. As to the prospects of his plan in Congress, he said he was not prepared to answer the question. "After all, I am not a prophet," he said.

As to the attitude of President Roosevelt, he refused to anticipate it, saying that he preferred to let the United States President speak for himself.

He recalled, however, that when he appeared before the American inter-departmental committee acting for President Roosevelt, he asked the members of that committee whether they could conceive of any situation that would act against early independence. "Not one in the room opened his mouth," he said, "and they merely said they were not prepared to answer the question."

“If we cannot get independence in 1938 or 1939, we can not be independent in 1946,” President Quezon told the newspapermen. “What is six or seven years in the life of a nation. The country is as much ready for independence now as it would be in 1946, so that makes no difference whether we are independent in 1939 or 1938.

At this phase of the interview, Assemblyman Vicente Rama, of Cebu, representing a Cebu newspaper, asked whether, in launching his early independence plan, the President had the advice and knowledge not only of the National Assembly but also of his colleagues in the government.

Without hesitation, the President answered that when he filed his petition for early independence with President Roosevelt and later with the inter-departmental committee, he said nothing that he had not said during the debates over the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law.

“I said then that as between early independence and the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law, I preferred early independence. You probably know, that there is no difference between the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law and the Tydings-McDuffie Act, excepting as regards naval reservations.

“The events transpiring during the one and a half years of the effectivity of the Tydings-McDuffie Act has convinced me that I had reason in saying that I had then said. Besides that, my statements during the debates on the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law were launched as our side of the election issue. The people voted in favor of those statements and they stand inasmuch as they have never been withdrawn by the people.”

The President revealed that he has abandoned his plan for a special session. He stated that he originally proposed to convoke the National Assembly into a special session for the purpose of approving legislation necessary to carry out his plan to purchase large haciendas. After discussing the matter with solons and cabinet members, he has decided against a special session inasmuch as the regular session, which opens on October 16, is near.

President Quezon also said that all provincial, city and municipal officials will remain in office excepting those who have been found guilty of administrative charges after thorough investigation. These will be removed and replaced, he said.

The President cautioned against “noisy patriotism,” saying that the people should be tolerant of each others views. “I invite everybody to air their grievances, as after all we have a democratic country in the Philippines.

“I am not infallible: Therefore, only the Filipino people have the sole right of deciding their fate and no man or group of men have the right to decide that.”

He went on to explain that the joint preparatory committee on Philippine affairs does not possess the power to determine whether the Filipino want independence or not, much less recommend the fixing of the date of independence. “As stated in the joint statement issued by Secretary Sayre and I, the committee was created solely for the purpose of determining the bearing which the advancement of the date of independence would have on retarding or facilitating the Philippine national economy.”

President and Mrs. Quezon arrived at Malacanan at 10:05, and after a rest of 25 minutes, the President addressed the crowd that were admitted to the grounds.

He was introduced by Secretary of Interior Elpidio Quirino, who spoke in Tagalog. In beginning his speech President Quezon, who also spoke in Tagalog, said: “It shows that Secretary Quirino is anti-suffragist because when he began to address you he said “Ladies and compatriots, as if the ladies are not our compatriots, but I say compatriots, and in thus making the salutation the women and men are included.

“We are greatly satisfied and happy over the tribute which the people have showered us and because of this we express out- sincere gratitude with open hearts.

“I learned that during my absence, some of my friends criticized my trip, saying that I abandoned my duty here. To this, my answer is that due to this trip I return with P100,000,000 for the welfare of the people.

“They say that I spent the money of the people. Granting that this is true, the amount I spent is very little in comparison with the sum I brought back for the people, which will be used in helping the poor.

“Tomorrow, I shall order government engineers to pay Manila laborers a minimum wage of P1.25 and provincial laborers, P1. If this is not enough, I shall order the amount increased. You should give that this trip will enable the opening of public schools wherever they are necessary.

“Due to this trip, the platform of the coalition party as to the purchase of large hacienda will be carried out. In this manner, tenants whose grandfathers have been occupying these lands for many years without hope or ever owing a piece would be able to acquire land.

“My trips abroad are criticized but others also have been going abroad almost continuously and yet these are not criticized. The purposes of my trips are for the good of the country. In the first trip, I brought back the Jones Law, in the second, the Tydings-McDuffie Act and now I bring money to the people. On the other hand, what did the others bring back? Words and nothing else but words.

“There is a saying that a man is known for what he does and what he says. When I accepted the nomination for the Presidency, one of my promises was for the happiness of the people. Now, another occasion presents itself to enable me to comply with that promise, which is a promise for aid to the people and for this reason I expect that not only those in the government but also those who are sincere critics of the government extend their cooperation for the triumph of our liberty.

“But if they refuse to cooperate and they continue with the attacks, they can go ahead. There is democracy here. In nations where autocracy and despotism reign, those who attack the government are killed.

Here, where there is no person so continuously and gravely attacked as I, no critic is killed or sent to jail, because there is freedom and democracy here.”

Memorandum of President Quezon on appointment of Captain Villavicencio as Manila Pilot, September 6, 1937 MEMORANDUM

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

APPOINTMENT OF CAPTAIN VILLAVICENCIO AS MANILA PILOT

[September 6, 1937]

Memorandum for the Secretary of Finance:

In the matter of the appointment of Captain Villavicencio as Manila pilot, a protest has reached this office that in point of seniority this captain is not entitled to the appointment.

It has been the consistent policy of this administration repeatedly announced that the man in the service in line for promotion should be given a chance either to prove his worthiness or unworthiness by giving him, in case of a vacancy, at least a temporary designation until the fact has been established that the incumbent is not equal to the responsibility involved in his new assignment. In the particular case which I have before me, there is added necessity for complying with the rule in view of the fact that the appointee is from your own home province and town. As you know, a general criticism against our Government in the past and which is still heard even under our administration is that relatives and friends, and also "comprovincianos," get preferential attention in the choice of officials and employees in the Government. This in our local parlance is called "regionalismo."

I hope it is not necessary for me to tell you that I am positive that in the appointment of Captain Villavicencio you have been guided only by your own conviction that his choice was in the best interest of the service, but we must place ourselves above unjustifiable criticism however cautious we may be in our acts. I, therefore, feel that you should find a way whereby your appointee may resign so that the man senior in point of service may take the appointment. If experience should prove that he is not as competent as Captain Villavicencio, then it will be time to appoint the latter.

Memorandum of President Quezon on Administration of Affairs in Mindanano, September 20, 1937

MEMORANDUM

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

ADMINISTRATION OF AFFAIRS IN MINDANAO

[September 20, 1937]

Memorandum
Secretary of the Interior:

The following will be the policy that should control the administration of the affairs of Mindanao, particularly of those parts that are inhabited largely or partly by Mohammedan Filipinos:

1. The Commissioner of Mindanao should be given a free hand in settling administrative matters without the necessity of having to report to the Secretary of the Interior before taking action thereon. It is the purpose of the law creating the position of Commissioner of Mindanao to make it unnecessary for the Department of the Interior to interfere with the ordinary administration of the provinces under the authority of the Commissioner, except when there is a complaint against abuse of power committed by the Commissioner, or when there is an appeal against a decision of the Commissioner of Mindanao in the ordinary course of law. In other words, it is the purpose of the law creating this position to facilitate the transaction of official business in the provinces under the authority of the Commissioner of Mindanao and to give impetus to the work of improving the condition of the people educationally, morally, and materially, and of developing the resources of that part of the country. If the present Commissioner of Mindanao is not sufficiently fit to exercise that power and to assume this responsibility, you should report the case to me immediately, and I shall proceed to appoint a new man. But so long as we have a commissioner there, the Commissioner should be allowed to exercise and use his own discretion in carrying out the policies of the National Government in Mindanao.

2. It has been, in my opinion, the weakness in the policy heretofore adopted by the Government of the Philippines in dealing with the Mohammedan Filipinos or Moros in Mindanao and the Sulu Archipelago to give some sort of recognition to the datus, so that they have become in practice ex officio officials of the Government. This policy must be stopped and changed radically. It gives the impression that there is a dual government for the Moros—one exercised by the appointed or elected officials of the Government and the other by the datus or sultans. It perpetuates the overlordship exercised through the ages by these datus and sultans over their sacup, who, on this account, continue to be, in fact, slaves of their sultans and datus as they were under the Spanish regime. The Government is in duty bound to protect the common people in the Moroland, as much as it is bound to protect the common people in other provinces and regions of the Philippines, from the control or exploitation of those Moros and Christian Filipinos, whether they be called sultans, datus, leaders, or hacenderos, or caciques, who would exploit or abuse them. Therefore, from this time on you should instruct the governors and municipal presidents in the provinces composing the territory under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu to deal directly with the people instead of with the datus, sultans, leaders or caciques. Provincial governors and municipal presidents must constantly visit the territories under their respective jurisdictions and talk with the people, find out their needs and in what manner the Government may be of help to them. The position of municipal president or municipal district president must be dignified, and the man occupying the position must be made to feel the importance of his office and the seriousness of his responsibility. He must be paid, at least, as much as the chief of police within his jurisdiction, so that the people may know that he is the head of the local government in his municipality or district. If the municipality or district does not have sources of its own, or the help given by the provincial government is not sufficient, the necessary funds should be taken from the contribution of the National Government to these provinces, and if it be found necessary, I want you to submit a recommendation to me for presentation to the National Assembly at this coming regular session, for an increase in the appropriation as help to these provinces, so that an adequate pay may be given to those municipal presidents and/or municipal district presidents.

The provincial governors should be required to visit regularly the different municipalities or districts constituting their provinces. They should primarily consult with the municipal officials and use them for such work as have to be done in each municipality or district, rather than with datos or sultans as formerly. These datos and sultans should never be allowed to have anything to do with functions that are official. They should be heard exactly and precisely as every other citizen has the right to be heard on matters affecting the nation, his province, his municipality, or his district. Their help should be sought no more than the help of any other citizen in any other part of the Philippines is sought, if and when the services of such citizen may be needed. By this, I mean that nothing must be done by this Government or its officials that would give the impression that men without official responsibilities and powers may exercise any authority or intervene with authority on governmental or administrative affairs of the nation, the province, the municipality or the district.

When I last visited Lanao—and I held a conference with the people of that province—upon hearing a datu, who submitted a petition to me in the name of the datos of Lanao on a matter affecting the school service in that province, I took advantage of the incident to state, right in that meeting, publicly and directly, in as clear a language as I could, so that it might be as clearly interpreted to the audience, composed of Christians and non-Christian Filipinos or Moros, including, not only datos, but the ordinary Moros, to say to all that this Government cannot recognize the datos as having any special right to interfere in matters affecting school service or any other service in the Government. I told the Moro sultan who had spoken, right there and then, that I should have been more pleased if he had spoken on behalf of the people of Lanao, instead of in the name of the sultans. And I added that the sultans have no more rights than the humblest Moro and that under my administration the humblest Moro will be given as much protection as any datu under the law, and that his rights will be recognized exactly as the rights of a datu will be, and that every datu will have to comply with his duties as a citizen to the same extent and in the same manner that the humblest Moro is obligated.

What I then said to that sultan must be the guiding principle for every official of this Government, from the Secretary of the Interior down to the last policeman, in dealing with the Moros and their datos.

3. I am inclined to believe now that the time has come for the appointment of civilian governors in every province largely or partly inhabited by Mohammedan Filipinos. You know from several conferences we have had heretofore that I thought it would be wiser to continue for a time at least with Constabulary officers as governors of Lanao, Cotabato, and Jolo. Of late I have given more thought to this matter, and after hearing the opinion of the Members of the National Assembly representing districts where a Constabulary official is Governor, I have come to the conclusion that as soon as we can find the right men from amongst civilians, we should appoint them as governors for these provinces. The reasons which have convinced me to take this wise step, are the following:

(a) The inhabitants of these provinces—both Mohammedans and Christians—should have before their eyes a tangible evidence that a great change has taken place in the National Government of the Philippines. All along they have had uniformed men as their governors—men who in the eyes of the average man represent that side of the Government which means force. Particularly, the Mohammedan Filipinos or Moros have seen these men in uniform in armed conflict with their brothers, relatives, or townsmen, who in the past have attempted to resist the Government by violence. It is natural, therefore, that in their subconscious mind they should see in these governors, not the representative of a government that uses persuasive advice in getting the people to obey its laws; not the representative of a government that is interested in their well being, their mental and material progress; not the representative of a government that is desirous to be helpful to its citizens, but the representative of a government that uses only force in dealing with the people. We must change this mental attitude which, rightly or wrongly, consciously or unconsciously, seems to prevail especially among the Moros of the provinces above mentioned. Let them see from now on as the head of the government in their respective provinces a civilian—a man without uniform and without arms, and who will not have, if and when it may be necessary, to lead the armed forces of the Government against violations of the law by armed groups. Let these governors speak to the people about the peaceful objectives of the Government carried through peaceful means. Let these governors visit their respective provinces constantly and mingle with the common man, see him in his home, on his farm, talk to the masses and tell them in what way the Government can be of help to them in improving their agriculture, their small trade, in ameliorating the hardships of their lives, in raising their standard of living, in combating disease, in creating sanitary conditions, and in protecting them against abuses from evil persons. In one word, let the inhabitants of these provinces to which I am referring, feel toward the Government, by means of civilian officials that we will place at the head of these provinces, exactly as the average good citizens of other provinces of the Philippines feel toward the Government of their country.

Please proceed, as soon as you can, to get information from all sources as to who are the men who could do this work well in Mindanao, and submit to me a list from which I may pick the men I shall appoint. We may get men already in the government service, or outside the service, men who have shown executive and administrative ability, industry, and above all, an unimpeachable honesty.

Memorandum of President Quezon to the First National Assembly on censorship of radio programs by the Government Radio Board, September 20, 1937

MEMORANDUM

OF

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

ON

CENSORSHIP OF RADIO PROGRAMS BY THE GOVERNMENT RADIO BOARD

[September 20, 1937]

Memorandum for the Chairman of the Radio Board:

I have seen in a Sunday paper a news item to the effect that the Board has decided at its recent session to order the broadcasting companies to submit their programs before they are held. If this is true, it is contrary to the views I expressed at a meeting of the Cabinet not long ago. In that meeting I stated that the Government should pay only for the time it uses in broadcasting its own information, and I expressed my objection to the Radio Board censoring radio programs. All I wanted the Radio Board to do was to require that speeches or news broadcast be in writing and copies thereof sent to the Radio Board after they have been delivered, in order that if and when a broadcast made be against the law, there may be evidence at hand for the prosecution of the guilty party.

A means should be found whereby this order to the broadcasting stations can be enforced.

As I stated at the meeting of the Cabinet, any attempt on the part of the Government to pass or to censor the radio programs is tantamount to a limitation of the freedom of speech, and it was because of my opposition to any policy on the part of the Government that would, in any way, curtail the freedom of speech or give the Government a monopoly of any kind on means of information that I have objected to the establishment by the Government of a radio station, if it is going to be an exclusive franchise.

A report on the matter is requested.

Memorandum for the Secretary of the Interior: Administration of Affairs in Mindanao

Office of the President of the Philippines
Malacañang

Memorandum for the Secretary of the Interior

Administration of Affairs in Mindanao
[September 20, 1937]

The following will be the policy that should control the administration of the affairs of Mindanao, particularly of those parts that are inhabited largely or partly by Mohammedan Filipinos:

1. The Commissioner of Mindanao should be given a free hand in settling administrative matters without the necessity of having to report to the Secretary of the Interior before taking action thereon. It is the purpose of the law creating the position of Commissioner of Mindanao to make it unnecessary for the Department of the Interior to interfere with the ordinary administration of the provinces under the authority of the Commissioner, except when there is a complaint against abuse of power committed by the Commissioner, or when there is an appeal against a decision of the Commissioner of Mindanao in the ordinary course of law. In other words, it is the purpose of the law creating this position to facilitate the transaction of official business in the provinces under the authority of the Commissioner of Mindanao and to give impetus to the work of improving the condition of the people educationally, morally, and materially, and of developing the resources of that part of the country. If the present Commissioner of Mindanao is not sufficiently fit to exercise that power and to assume this responsibility, you should report the case to me immediately, and I shall proceed to appoint a new man. But so long as we have a commissioner there, the Commissioner should be allowed to exercise and use his own discretion in carrying out the policies of the National Government in Mindanao.

2. It has been, in my opinion, the weakness in the policy heretofore adopted by the Government of the Philippines in dealing with the Mohammedan Filipinos or Moros in Mindanao and the Sulu Archipelago to give some sort of recognition to the datus, so that they have become in practice ex officio officials of the Government. This policy must be stopped and changed radically. It gives the impression that there is a dual government for the Moros—one exercised by the appointed or elected officials of the Government and the other by the datus or sultans. It perpetuates the overlordship exercised through the ages by these datus and sultans over their sacup, who, on this account, continue to be, in fact, slaves of their sultans and datus as they were under the Spanish regime. The Government is in duty bound to protect the common people in the Moroland, as much as it is bound to protect the common people in other provinces and regions of the Philippines, from the control or exploitation of those Moros and Christian Filipinos, whether they be called sultans, datus, leaders, or hacenderos, or caciques, who would exploit or abuse them. Therefore, from this time on you should instruct the governors and municipal presidents in the provinces composing the territory under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu to deal directly with the people instead of with the datus, sultans, leaders or caciques. Provincial governors and municipal presidents must constantly visit the territories under their respective jurisdictions and talk with the people, find out their needs and in what manner the Government may be of help to them. The position of municipal president or municipal district president must be dignified, and the man occupying the position must be made to feel the importance of his office and the seriousness of his responsibility. He must be paid, at least, as much as the chief of police within his jurisdiction, so that the people may know that he is the head of the local government in his municipality or district. If the municipality or district does not have sources of its own, or the help given by the provincial government is not sufficient, the necessary funds should be taken from the contribution of the National Government to these provinces, and if it be found necessary, I want you to submit a recommendation to me for presentation to the National Assembly at this coming regular session, for an increase in the appropriation as help to these provinces, so that an adequate pay may be given to those municipal presidents and/or municipal district presidents.

The provincial governors should be required to visit regularly the different municipalities or districts constituting their provinces. They should primarily consult with the municipal officials and use them for such work as have to be done in each municipality or district, rather than with datus or sultans as formerly. These datus and sultans should never be allowed to have anything to do with functions that are official. They should be heard exactly and precisely as every other citizen has the right to be heard on matters affecting the nation, his province, his municipality, or his district. Their help should be sought no more than the help of any other citizen in any other part of the Philippines is sought, if and when the services of such citizen may be needed. By this, I mean that nothing must be done by this Government or its officials that would give the impression that men without official responsibilities and powers may exercise any authority or intervene with authority on governmental or administrative affairs of the nation, the province, the municipality or the district.

When I last visited Lanao—and I held a conference with the people of that province—upon hearing a datu, who submitted a petition to me in the name of the datus of Lanao on a matter affecting the school service in that province, I took advantage of the incident to state, right in that meeting, publicly and directly, in as clear a language as I could, so that it might be as clearly interpreted to the audience, composed of Christians and non-Christian Filipinos or Moros, including, not only datus, but the ordinary Moros, to say to all that this Government cannot recognize the datus as having any special right to interfere in matters affecting school service or any other service in the Government. I told the Moro sultan who had spoken, right there and then, that I should have been more pleased if he had spoken on behalf of the people of Lanao, instead of in the name of the sultans. And I added that the sultans have no more rights than the humblest Moro and that under my administration the humblest Moro and that under my administration the humblest Moro will be given as much protection as any datu under the law, and that his rights will be recognized exactly as the rights of a datu will be, and that every datu will have to comply with his duties as a citizen to the same extent and in the same manner that the humblest Moro is obligated.

What I then said to that sultan must be the guiding principle for every official of this Government, from the Secretary of the Interior down to the last policeman, in dealing with the Moros and their datus.

Letter from the Secretary to the President to Datu Amilbanga: Three-point policy for Mindanao and Sulu

Letter from the Secretary to the President to Datu Amilbanga
Three-point policy for Mindanao and Sulu
[October 8, 1937]

Sir:

I have the honor to inform you that your letter of the 2nd instant, addressed to His Excellency, the President, in which you comment on his “three-point policy” on the affairs of Mindanao and Sulu, has been received. In this connection permit me to call your attention to the fact that in his memorandum to the Secretary of the Interior dated September 20, 1937, His Excellency does not seek to interfere with the use of titles by Moro sultans or datos so long as it is clearly understood that a title carries with it no official rights or privileges. What the President desires to emphasize is that there are no privileged classes under this Government and no authority vested on any individual not occupying an official position. In other words, the President is determined to consider and to act towards the Mohammedan Filipinos as he considers and acts towards the Christians, precisely because he agrees with you that the so-called Moro problem is a myth.

His Excellency appreciates your kind interest in his administration, particularly in matters affecting your district, and he wishes me to inform you that your recommendation for the retention of Major Leon Angeles as Provincial Governor of Sulu for the time being, will be given due consideration.

Very respectfully,

JORGE B. VARGAS
Secretary to the President

*This is a reply to a letter of Assemblyman Ombra Amilbanga’s, which is as follows:

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
MANILA

Letter from Datu Amilbanga to the President of the Philippines

[October 2, 1937]

Dear Mr. President:

1. In recent issues of the local dailies, I read with deep interest the released copy of Your Excellency’s Memorandum, addressed to the Honorable, the Secretary of the Interior, in which Your Excellency’s “Three-Point Policies,” defining how affairs in Moroland are to be administered, was embodied. As Your Excellency’s loyal supporter, I cannot let the news pass without commenting on the policies, especially in their relations to my district.

2. The policy of giving a free hand to the Commissioner of Mindanao and Sulu on all plans he may deem fit to execute is indeed plausible and commendable, and it could not have been otherwise. As a matter of fact, I joined Assemblymen Fortich and Cabili in endorsing that policy to Your Excellency when the measure was yet pending the action of the National Assembly.

3. As to the non-recognition of the various titles, a practice still adhered to by the various Mohammedan elements in Mindanao and Sulu, I think, Mr. President, the policy as released covering this subject was most unnecessary, as the non-recognition has already taken effect since the abrogation of the Bates Treaty and the implantation of the Civil Government in the regions referred to. In the agreement concluded between the Sultan of Sulu and Frank Carpenter, then Secretary of the Department of Mindanao and Sulu, the former is recognized as a temporal head of that region and as such his office is confined to religious activities. In the light of these facts the Government, I think, Mr. President, has no right to interfere with them so long as no law or order is infringed. The religious titles ever since in vogue in the Mohammedan regions are akin to religious titles enjoyed and practiced by the different Christian sects.

4. The policy of suppressing the practice of appointing army officers as governors in Moro provinces is one thing about which I beg to be allowed to discuss at length and with liberty. The administration dating back to the early American administrators, had initiated various policies principally intended to maintain peace and order, but lamentably never promulgated policies to effect universal improvement in those regions. As a result of this uncomprehensive plan, the accomplishments were nothing more than the blowing out of the Moro cottas and enactment of other bloody dramas. Judging from the records of the past, it seems that questions of efficiency of administration in Moroland depend in a large measure, upon the personal ability, integrity and far-sightedness of the local administrator rather than by imposing rigid obedience to mutable policies.

5. Regarding the present incumbent, Major Leon Angeles, his administration since his appointment is one worthy of praise and commendation. His experience and adeptness in understanding conditions obtaining in the province, make him the most logical man to remain in the position for sometime until Your Excellency think otherwise. He is the most capable Filipino governor ever appointed to that position. I believe that in justice to the incumbent, Your Excellency should allow him to remain for sometime in order that he could accomplish the projects he has just started.

6. Talks of Moro problems, both of the past and the present, have been the topics deafening the ears of the public. The Moros, myself included, are ignorant of the so-called Moro problems, and we emphatically deny its existence.

7. In passing, I beg leave to state that in Mindanao Your Excellency has two groups of supporters: the first are those who readily yield assent to what Your Excellency say, and the second, those who study Your Excellency's policy and offer constructive criticisms and suggestions to the end that the country may be benefited. I am happy that I belong to the second group so that if I express myself openly and frankly, it is because it is my honest and sincere belief that in doing so, I am helping and cooperating with Your Excellency to perfect a policy conducive to the general welfare of my people.

Respectfully yours,

Conversation between President Quezon and United States High Commissioner to the Philippines Paul V. McNutt on Occupation Day American-Filipino Relations, August 14, 1938

CONVERSATION

BETWEEN

HIS EXCELLENCY MANUEL L. QUEZON
PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

AND

HIS EXCELLENCY PAUL V. McNUTT
UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINES

ON OCCUPATION DAY AMERICAN-FILIPINO RELATIONS

[Broadcast over Station KZRM, Manila, August 14, 1938]

HIGH COMMISSIONER MCNUTT. For the information of American listeners, this is Sunday morning, and I am speaking from Manila, the capital and metropolis of the Philippine Islands. These islands, some 7,000 in number, are situated off the coast of the continent of Asia and have an estimated population of 15 million. Nature has favored the archipelago by bestowing her riches with a lavish hand. Collectively, the Philippine Islands and their people make up the self-governing Commonwealth of the Philippines, but the Commonwealth is a part of the United States with authority retained that is commensurate with the responsibilities of sovereignty.

August 13, 1938, marks the fortieth anniversary of the occupation of Manila by the American forces. By proclamation of the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, President of the Philippines, the day was declared a special national holiday, "the observance of which," to make use of the language of the proclamation, "shall be a symbol of our esteem and gratitude." In Manila a mammoth parade was held, at the head of which marched President Quezon, who after reviewing the participants in the seemingly never ending procession, delivered an address, in which he voiced the deep-felt gratitude of the Filipino people for the benefits brought to his native land by the representatives of the American people. As a symbol of the chain of friendship binding together the two peoples, there were presented to me for the President of the United States, two flags, one the American Flag and the other the Filipino Flag. President Quezon sits across from me, and if I may be permitted, I would like to tell him on behalf of my fellow countrymen that his action in making possible a nation-wide demonstration of loyalty and thankfulness was a generous manifestation fully appreciated by the American people.

PRESIDENT QUEZON. High Commissioner McNutt, I desire you and my American friends to know that the celebration of August 13 this year by the Filipino people was no meaningless gesture. Occasionally a few captious critics have accused the Filipinos of lacking a sense of gratitude for the splendid gifts showered on them by your beneficent nation. I want to dissipate any such thought, if it ever existed. I wish to show by concrete action, as well as by words, how much the Filipino people have appreciated their close association with the United States during the past four decades. Under American tutelage, the Philippines has developed in many ways; particularly, economically, by raising the standard of living, and politically, by the inauguration of a democratic Commonwealth based on the consent of the governed. It is just and fitting, therefore, that we render honor to the great democracy of the United States of America for the unparalleled progress and development that have been the fruits of her policy in the Philippines.

HIGH COMMISSIONER MCNUTT. I quite agree with you, President Quezon, that the Philippine chapter in American history is one which can be read with satisfaction by Americans and Filipinos alike. The representatives of the American people in their dealings with the Philippine Inlands and their people have ever been actuated by a firm purpose to follow the high course of action. The avowed policy of the American administration, in the past, was to govern the Islands, having regard to the interest and welfare of the Filipino people. That altruistic concept America's mission in the Philippines still guides us in our relations with the Commonwealth of the Philippines and the Filipino people. The Philippines has been treated not as colonies have been treated, but the people of the Islands have been considered as partners in a great and worthy enterprise. If as one result of American policy in the Philippines, the position of the United States in Far Eastern affairs has been enhanced, and if American trade has gained a market, no one has just cause for complaint. The record of my country in this far distant outpost is one to which I point with justifiable pride.

The day celebrated so splendidly yesterday throughout the Philippines was the observance of the last act in the Spanish-American War. I wonder, Mr. President, what your thoughts of Spanish rule are, and what your attitude is concerning the American veterans of a war against whom you later were to fight.

PRESIDENT QUEZON. I am glad, Mr. High Commissioner, that you brought up those two points. I received my education principally during Spanish days and I am acquainted with conditions then existing. It is true we revolted against Spain, but that fact does not mean a lack of present day understanding of the advantages which came to us as a result of the Spanish administration. Certainly we were given the rudiments of Latin culture and received the blessings of the Christian faith. Because we thank the United States does not signify any weakening of affection for Spain for what she did for our country. As for the American veterans of the Spanish-American War and the subsequent Filipino-American differences, permit me to say in all sincerity that they have proved themselves to be useful citizens of the Philippines. They are the men who have made their homes among us and have cooperated effectively in the development of our national resources. I think of these fine Americans no longer as enemies, but as true friends of the Filipinos.

HIGH COMMISSIONER MCNUTT. I notice, Mr. President, that you have acquired one American trait, or perhaps it came to you intuitively, which is that of sportsmanship. I am, likewise, of the opinion that in giving credit to the United States for her work in the Philippines, we do not detract thereby from the labor of Spain here. I also believe that too much praise cannot be given the Americans, mostly volunteers, who participated on the American side in the Spanish-American War and the Filipino insurrection, and who after retirement from the Army settled in the Philippines. I know many of these Americans personally, and I am acquainted with others by reputation and they deserve all the word's of praise which you, who once fought against them, so generously bestow on them.

Another thought comes to me at this time. It concerns the cooperation of the Filipino people with the American people in the development of the Philippines. In effect, it was a partnership between the two races which has been in operation. To the offer of assistance proffered by American leaders came an answer of acceptance by Filipino leaders, which permitted the solving of acute problems in education, in sanitation, in finance, in trade, in public order, and in other equally important matters. During this entire period, the Filipinos have been loyal to the American flag as was well demonstrated during the great World War. The Filipinos have met halfway American advances intended for the ultimate good of the Philippines. Yesterday, Mr. President, and again this morning, you have expressed for yourself and the Filipino people their appreciation for what the United States has done for the Philippines. In response, permit me to thank you and through you the Filipino people for what they have done in a true spirit of understanding and cooperation for the United States, in the accomplishment of measures mutually beneficial to the American and Filipino peoples.

President Quezon, at yesterday's Occupation Day exercises in Manila, you handed me for presentation to the President of the United States, a beautiful American Flag and an equally beautiful Filipino Flag. I received those symbols of American and Philippine patriotism with a feeling of grateful appreciation which, I am confident, is shared by President Roosevelt. The two flags will, in due time, reach the White House and the President. Thus the ties binding the United States and the Philippines will be made closer and firmer, and the Philippine community generally will have made partial acknowledgment for all the President has done for the Islands.

PRESIDENT QUEZON. The Filipino people have never had a better and truer friend than President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Every act taken by him having to do with the relations between his country and my country has been actuated by a desire to deal fairly and honorably with us in the Philippines. President Roosevelt made possible approval of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, which provided for the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Philippines. He likewise lent his aid to us so that we could secure large processing taxes now being used to develop our latent wealth. He sponsored the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs which recently made its report. He has given assurances that our gradually increasing dependence on our own economic forces will be cushioned and safeguarded. He has sent to us as his representatives to fill important civilian and military posts distinguished Americans who have been wise in counsel. When the annals of American-Philippine relations are written by some future historian, in them will appear in a conspicuous place the name of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the benefactor and friend of the Filipino people.

HIGH COMMISSIONER MCNUTT. I am in full agreement, President Quezon, with your words descriptive of the leading role assumed by the President of the United States in steering Philippine questions to right conclusions. No one can entirely appreciate the immense amount of time and thought that he has given to the settlement of Philippine issues. His viewpoint has ever been to act fairly on all matters that concerned the Filipino people. I am sure that the people of the Philippines can look with confidence to President Roosevelt to grant them sympathetic hearings and to reach just decisions on their petitions.

Before we conclude, Mr. President, let me ask you a question, and a hard one. What about the future of the Philippines?

PRESIDENT QUEZON. I am no prophet, Mr. High Commissioner, but let me say this: We Filipinos are laying plans intended to safeguard our patrimony. We also feel certain that America will continue to lend a sympathetic ear to our reasonable petitions. Yesterday in my address following the Occupation Day parade, in speaking of the ties that bind the United States and the Philippines together, I said, and now reiterate:

“Our aims, our hopes, our appreciations are the same. In the great moral causes, the great causes of righteousness, of liberty, of peace, the great causes which mean the perpetuation of the spiritual things of life, the United States and the Philippines are going on in complete unison with each other, not dominating nor conspiring against each other, but going on in complete accord with each other, because in the essential things, we are in absolute and hearty agreement.”

I look with every confidence to the future.

Finally, ladies and gentlemen, recurring to the statement of American policy, as early expressed by President William McKinley, the Filipinos have, I believe, fulfilled his cherished hope, for they can, and do, look back with gratitude to the day when destiny placed their land under the guidance of the people of the United States.

HIGH COMMISSIONER MCNUTT. Thank you, President Quezon, for your assurances regarding continued Filipino-American friendship. Let us strive to understand each other. Let us strive to solve our mutual problems tolerantly and wisely. Let us strive to maintain the position of the United States as a great democratic state, devoted to the cause of peace and to making more secure the Commonwealth of the Philippines, another democracy, which Providence has brought within the sphere of American influence.

Good morning to the radio audience of the Philippines Good evening to my fellow countrymen in the homeland.

Resume of Remarks of President Quezon at a dinner in honor of Vice-President Osmeña's return from the United States, November 2, 1939

Resume of Remarks
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
At a dinner in honor of Vice-President Osmeña's return from the United States

[Delivered at Malacañang Palace, November 2, 1939]

NEED FOR NATIONAL UNITY

Absolute national unity under the aegis of which the best elements in the country will pull loyally together in the common effort of preparing the country for independence, is the main concern of the administration. We are preparing the people for independence, counting with the best elements in the country, so that the Philippines shall achieve independence on a solid basis.

National unity, unmarred by the political bickering unavoidable in a two-party system, is the only condition that will give the Filipino people the best opportunity to prepare themselves adequately for the responsibilities of complete independence on July 4, 1946. This was the central theme of extemporaneous remarks made by President Manuel L. Quezon and Vice-President Sergio Osmeña at a "welcome home" dinner given by the Quezons in honor of the Osmeñas at Malacañang Palace.

In the historic hall of the Palace, where the destiny of the country has more than once been decided, the two great leaders of the Filipino people exchanged mutual congratulations for their incomputable services to the nation; they made important commentaries on decisive political events in order to set the record straight.

Mutual High Regard

The affirmation of mutual high regard and the commentaries on crucial events in the history of the country, in which the two had played leading roles, were made in the presence of the highest officials of the land, the political personages who have hitherto rallied around one or the leader. Quezon-anti leaders sat side and exchanged cordial greetings with Osmeña-pro lieutenants.

Absolute national unity, under the aegis of which "the best elements in the country" will pull loyally together in the common effort of preparing the country for independence, is the main concern of the Quezon administration, the President said in his remarks.

"We are preparing the people," he said in all solemnity, "for independence, counting with the best elements in the country, so that the Philippines shall achieve independence on a solid basis."

Throughout his remarks, particularly in his recollection on the significant political moves he and Vice-President Osmeña made on various occasions, including their temporary estrangement and their subsequent reconciliation, President Quezon left no doubt in the minds of those present of his behalf in the Nationalist Party's capability at this stage of Philippine nationhood to establish that absolute unity which both he and Mr. Osmeña declared as the indispensable basis for successful independence.

QUEZON LAUDS OSMEÑA

In praising Vice-President Osmeña for his brilliant career in public service, which was climaxed by his successful work in Washington where he obtained changes in the economic provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act, President Quezon took occasion to affirm that Mr. Osmeña's record is now rounded off, an important gap filled, so that it can be said now with truth, that "among Filipinos living, nobody can say that he has rendered better service to the country than Vice-President Osmeña."

The gap referred to by President Quezon, in recalling the political career of the Vice-President, was explained by him in a brief narrative every detail of which was followed with bated breath by the 41 guests present. In honoring Vice-President Osmeña, the President said, he was particularly pleased in bringing up, in order to set the record straight, what he considered an error in the brilliant career of the Vice-President.

He called attention to the fact that everybody knows the close relations he has with the Vice-President. They were classmates, he said; they lived in the same room for many years, passed the bar examinations on the same day, and were elected governor and assemblymen on the same date. For the success of the same party, they fought for many years; it was therefore natural under all those circumstances, the President said, that deep friendship has developed between the two, a friendship which survived the vicissitudes of life.

Friendship Unshaken

That there have been political differences between the two is known to all, President continued, but the friendship formed early in their lives was so strong that in the midst of their fights they did not lose the friendly feeling and high esteem they held for each other.

Following this preface, the President went on to cite what he considered the error Vice-President Osmeña had made in his political career. President Quezon recalled that when the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act was rejected by the Philippine Legislature, he decided to head a mission to the United States, and he invited Mr. Osmeña, who was then the head of the pro faction of the Nationalist Party, to come along. President Quezon believed he explained, that inasmuch as he was going to work for the enactment of an independence law which was of greater advantages to the Filipino people, he considered it not only a duty of Vice-President Osmeña as a patriot but also as a friend. He invited Mr. Osmeña, he narrated, to a conference at which was present mutual friend, Miguel Unson in whom both had confidence.

With Mr. Unson, as witness to his good faith, President Quezon recalled, he explained to Vice-President Osmeña the reasons he wanted him to be with him in Washington. Failing to convince him, the President went further by assuring Mr. Osmeña if he went along, and the mission succeeded, he stood to gain something, but if it failed, he would lose nothing, since President Quezon would assume the whole responsibility.

"Most Painful Moment"

Mr. Osmeña, at that, promised to consider the matter, but later rejected the offer, the President recalled. "I want to say, now," President Quezon emphasized at this juncture, "that I have remembered that as the most painful moment of my life. The Vice-President, being a very good friend of mine, I did not want to see his long brilliant public career spoiled." Narrating further, the President recalled how he went to the United States, without Mr. Osmeña, and secured desirable changes in the independence law.

He admitted, however, that the Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act, as finally passed by Congress and accepted by the Filipino people, still had objectionable features which it was impossible at that time to correct. As a matter of fact, he explained, the law had provisions which, if carried out, would obstruct the progress of the country toward complete independence.

President Quezon was evidently alluding to the unsatisfactory economic provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie law, because he explained later, that up to the time when Vice-President Osmeña went to the United States on his last mission and successfully obtained the amendments to the economic provisions of the law as contained now in the Tydings-Kocalkowski Act, he considered Vice-President Osmeña as having left a serious gap in his record of patriotic service to the country.

The Gap Closed

The gap, President Quezon considered filled, however, when Vice-President Osmeña brought back the Philippine economic adjustment act which improves the economic provisions of the independence law. With the accomplishment by Mr. Osmeña of this important task, in the course of the struggle of the Philippines for liberty and independence, it is now possible to say that the latest phase of the country's struggle for independent nationhood has been the work, not of any one man or group of men, or of a political faction, but that of the Nationalist Party as a whole.

The present Nationalist Party, he pointed out, is the result of the fusion of the Quezon-anti and the Osmeña-pro factions. It is the party which had split before and has reunited, he explained.

President Quezon then went on to say, in deliberate tone, what Vice-President Osmeña in his last mission was able to perform, he could very well have done as the Senator Osmeña whom he invited to come along with him to Washington on that most important mission in 1934. The implicit meaning of the President was that, if Mr. Osmeña went with him on that mission, the two, jointly, could have secured an independence act which would have contained economic provisions much more advantageous to the Philippines than the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

For the Commonwealth

The commentary on that important event having been clarified by President Quezon, he went on to describe his efforts, upon the establishment of the Commonwealth, of preparing the country for complete independence. His main concern, of course, he explained, was to pave the way for the correction of the objectionable features of the independence act. He recalled his work which led to the creation of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, in the composition of the Philippine group of which, he explained, he named members who represented not only the best men available in the Philippines but also the two political organizations that existed prior to the establishment of the Commonwealth.

That move for the preservation of national unity was necessary, the President declared, because he had then realized that political schisms, if allowed in the young country, would imperil the success of independence. So, at this point of his remarks, he distressed to recount his experiences in trying to establish in the Philippines a strong two-party system.

To complete the work of wetting the record straight, the President continued, he had another revelation to make. And he recounted the political schism which he provoked when Vice-President Osmeña was head of the majority party in the Philippines. He was then in favor of a strong two-party system not only would be better served but also strengthened. And knowing that the only party that counted then was the old Nationalist Party, headed by Osmeña, he provoked an issue, that of collectivism, which he advocated as against what he called the unipersonalism of Mr. Osmeña. He sincerely hoped then, the President said with a wry smile, that the welfare of the country as well as democracy as a system of government being implanted here would be greatly strengthened.

Saw His Error

"I saw my error on this point," the President said, when instead of a strong two-party government being formed, there developed many politician parties. He explained that while he was in favor of a government made up of two strong parties, he realized the danger of a government with numerous political parties. So, he said, at the height of the campaign for Philippine Independence, the collectivist group which he headed united with the unipersonalist, headed by Mr. Osmeña, to form the Nationalist party which later, in 1934, as he already recounted, split again on the issue of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, only to be reunited once more upon the establishment of the Commonwealth.

He saw, the President further recalled, how much mistaken he was in his hopes and expectations about a two-party system when, during the controversy over the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, passions ran high and the fight was waged with dirty and inexcusable methods.

In that political fight, he said, he saw patriots losing their heads, sacrificing the best interests of the country in what they believed, in good faith, they should do for their own political group.

That bitter fight, the President concluded, convinced him that the two parties in a democracy were good only in theory. Because of that conviction, he declared, he sought the reunion of the pros and antis soon after the acceptance by the Filipino people of the Tydings-McDuffie Act. "The result of that union," the President said with a happy and proud note in his voice, "you all see."

Gratitude of the People

The President wound up his remarks with high praise for Vice-President Osmeña. "I congratulate Vice-President Osmeña," he concluded, "and I want to echo the gratitude of the people. His history is made, his merits are recognized. Among Filipinos living, nobody can say that he has rendered better service to the country than Vice-President Osmeña."

The President then proposed a toast for Vice-President and Mrs. Osmeña.

As the President sat down, Vice-President Osmeña, visibly moved by the tribute paid him by a life-long friend, arose to reply to the toast of the President.

The Vice-President started his speech by giving thanks in his name and that Mrs. Osmeña for the hospitality and the congratulations extended by the President. He took advantage of the opportunity to give once more public testimony of the gratitude of the mission for the firm and constant support it received from the President. The Vice-President said he did not believe that any representative sent abroad by any country has ever enjoyed a support from the home government more determined than that which the Mission received from the head of the Commonwealth government. To this support must be ascribed the principal credit for the happy result, he emphasized.

"We Were Soldiers. . ."

"We went to the United States," the Vice-President affirmed, "were mere emissaries, soldiers in the trenches; our strength and our inspiration came from those who sent us." This strength and this inspiration had the fullest effect when they came from a united nation. Nothing handicaps the labors of the representatives of a country abroad so much as the existence of a division of opinion in the population at home.

The Vice-President said that there existed in the United States a favorable opinion towards the present administration in the Philippines. The people there recognize the progress made by the Philippines in all fields under the leadership of President Quezon and one of the most important achievements of the administration is that of having maintained and consolidated the unity of the nation.

The tendency towards division is quite common among nations that are newly-born, and the Philippines naturally is not an exception to this rule, Vice-President Osmeña said. In fact, in the past our people had witnessed, to their sorrow, divisions of this kind, not only during the epoch of the Filipino propagandists in Europe, but also during the critical days of the revolution.

Unity Under Quezon

"That during the first years of the Commonwealth under the wise direction of President Quezon the unity of the country has been maintained and strengthened," he said, "is something that should be a source of satisfaction to all of us. For my part, the maintenance of this unity has been the guiding principle throughout my public career. In the provincial government of Cebu and, later, in the Philippine Assembly it was my principal concern to contribute all I could to the maintenance of our national unity.

“This was also my cardinal thought during the days of the Philippine Senate, including the time to which the President has just referred when the Nationalist party having been divided into two groups as a result of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law issue; it seemed that those of us who had been together for so many years and had worked constantly for union were definitely destined to be in opposite camps.”

At this point Mr. Osmeña took up the reference which President Quezon had made to his refusal to go with the mission headed by President Quezon to the United States to work for a new independence law in place of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law, which had been rejected by the Legislature. The Vice-President said no one regretted more than he did the decision, which he was forced to make, not to go to the United States with the new mission, but he said this decision was imposed upon him by circumstances and that after long and careful thought, he reached the conclusion that the patriotic thing for him to do was to remain in the Philippines to work for a united support, which was later attained, for the new independence law.

Common Efforts

Mr. Osmeña agreed with the declaration of President Quezon that with the approval of the amendments to the Independence Act, this law, as now amended, is already the result of the common labor of the two wings of the Nationalist party now reunited, and as a consequence, the last traces of the division caused by the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law have been eliminated.

The preservation of national unity is one of the primary objectives of the present administration and undoubtedly will continue to be the primary objective of future administrations, he emphasized. This is so because “we are all vitally interested in maintaining this unity in order that we may promote to the greatest extent possible the peace, the prosperity, and the happiness of the nations.”

Taking advantage of the occasion the Vice-President offered to President Quezon the fountain pen used by the President of the United States in signing the new law for the Philippines. The Vice-President said he thought it most appropriate that this pen should be given to President Quezon since it was the President who initiated the negotiations which led to the approval of the law and who assumed the final responsibility on the part of the Filipinos at every step in the various stages of the process. “This pen,” he concluded, “is symbol of the sentiments of friendship and sympathy subsisting between the American and the Filipino people and will serve as a reminder to all Filipinos, that through the maintenance of national unity, they will find the best opportunity to prepare themselves for the responsibility of independence on July 4, 1946. The Vice-President then offered a toast to President and Mrs. Quezon.

Those present at the dinner were: The President and Mrs. Quezon, the Vice-President and Mrs. Osmeña, General and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur, Speaker and Mrs. Jose Yulo, Chief Justice and Mrs. Ramon Avanceña, Secretary and Rafael R. Alunan, Secretary Manuel Roxas, Secretary and Mrs. Jose Abad Santos, Secretary and Mrs. Benigno Aquino, Secretary M. Jesus Cuenco, Secretary and Mrs. Jorge Bocobo, Secretary and Mrs. Jose Avelino, Secretary Teofilo Sison, Secretary and Mrs. Jorge B. Vargas, Assemblyman Agustin Kintanar, Auditor-General and Mrs. Jaime Hernandez, Commissioner and Mrs. Serafin Marabut, Hon. and Mrs. J. Weldon Jones, Justice Antonio Horilleno, Mr. and Mrs. Golden W. Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Woodbury Willoughby, Mayor and Mrs. Juan Posadas, Jr., Vicente Madrigal and Major Manuel Nieto.

Resumé of the extemporaneous speech of President Quezon before the Executive Commission of the Nationalist Party, Assemblymen, Provincial Governors and Mayors of Chartered Cities

Speech
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
Before the Executive Commission of the Nationalist Party, Assemblymen, Provincial Governors and Mayors of Chartered Cities

[Released on December 11, 1939]

THE FUTURE OF THE NATIONALIST PARTY

Speaker Jose Yulo is one of the greatest men the Philippines has ever produced, and the future of the Nationalist party is safe in his hand. The Nationalist party which has successfully won for the country the independence it has fought for during more than a generation has never been in better hands than in Speaker Yulo's who has been its head since May of this year.

The President then called attention to the need for unity in the party at this crucial time in the history of the country, urging the high officials of the party present and the provincial and city executives to pull together in carrying out successfully the commitments of the party. He intimated that among the most important commitments of the party are the constitutional amendments which were incorporated, into the platform at the national convention last July.

As head of the party, and as one of the most valuable men in the government at present, Speaker Yulo is entitled not only to all the cooperation the party members can give but also to honors even higher than those the country has accorded him so far, the President is reported to have said.

The eulogy paid by the President to Speaker Yulo was delivered with such earnestness that the big audience of party men, governors, and mayors was moved deeply as the President recounted his impression of Mr. Yulo's ability and character, and pointed out the great opportunities that lie before the Nationalist party under such sterling leadership.

The big moguls of the party present, including Floor Leader Quintin Paredes, vice-president, former Secretary Eulogio Rodriguez, general campaign manager, and Secretary of Labor Jose Avelino, member of the executive commission of the cabinet, applauded these remarks of the President enthusiastically.

The President's appeal for party unity, especially when he pointed out that the official commitments of the government which the party has established can not be accomplished unless the rank and file, as well as the members of the high council, pulled together, was likewise greeted by enthusiastic applause from the governors and mayors present at the luncheon meeting.

President Quezon, in recounting the brilliant record of Speaker Yulo, both as lawyer and later as high official of the government, declared that the Philippine public has yet to realize fully the greatness and value of Mr. Yulo as a public man. He intimated that this is due to the retiring nature of Mr. Yulo who has never courted the public gaze.

The President revealed that his attention was first attracted to Mr. Yulo's brilliant talent when as member of the law firm, Paredes, Buencamino and Yulo, he represented the Filipinos side in the now famous board of control case so ably, the President said, that from then on he watched closely with increasing admiration every important step in the career of Mr. Yulo.

The board of control case had to be taken to the federal supreme court and the best legal talent of the Islands was sought by the government, both officially and extra-officially, to present its side. President Quezon attributed the splendid presentation of the government's side to the counsel of then Attorney Jose Yulo.

The President revealed that his admiration for Speaker Yulo was no more strongly confirmed than on one occasion when he offered the latter a seat in the Supreme Court. Speaker Yulo refused the offer for reasons, according to the President, that revealed the greatness of the man's character. He explained that he was still young, and that he had before him a long career in the law which he wished to pursue. If he accepted the position, the then Attorney Yulo said, he could never leave it afterwards in order to practice his profession, as he would not wish to take advantage of his former high position for purposes of gain.

This attitude of the Speaker, said the President, convinced him that here was a man who deserved and was destined to hold a high position in the leadership of the country.

President Quezon also highly commended Mr. Yulo for his brilliant achievements as secretary of justice and later as speaker of the Assembly.

In a speech opening the meeting, Speaker Yulo explained that the purpose of the luncheon was to give the governors an opportunity to get acquainted with the assemblymen and to give the provincial executives a chance to elect their representatives to the national executive commission.

The governors are now entitled to 12 representatives in the national executive commission, whereas in the past they had only 5 delegates.

Speaker Yulo revealed that he has always been in favor of increasing the representation of the governors to the commission in response to the request of the provincial executive themselves, and that he was glad this increase in representation was granted under his presidency of the party.

It was learned later that the governors will grant Governor Sotero Baluyot full authority to select this representatives to the commission on the basis of one representative to each senatorial district.

Agreement on the Atlantic Charter, August 14, 1941

THE ATLANTIC CHARTER

This is the famous agreement arrived at by and between the heads of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on board the U. S. S. “Augusta” and H. M. S. “Prince of Wales,” and subsequently dated August 14, 1941:

The President of the United States of America and the Prime Minister, Mr. Churchill, representing His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom, being met together, deem it right to make known certain common principles in the national policies of their respective countries on which they base their hopes for a better future for the world.

First, Their countries seek no aggrandizement, territorial or other;

Second, They desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned;

Third, They respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and they wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them;

Fourth, They will endeavor, with due respect for their existing obligations, to further the enjoyment by all States, great or small, victor or vanquished, of access, on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity;

Fifth, They desire to bring about the fullest collaboration between all nations in the economic field with the object of securing, for all, improved labor standards, economic-advancement and social security;

Sixth, After the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny, they hope to see established a peace which will afford to all nations the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries, and which will afford assurance that all men in all the lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want;

Seventh, Such a peace should enable all men to traverse the high seas and oceans without hindrance;

Eighth, They believe that all the nations of the world, for realistic as well as spiritual reasons, must come to the abandonment of the use of force. Since no future peace can be maintained if land, sea, or air armaments continue to be employed by nations which threaten, or may threaten, aggression outside of their frontiers, they believe, pending the establishment of a wider and permanent system of general security, that the disarmament of such nations is essential. They will likewise aid and encourage all other practicable measures which will lighten for peace-loving peoples the crushing burden of armaments.

Extract from the Sixth Annual Report of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines

Extract from the Sixth Annual Report of the United States High Commissioner
To the Philippines covering the Fiscal Year July 1, 1941 to June 30, 1942

[Released on December 22, 1941]

The following extract from the Sixth Annual Report of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, covering the Fiscal Year July 1, 1941, to June 30, 1942, reproduces the Act of Congress of December 22, 1941, suspending the collection of the export tax and the progressive reduction of quotas as prescribed by section 6 (as amended) of the Philippine Independence Act:

By the Act of December 22, 1941 (ch. 617, 55 Stat. 582) the collection of the export tax and the progressive reduction of quotas, as prescribed by section 6 (as amended) of the Philippine Independence Act, are suspended through December 31, 1942, and are to be resumed on January 1, 1943. The amendment provides as follows:

“Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the imposition and collection of the export tax prescribed by section 6 of the Act of March 24, 1934, entitled, An Act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes’ (48 Stat. 456), as amended by the Act of August 7, 1939 (53 Stat. 1226; U. S. C, Supp. V, title 48, sec. 1236), shall be suspended for a period commencing on and after the date following the approval of this Act and ending on December 31, 1942.

“On January 1, 1943, the imposition of such export tax shall be resumed, the tax rate effective for said calendar year to be the same as the rate in effect at the time the tax was suspended; on each succeeding January 1 thereafter the export tax shall be increased progressively by an additional 5 per centum of the United States duty, except that during the period January 1, 1946, through July 3, 1946, the export tax shall remain at 15 per centum of the United States duty.

“SEC. 2. That the progressive reduction of the quotas of the Philippine articles of a class or kind in respect of which a quota is established by subdivision 3, subsection (b), section 6 of the said Act of March 24, 1934, as amended, shall be suspended for a period commencing on and after the date following the approval of this Act and ending on December 31, 1942; the original quotas established by that subdivision for the year 1940 shall be in effect during the suspension.

“On January 1, 1943, the progressive reduction of the quotas provided for in subdivision 3, subsection (b), section 6 of the said Act of March 24, 1934, as amended, shall be resumed, the rate of reduction effective for said calendar year to be the same as the rate in effect at the time the said quotas were suspended; for each calendar year thereafter through the calendar year 1945, each of the said quotas shall be the same as the corresponding quota for the immediately preceding calendar year, less 5 per centum of the corresponding original quota.

“For the period January 1, 1946, through July 3, 1946, each of said quotas shall be one-half of the corresponding quota specified for the calendar year 1945.

“SEC. 3. Nothing in this Act shall change in any respect not herein expressly provided for the provisions of the Act of March 24, 1934, as amended.

Message of President Roosevelt to the People of the Philippines

Message
of
His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt
President of the United States of America
To the People of the Philippines

[Released on December 29, 1941]

THE ROOSEVELT PLEDGE

To the People of the Philippines:

News of your gallant struggle against the Japanese aggressor has elicited the profound admiration of every American. As President of the United States, I know that I speak for all our people on this solemn occasion.

The resources of the United States, of the British Empire, of the Netherlands East Indies, and of the Chinese Republic have been dedicated by their people to the utter and complete defeat of the Japanese warlords.

In this great struggle of the Pacific, the loyal Americans of the Philippine Islands are called upon to play a crucial role. They have played, and are playing tonight, their part with the greatest gallantry. As President, I wish to express to them my feeling of sincere admiration for the fight they are now making.

The people of the United States will never forget what the people of the Philippine Islands are doing this day and will do in the days to come.

I give to the people of the Philippines my solemn pledge that their freedom will be redeemed, and their independence established and protected. The entire resources, in men and material, of the United States stand behind that pledge.

It is not for me or for the people of this country to tell you where your duty lies. We are engaged in a great and common cause. I count on every Philippine man, woman and child to do his duty. We will do ours.

I give you this message from the Navy:

The Navy Department tonight announces the Japanese Government is circulating rumors for the obvious purpose of persuading the United States to disclose the location and intentions of the American Pacific Fleets. It is obvious that these rumors are intended for, and directed at, the Philippine Islands. The Philippines may rest assured that while the United States Navy will not be tricked into disclosing vital information, the Fleet is not idle.

The United States Navy is following an intensive and well-planned campaign against the Japanese forces which will result in positive assistance to the defense of the Philippine Islands.

My dear Mr. President,

It was indeed kind of you to send me that charming Xmas card and those perfectly lovely shoes. I have never seen any shoes quite like them before. I was absolutely delighted with them and I so much appreciate your kind thought.

As you can see by the above address I am now with Rear Echelon. I was transferred here in December. I was up in Leyte for a short time but unfortunately I was unable even to catch a fleeting glance of you. I would have loved to see you before I left.

The news appears to be excellent and according to the newspapers here it has been a great "landing" and a great success.

"It won't be long now" and I will be so happy when I read that you are back in Manila.

I often wondered if the portrait of you arrived and what you thought of it. I enjoyed having it hanging in my office so much that I hated to part with it. I am very curious to know if you thought it was good work.

Again so many thanks it was a great thrill for me today when that parcel arrived.

With sincere regards and my very best wishes to you for 1945.

Telegram from President Roosevelt to President Quezon regarding his letter to Field Marshal MacArthur, January 30, 1942

Washington, January 30, 1942

Subject: Radiogram from General MacArthur quoting President Quezon

I have read with complete understanding your letter to General MacArthur. I realize the depth and sincerity of your sentiments with respect to your inescapable duties to your own people and I assure you that I would be the last to demand of you and them any sacrifice which I considered hopeless in the furtherance of the cause for which we are all striving. I want, however, to state with all possible emphasis that the magnificent resistance of the defenders of Bataan is contributing definitely toward assuring the completeness of our final victory in the Far East. The gaps existing in our offensive armaments are those that are to be expected when peace-loving countries such as the United States and the Philippines suddenly find themselves attacked by autocratic power which spent years in preparation for armed conflict. Initial defeats, privations and suffering are the inevitable consequences to democracy in such circumstances. But I have pledged to the attainment of ultimate victory the full manpower, finances and material resources of this country; and this pledge of victory includes as an essential objective the restoration of peace and tranquility in the Philippines and its return to the control of a Government of its own choosing.

While I cannot now indicate the time at which succor and assistance can reach the Philippines, I do know that every ship at our disposal is bringing to the South West Pacific the forces that will ultimately smash the invader and free your country. Ships in that region have been loaded and dispatched to Manila with various supplies for the garrison. Already our forces, with those of our Allies, have inflicted severe losses upon enemy convoys and naval shipping and are definitely slowing his Southward advance. Our four engine bombers are daily reporting to General Wavell from the trans-African route and more recently via the Pacific. Ten squadrons of pursuit and fighter planes have already been made available in that theater and a steady flow of such planes is crossing the Pacific. Our Navy is heavily engaged in escorting to the same region large troop convoys. Every day gained for building up our forces is of incalculable value and it is in the gaining of time that the defenders of Bataan are assisting us so effectively.

I have no words in which to express to you my admiration and gratitude for the complete, demonstration of loyalty, courage and readiness to sacrifice that your people, under your inspired leadership, have displayed. They are upholding the most magnificent traditions of free democracy.

Those portions of your letter to General MacArthur on which you asked publicity are being broadcast to the world from Washington. Your words and your example will rally to renewed effort not only the people of your own country but all those that in every section of the globe are enlisted in the fight for democratic principles and freedom in government.

Telegram of President Roosevelt to President Quezon, February 9, 1942

WASHINGTON, February 9, 1942

I have just received your message sent through General Mac-Arthur. From my message to you of January 30, 1942 you must realize that I am not lacking in understanding of or sympathy with the situation of yourself and the Commonwealth government today. The immediate crisis certainly seems desperate but such crises and their treatment must be judged by a more accurate measure than the anxieties and sufferings of the present, however acute. For over forty years the American government has been carrying out to the people of the Philippines a pledge to help them successfully, however long it might take, in their aspirations to become a self-governing and independent people with the individual freedom and economic strength which that lofty aim makes requisite. You yourself have participated in and are familiar with the many carefully planned steps by which that pledge of self-government has been carried out and also the steps by which the economic independence of the Islands is to be made effective. May I remind you now that in the loftiness of its aim and the fidelity with which it has been executed, this program of the United States towards another people has been unique in the history of the family of nations. In the McDuffie—Tydings Act of 1934, to which you refer, the Congress of the United States finally fixed the year 1946 as the date in which it was hoped that the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands established by that Act should finally reach the goal of its hopes for political and economic independence.

By a malign conspiracy of a few depraved but powerful nations this hope is now being frustrated and delayed. An organized attack upon individual freedom and governmental independence throughout the entire world, beginning in Europe, has now spread and been carried to the southwestern Pacific by Japan. The basic principles upon which have guided the US in its conduct towards the Philippines have been violated in the rape of Poland, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Albania, Yugoslavia, Manchukuo, China, IndoChina, Thailand and finally the Philippines. You refer in your telegram to the announcement by the Prime Minister of Japan of Japan's willingness to grant to the Philippines her independence. I only have to refer you to the present condition of Korea, Manchukuo, North China, Indo-China, and all other countries which have fallen under the sway of the Japanese government, to point out the hollow duplicity of such an announcement.

The United States today is engaged with all its resources and in company with the governments of 26 other nations in an effort to defeat the aggression of Japan and its Axis partners. This effort will never be abandoned until the complete and thorough overthrow of the entire Axis system and the governments which maintain it. We are engaged now in laying the foundations in the southwest Pacific of a development in air, naval, and military power which shall become sufficient to meet and overthrow the widely extended and arrogant attempts of the Japanese.

By the terms of our pledge to the Philippines implicit in our 40 years of conduct towards your people and expressly recognized in the terms of the McDuffie—Tydings Act, we have undertaken to protect you to the uttermost of our power until the time of your ultimate independence had arrived. Our soldiers in the Philippines are now engaged in fulfilling that purpose. The honor of the United States is pledged to its fulfillment. We propose that it be carried out regardless of its cost. Those Americans who are fighting now will continue to fight until the bitter end. So long as the flag of the United States flies on Filipino soil as a pledge of our duty to your people, it will be defended by our own men to the death. Whatever happens to the present American garrison we shall not relax our efforts until the forces which we are now marshaling outside the Philippine Islands return to the Philippines and drive the last remnant of the invaders from your soil.

WASHINGTON, February 11, 1942

Your message of February tenth evidently crossed mine to you of February ninth. Under our constitutional authority the President of the United States is not empowered to cede or alienate any territory to another nation. Furthermore, the United States has just bound itself in agreement with twenty-five other nations to united action in dealing with the Axis Powers and has specifically engaged itself not to enter into any negotiations for a separates peace. You have no authority to communicate with the Japanese Government without the express permission of the United States Government. I will make no further comments regarding your last message dated February tenth pending your acknowledgement of mine to you of February ninth through General MacArthur.

Letter of Field Marshal MacArthur to President Quezon, March 16, 1942

HEADQUARTERS U.S. ARMY FORCES IN THE FAR EAST

March 16, 1942

Mr Dear Mr. President:

As I radioed you yesterday, an entirely new situation and prospect has developed. The United States is moving its forces into the southern Pacific area in what is destined to be a great offensive against Japan. The troops are being concentrated in Australia which will be used as the base for the offensive drive to the Philippines. President Roosevelt has designated me to command this offensive and has directed me to proceed to Australia for that purpose. He believes this is the best way to insure the success of the movement. I was naturally loath to leave Corregidor but the Washington authorities insisted, implying that if I did not personally assume the command the effort could not be made. As a matter of fact, I had no choice in the matter, being peremptorily ordered by President Roosevelt himself. I understand the forces are rapidly being accumulated and hope that the drive can be undertaken before the Bataan-Corregidor situation reaches a climax. I left there several days ago and by the time you receive this note, will have flown to Australia. I want you and your family to join me there. We have been completely identified together for many years, and you have been at my headquarters since the beginning of the war. It is the natural and proper thing for you to do to rejoin me at my headquarters in Australia in the great drive for victory in the Philippines. The Filipinos and the world at large would acclaim this in every way, and it would enthuse and inspire them. This is an entirely different proposition from the one we previously discussed which involved your leaving the country merely for the sake of security. The plan would be to have you fly from Del Monte in three of our big B-17 bombers. The trip would take only nine hours and be done at night, and it does not represent a serious hazard. You could do it with no jeopardy whatsoever to your health. Flying at night would be at no higher altitude than eight or nine thousand feet, and the flight surgeons assure me that you would have no physical difficulty. General Sharp, who is in command here, will aid and assist you in every way. You will find him entirely sympathetic and cooperative. Inform him when you are ready as it will take me a little time to set the plan up.

I am retaining full command here in the Philippines and have left part of my staff at Corregidor, pending my return there. Roxas remains there. All communications for me go there just as before. I am sending this note by Soriano, who has read its contents.

We all join in expressions of love and devotion.

Affectionately,

DOUGLAS MACARTHUR

“To the Filipino People and the Philippine Army: At the request of General MacArthur, I have left the Philippines and joined him at his headquarters in Australia. On previous occasions, suggestions have been made to me that I leave the Philippines, but I have refused to do it, determined to carry on with the affairs of Government in Philippine territory.

“Upon the appointment of General MacArthur to command the Allied Forces in this part of the world, he invited me to join him upon the ground that we could continue to cooperate as we have done in the past better if we were together than if we were separated and with the difficulties in the means of communications. Having no other objective in mind than to free the Philippines, I did not hesitate to accept the suggestion of General MacArthur despite the hazards that the trip involved. And so I am here where I expect to be able to be of assistance in the reconquest of every foot of territory of my beloved country. It is my hope that the results of the appointment of General MacArthur to the High Command and my having followed his advice to join with him will soon be felt in the Philippines.

“I call upon every Filipino to keep his courage and fortitude, and to have faith in the ultimate victory of our cause.

Talk by President Quezon on the Shortwave to the Philippine Islands, May 8, 1942

Talk
of
His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On the Shortwave to the Philippine Islands

[Released on May 8, 1942]

I speak to my fellow countrymen in the Philippines.

I speak to you, my people, as your servant—the one elected by you to work for you in the capacity of Chief Executive.

And it is as your servant—your chosen representative—that I am on my way to confer with the President of the United States. President Roosevelt is determined that the armed forces of the United States shall return in triumph to the Philippines—shall drive out the Japanese oppressor—shall fulfill the United States pledge of independence for the Philippines. I shall discuss with Mr. Roosevelt the means by which this goal can most speedily be accomplished. I, and your other representatives who have accompanied me, shall work every minute of every hour, every hour of every day, for the liberation of you, my people.

I have recently departed from the headquarters of General Douglas MacArthur in Australia. General MacArthur, like President Roosevelt and like myself, is pledged to the proposition that the Japanese must and shall be driven out of the Philippines. General MacArthur will not fail. He will keep his promise to return. Already, we see great military and naval strengthening of the United Nations forces in the Pacific war theater. We see shattering blows being struck at the Japanese war forces. These blows are but the beginning.

I know that you in our homeland are now saddened. Saddened by the fact that our beautiful Capital, Manila, is in Japanese hands. Saddened that our heroic Filipino and American soldiers were, after perhaps the most gallant military stand in history, overcome by exhaustion and sheer weight of numbers. Saddened that the glorious resistance on Corregidor has inevitably ended.

I share your sadness—more deeply, perhaps, than you can realize.

But our emotion of grief is transcended by determination and confidence. I know that you will keep that determination burning in your breasts. It is an undying determination that, though the Japanese invader may for a brief moment conquer—to some extent—your lands and your bodies, your minds and your souls remain unconquered, unbroken. Your minds and souls remain free. And behind this spirit, there lives in all of us a confidence that the day of liberation is surely coming. The great and free peoples of the United Nations will not permit you to remain in bondage. Led by their noble statesmen and generals, they will rescue the Philippines. They will break the Japanese yoke which now oppresses you.

Stand firm. Hold to your faith. The forces of freedom are on the march. The day approaches when you shall joyously welcome them to our shores.

Today, shortly after my arrival in San Francisco, I talked with about 20 newspapermen, representing the newspapers of San Francisco and the great American press services which provide news to all the newspapers of the United States. From their questions and from their remarks it was very evident that these representative Americans have the keenest and most undying interest and concern in the Philippines and in the Filipino people. It was inspiring to me to sense the great and unconquerable resolve of America's 130 million people—their resolve that the Philippines shall be redeemed.

I made this statement to the American press. This is what I said:

“I repeat now a statement which I have made many times before—that the Philippine Commonwealth will stand by the United States to the end.”

Let me add to this assertion now the conviction that the United States, as its great and distinguished President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, has pledged, will not only stand beside us in our terrible plight of ordeal, but will dedicate its total might to the redemption of our homeland and to the dawn of a new day of freedom, dignity, and strength.

The enemy has listed me as dead. Hearing my voice, as you do at this moment, is, of course, proof sufficient to you that I am very much alive, and that this was merely one more of the flagrant falsehoods of our common foe. Not only that. I am feeling in much better health. I am here to work for you in concert with the leaders of our most cherished sister republic—the United States of America. We shall work together until the final day of liberation for all our peoples. God grant that this day shall dawn soon.

President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines.

My dear Mr. President:

I have received your communication of June 10, 1942 stating that the people of the Philippines are wholeheartedly devoted to liberty and fully subscribe to the principles set forth in the Atlantic Charter; that they desire to associate themselves with the nations which are fighting for the preservation of life and liberty against the forces of barbarism that seek world domination; and that accordingly the Commonwealth of the Philippines formally adheres to the Declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942.

The entire freedom-loving world admires the great courage and valor shown by the people of the Philippines during the past six months as they have gallantly fought to preserve their country from Japanese aggression. On behalf of this Government, as depository for the Declaration by United Nations, I take pleasure in welcoming into this group the Commonwealth of the Philippines.

Please accept the assurance of my highest consideration.

Very truly yours,

Radiogram from Lieutenant Colonel Guillermo Nakar received by General MacArthur, June 30, 1942

JUNE 30, 1942

AGWAR
WASHINGTON

The following paraphrase of radiogram received by me June twenty nine from Lieutenant Colonel Guillermo Nakar is for your information.

“Making use of slender means available to the greatest extent possible my command, the Fourteenth Infantry and attached elements, are continuing to offer resistance in five provinces of North Luzon. Also in Ilocos and Central Plain other detachments under the command of Filipino and American officers who are still free are attacking small units of the enemy whenever possible. Further, one of the provincial governors of Ilocos is in person conducting hostilities against the Japanese. The enemys temporary government is levying a personel tax of 1 ½ peso on every male Filipino and a ½ peso on each woman. The population exhibits a brave and courageous attitude in the face of hostile rule. The people ardently desire to witness your return as a victor. It is desired that foregoing be sent to President Quezon. Additional news will follow at appropriate times. Desire all communications for me be sent to Kran Apoeng Java, my COGNOMEN and residence. Especially desire no repeat no information be given out for publication that might reveal to enemy the origin of this information. Further orders are awaited.”

Request no repeat no publicity be given this communication. Request President Quezon be informed.

WASHINGTON

October 15, 1942.

My dear Mr. President:

I have read your letter of October 10 with interest, as well as with sympathetic concern. I would have no interest in riding rough-shod over the representatives here of the brave Filipinos, even if I regarded that I had the power to do so. It was unfortunate that Mr. Fortas had fixed engagements in the West that he could not postpone, and unfortunate, too, that a few days before he left, I had to be in St. Louis and Chicago so that he could not arrange to see you. However, he will be back in Washington, according to his schedule, not later than next Monday and I will then try to see to it that he comes to you for a full conference. I would undertake it myself, but the burden that I have been carrying here during the recent past has been almost intolerable.

In the meantime take care of yourself and be assured that I have the same friendly feeling toward you personally and the same personal desire to work in cooperation with you on the broadest possible basis that I have ever had.

Sincerely yours,

Radio Address of His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt on the Seventh Anniversary of the Philippines Commonwealth Government

Radio Address
of
His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt
President of the United States
On the Seventh Anniversary of the establishment of the Commonwealth Government of the Philippines

[Delivered from the White House, November 15, 1942]

Though the alien flag of a treacherous aggressor flies temporarily over the Commonwealth of the Philippines, it is with supreme confidence in ultimate victory that the United Nations commemorate this birthday of its youngest member.

It was just seven years ago that this Commonwealth was established. By that time the United States had maintained sovereignty in the Philippine Islands for more than thirty years. But as I said in 1935 when the present Commonwealth was inaugurated, "The acceptance of sovereignty was but an obligation to serve the people of the Philippines until the day they might find themselves independent, and take their own place among the Nations of the world."

Let me go back to the days when Admiral Dewey won the battle of Manila Bay, and American sovereignty was established over the Islands. To a very large part of the American people, it seemed incongruous and unwise that the United States should continue permanently a colonial status over many millions of human beings who had already shown a desire for independence.

However, the United States and the leaders of the Philippine people soon undertook a long-time process of providing facilities in the Islands for education, health, commerce, and transportation, with the definite thought that the day would come when the people would be able to stand on their own feet. And at the same time, we granted them a greater and greater degree of local self-government.

By the year 1934 sympathetic conferences between Philippine and American leaders reached the conclusion that the time for complete independence could be definitely set, to follow a ten-year period of complete local autonomy under a Commonwealth form of government with its own Constitution.

This status was duly set up in 1935 under the Presidency of my old friend, Manuel Quezon. It succeeded so well that by December 7, 1941, we were jointly at work preparing for the consummation of complete independence in 1946. Both Nations and peoples had kept faith with each other during all these years. Confidence in each other's good faith was firmly established and it was cemented into place during the bitter months of ordeal which followed the treachery of Japan,

The brave peoples of the Philippines—their Army and their civilians—stood shoulder to shoulder with the Americans in their fight against overwhelming odds, resolute to shed their blood in defense of their liberty. Richly they deserved that liberty!

I like to think that the history of the Philippine Islands in the last 44 years provides in a very real sense a pattern for the future of other small Nations and peoples of the world. It is a pattern of what men of good will look forward to in the future—a pattern of a global civilization which recognizes no limitations of religion, or of creed, or of race.

But we must remember that such a pattern is based on two important factors. The first is that there be a period of preparation, through the dissemination of education, and the recognition and fulfillment of physical and social and economic needs. The second is that there be a period of training for ultimate independent sovereignty, through the practice of more and more self-government, beginning with local government and passing on through the various steps to complete statehood.

Even we in the United States did not arrive at full national independence until we had gone through the preliminary stages. The town meetings in the New England colonies, and the similar local organizations in other colonies, gradually led to county government and then to State government. That whole process of political training and development preceded the final formation of our permanent Federal Government in 1789.

Such training for independence is essential to the stability of independence in almost every part of the world. Some peoples need more intensive training and longer years; others require far less training and a shorter period of time.

The recent history of the Philippines has been one of national cooperation and adjustment and development. We are sure now, if ever we doubted, that our Government in the United States chose the right and the honorable course.

The pattern which was followed there is essentially a part and parcel of the philosophy and the ideals of the United Nations. The doctrine which controls the ambitions and directs the ruthlessness of our enemies—that there is one master folk destined to rule all other peoples—is a doctrine now on its way to destruction for all time to come.

The United States and the Philippines are already engaged in examining the practical economic problems of the future when President Quezon and his Government are reestablished in the Capital of Manila. He and I, in conference last week, have agreed to set up a Joint Commission of our two countries, to study the economic situation which will face the Nation which is soon to be, and to work out means of preserving its stability, and above all its security.

This typifies the highest form of good faith, which exists wholeheartedly between our two Governments.

It does more than that. It is a realistic symbol of our grim determination and of our supreme confidence that we shall drive the Japanese Army out of the Philippines to the last man.

President Quezon—on this auspicious anniversary—I salute, through you, the people of the Philippine Islands. I salute their courage. I salute their independence.

Memorandum of President Quezon on sending Captain Villamor to the United States, February 11, 1943

To: CINC SWPA (For MacArthur)
From: Washington (Thru WDGBI)
Nr: 1056 February 11, 1943.

I wish to reiterate my former request that you send Captain Villamor to the United States. In addition to the training that he would get he should be very useful as many other American officers who have distinguished themselves in Bataan and Corregidor have been useful in telling the American People about that epic battle. Villamor's name has been given wide publicity in the United States through your own commendation of his services but we have not had in the United States one single officer who has actually been mentioned in your dispatches for outstanding conduct and heroism. Villamor would fill this gap. Besides I am now preparing a big rally on April 9, the anniversary of the fall of Bataan and the Federal Government is taking charge of the preparations and the program to make it as big and successful a rally as possible. Villamor should be here on that occasion. Affectionately.

Quezon.

Address of His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt to the People of the Philippines on Post-War Independence, August 12, 1943

Address of His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt to the People of the Philippines on Post-War Independence, August 12, 1943

To the people of the Philippines:

On December 28, 1941, three weeks after the armies of the Japanese launched their attack on Philippine soil, I sent a proclamation to you, the gallant people of the Philippines. I said then:

“I give to the people of the Philippines my solemn pledge that their freedom will be redeemed and their independence established and protected. The entire resources, in men and in material, of the United States stand behind that pledge.”

We shall keep this promise, just as we have kept every promise which America has made to the Filipino people.

The story of the fighting on Bataan and Corregidor—and, indeed, everywhere in the Philippines will be remembered so long as men continue to respect bravery, and devotion, and determination. When the Filipino people resisted the Japanese invaders with their very lives, they gave final proof that here was a Nation fit to be respected as the equal to any on earth, not in size or wealth, but in the stout heart and national dignity which are the true measures of a people.

That is why the United States, in practice, regards your lawful Government as having the same status as the Governments of other independent Nations. That is why I have looked upon President Quezon and Vice President Osmeña, not only as old friends, but also as trusted collaborators in our united task of destroying our common enemies in the East as well as in the West.

The Philippine Government is a signatory of the Declaration by the United Nations, along with 31 other Nations. President Quezon and Vice President Osmeña attend the meetings of the Pacific War Council, where the war in the Pacific is charted and planned. Your Government has participated fully and equally in the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture, and a Philippine representative is a member of the Interim Commission created by that Conference. And, of course, the Philippine Government will have its rightful place in the conferences which will follow the defeat of Japan.

These are the attributes of complete and respected nationhood for the Philippines, not a promise but a fact.

As President Quezon himself has told you, “The only thing lacking is the formal establishment of the Philippine Republic.” These words of your President were uttered to you with my prior knowledge and approval. I now repeat them to you myself. I give the Filipino people my word that the Republic of the Philippines will be established the moment the power of our Japanese enemies is destroyed. The Congress of the United States has acted to set up the independence of the Philippines. The time will come quickly when that goes into full effect. You will soon be redeemed from the Japanese yoke and you will be assisted in the full repair of the ravages caused by the war.

We shall fight with ever-increasing strength and vigor until that end is achieved. Already Japan is tasting defeat in the islands of the Southwest Pacific. But that is only the beginning.

I call upon you, the heroic people of the Philippines to stand firm in your faith to stand firm against the false promises of the Japanese, just as your fighting men and our fighting men stood firm together against their barbaric attacks.

The great day of your liberation will come, as surely as there is a God in Heaven.

The United States and the Philippines have learned the principles of honest cooperation, of mutual respect, in peace and in war.

For those principles we have fought—and by those principles we shall live.

Memorandum to His Excellency from Dr. Rotor, September 1, 1943

From Dr. Rotor

Pursuant to your instructions, I am submitting to you herewith the changes in assignment and distribution of work that I had effected in the Office of Special Service since I took charge on September 1, 1943 in accordance with your telegram to Mr. Bernstein on August 23, 1943.

With the departure of Dr. Cherin and Mr. Saunders and the resignation of Mr. Bernstein as Director, it was necessary for the uninterrupted functioning of the office that some qualified members of the staff be given additional duties and responsibilities. I therefore designated Mr. Solomon Arnaldo as Assistant Director, vice Dr. Cherin, who was Associate Director. The work that Mr. Saunders was doing I divided between Mr. James Wingo and Miss Gladys Beauchamp, whom I designated Public Relations Officer and Assistant Public Relations Officer respectively. Miss Beauchamp, who was formerly Mr. Bernstein's secretary, had another offer from a national weekly magazine, but she preferred to work with us. Since, as Mr. Bernstein's secretary, she was familiar with all of the contacts that he made, I considered her decision to remain with us most fortunate. With the promotion of Mr. Arnaldo, Miss Remedios Vergara, our librarian, now has additional duties as reference and research worker. Although I had made no commitments in her case, as I have with the first three, I think that in fairness to her, she should also receive a small increase in her salary.

I had discussed these changes with the Auditor before I made any commitments. His endorsement is attached herewith. Because of the fact that these members of the staff had been fulfilling their new duties since September 1, I request that their new appointments begin on that date, I wish to call your attention in particular to Miss Beauchamp, who is the only American secretary who decided to remain with us after Messrs. Bernstein, Cherin and Saunders resigned. In addition, inasmuch as I had made these commitments, I should like to fulfill them before I turn over the office to Colonel Romulo.

I don't think that as a matter of policy Chief of an office should make commitments about salaries before they have been appointed by the President.

All the recommendations should be submitted to the Cabinet and then with the Cabinet's recommendation to use.

COMMONWEALTH OF THE PHILIPPINES

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

THE PHILIPPINES

Highlights in the History of Philippine-American Relations

Senator Millard E. Tydings, in presenting his resolution to grant immediate independence to the Philippines, last Friday took a step that was both historic and logical. Co-author of the Law that grants independence to the Philippines in 1946, he, as expected, was among the first to recognize the fact, that recent development have made it necessary to advance that date.

A resume of important dates in Philippine-American history reads like the blueprint of a program for the political, social, and economic development of the Philippines. It is a program founded on the mutual faith and respect which the two people had for each other and which they carried out this the closest cooperation. In studying these dates, one is struck by their periodicity. Important measures were passed within definite time limits, as if a schedule were being followed. Each measure was more important than the preceding, each measure granted an ever increasing amount of self-government and carried the nation farther towards a fixed goal-complete independence.

JANUARY 20, 1899. – President William McKinley issued his instructions to the First Philippine Commission, composed of Jacob Gould Schurnan (President of Cornell University), president of the Commission, Admiral George Dewey, Major General Eiwel S. Otis, Charles Denby, and Dean C. Worcester. The President's letter of instruction said in part:

The commissioners will endeavor, without interference with the military authors of the United States now in control of the Philippines, to ascertain what amelioration in the condition or the inhabitants and what improvements in public order may be practicable, and for this purpose they will study attentively the existing social and political state of the various populations, particularly as regards the forms of local government, the administration of justice, the collection of customs and other taxes, the means of transportation, and the need of public improvements. (Dean C. Worcester, The Philippines, Past and Present, needed by Joseph R. Hayden, New York, 1930, pp. 787-788)

MARCH 16, 1900. – The Second Philippine Commission was appointed, with William H. Taft as President and Dean C. Worcester, Luke E. Wright, Henry C. Ide, and Bernard Moses, all civilian, and members. In contrast to the First Philippine Commission, which was an advisory body, the new Commission was a civil agency with ample powers.

APRIL 7, 1900. – The President issued interactions to the Second Philippine Commission which are often referred to as "The Magna Charta of the Philippines." In these instructions, President McKinley declared:

In all the forms of government and administrative provisions which they are authorized to prescribe, the commission should bear in mind that the government which they are establishing is designed not for our satisfaction, or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands, and the measures adopted should be made to conform to their customs, their habits, and even their prejudices, to the fullest extent consistent with the accomplishment of the indispensable requisites of just and effective government.

...there are certain great principles of government which have been made the basis of our governmental system which we deem essential to the rule of law and the maintenance of individual freedom, and of which they have, unfortunately, been denied the experience possessed by us; that there are also certain practical rules of government which we have found to be essential to the preservation of these great principles of liberty and law, and that these principles and these rules of government must be established and maintained in their islands for the sake of their liberty and happiness....

It is evident that the most enlightened thought of the Philippine Islands fully appreciates the importance of these principles and rules, and they will inevitably within a short time command universal assent. (Reports of the Philippine Commission, the Civil Governor, and the Heads of the Executive Departments of the Civil Government of the Philippine Islands (1900-1903), Washington, 1904, pp.8-9.)

In the words of William H. Taft, President of the Second Philippine Commission, the policy expressed by these Instructions is that of "The Philippines for the Filipinos." (David P. Barrows, History of the Philippines, rev. ed., 1926, p.283)

Earlier, President McKinley himself had declared: "The Philippines are ours not to exploit but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government." (House Document No. 511, 67th Congress, 4th Session, 13. See W. Cameron Forbes, The Philippine Islands, New York, 1928, v. 2, pp. 342-343)

MARCH 2, 1901. – The Spooner Amendment to Act of March 2, 1901, was approved. This amendment provided that "all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands... shall, unless otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion...." This amendment marked another step toward completion of the establishment of civil government in the Philippines. (W. Cameron Forbes, The Philippine Islands, New York, 1928, v. 2, 448.)

JUNE 21, 1901. – First Civil Governor (William H. Taft) was appointed. He was inaugurated in Manila the following July 4. The Commission was sole-legislative body for the Islands until the inauguration of the Philippine Assembly on October 16, 1907.

JULY 1, 1901. – The Philippine Bill was approved. This Act of Congress, providing for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, is the first organic law for the government of the Philippines under the United States by virtue of this Act the government of the Philippines was made to rest upon the highest constitutional authority, the Congress of the United States. Congress established for the people of the Philippines their civil rights, protecting such rights from arbitrary action and furnishing through them the legal basis of the people's liberties.

Furthermore, Congress provided for the establishment of the Philippine Assembly, which was to be the lower house of the legislature, and was to be composed of representatives elected by the people. The Philippine Commission was to act as the upper house. The legislature was also empowered to send two resident commissioners to the United States.

The law also provided for the protection of the natural resources of the country against foreign exploitation, and for their preservation for the enjoyment and ownership of the Filipino people. (Blue Book of the Inauguration of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, Manila, November 15, 1935, pp. 167-185, David P. Barrows, History of the Philippines, New York, rev. ed., 1926, pp. 290-293.)

OCTOBER 16, 1907. – The First Philippine Assembly was inaugurated by lower house of the legislatures in the Philippines, with the Philippine Commission acting as the upper house until 1916, Sergio Osmeña, elected from Cebu, the elected speaker, and Manuel L. Quezon, delegate from Tayabas, majority Floor Leader of the Assembly. This body as created in accordance with the Act of July 1, 1902, which empowered the President of the United States to establish a popular assembly two years after the publication of a Census. A Philippine census as taken in 1903 and published in 1905.

OCTOBER 30, 1913. – President Woodrow Wilson appointed a Filipino majority in the membership of the Philippine Commission. This was one of the major steps of the policy of Filipinizing the Philippine Government. Upon assuming office in 1913 as Governor General of the Philippines, Francis Burton Harrison expressed this policy in the following terms:

We regard ourselves as trustees, acting, not for the advantages of the United States, but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to ultimate independence, and we hope to move towards that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the Islands will permit. (George A. Malcolm, The Commonwealth of the Philippines, New York, 1939, P. 67.)

AUGUST 29, 1916. – The Philippine Autonomy Act, or the “Jones Law”, providing for Filipino autonomy and future independence was approved. The Jones Law became the new organic act for the Philippines, superseding the Act of July 1, 1902. While the Philippine Bill of 1902 did not make any provision for Philippine independence, the Jones Law declared that “it has always been the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established.” The Jones Law declared further that “for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without; in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence.”

Under the Jones Law a new Philippine Legislature was organized, consisting of two houses – a Senate and a House of Representatives. The members of both houses were elected by the Filipino people.

OCTOBER 16, 1916. – The new Philippine Legislature consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives was inaugurated. Manuel L. Quezon was elected President of the Senate, and Sergio Osmeña Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MARCH 24, 1934. The Tydings-McDuffie Act was passed by the Congress of the United States. This was an Act “to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.” (Amended August 7, 1939, q.v.)

This law replaced the Philippine Autonomy Act or the Jones Law of 1916. It authorized the calling of a constitutional convention to frame a republican constitution for the Commonwealth of the Philippines which shall be the government of the Philippines until the withdrawal of American sovereignty.

It fixed the date of recognition of Philippine independence and withdrawal of American sovereignty on July 4, 1946.

FEBRUARY 8, 1935. – The Constitution of the Philippines was adopted by the Constitutional Convention elected for the purpose, in accordance with the Tydings-McDuffie Act. It was approved by the President of the United States on March 23, 1935, and ratified by the Philippine electorate on May 14, 1935. Subsequent amendments were adopted on April 11, 1940, ratified by the people on June 18, 1940, and approved by the President of the United States on December 2, 1940.

The Constitution provides for a republican form of government with each of three departmental powers independent of each other. The executive power is vested in a President of the Philippines; the legislative power in a Congress of the Philippines, consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives; and the judicial power in a Supreme Court and inferior courts.

The Constitution further provides for a Bill of Rights, and an Ordinance giving provisions for certain matters pending the final and complete withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippines.

NOVEMBER 15, 1935. – Manuel L. Quezon was inaugurated President of the Philippines and Sergio Osmeña Vice President.

At inauguration ceremonies, Secretary of War George H. Dern, representing President Roosevelt, proclaimed the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Philippines as follows:

By direction of the President of the United States of America, I... do hereby announce that the heretofore existing government of the Philippine is now terminated, and that the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, in entering upon its rights, privileges, powers, and duties as provided under the Constitution of the Commonwealth of the Philippines and the laws of the United States of America, is the successor to the heretofore existing Philippine Government and to all the rights and obligations thereof. (Blue Book of the Inauguration of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, Manila, November 15, 1935, p. 51.)

Upon the final and complete withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States and the proclamation of Philippine independence, the Commonwealth of the Philippines should henceforth be known as the Republic of the Philippines.

AUGUST 7, 1939. – The Tydings-McDuffie Act was amended, with particular reference to the economic provisions. The provision in Section 13 of the Act was amended to read, in part, as follows:

Provided, That at least two years prior to the date fixed in this Act for the independence of the Philippine Islands, there shall be held a conference of representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, such representatives, on the part of the United States, to consist of three United Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House, and those persons appointed by the President of the United States, and, on the part of the Philippines, to consist of nine representatives to be appointed by the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, with the consent of the Commission on Appointments of the National Assembly, for the purpose of relations between the United States and the independent Philippine Republic, the time, place, and manner of holding such conference to be determined by the President of the United States; but nothing in this provision shall be construed to modify or affect in any way any provision of this Act relating to the procedure leading up to Philippine independence or the date upon which the Philippine Islands shall become independent. (Public No. 300-76th Congress/Chapter 502, 1st Session, R.R. 7096.)

AUGUST 19, 1941. – President Quezon, in a radio address to the United States, said:

In this grave national emergency, the stand of the Filipino people is clear and unmistakable. We owe loyalty to America and we are bound to her by bonds of everlasting gratitude. Should the United States enter the war, the Philippines would follow her and fight by her side, placing at her disposal all our manpower and all our material resources, however limited these might be. We stand with the United States in life and death.

DECEMBER 8, 1941. – The Battle of the Philippines began. As part of the attack upon the United States, Japan invaded the Philippines. The enemy met immediate resistance and was repulsed time and again by the combined Philippine and American Armies under the supreme command of General Douglas MacArthur. These forces consisted of “19,000 United States Army troops, 12,000 Philippine Scouts, and approximately 100,000 men of the newly mobilized and out partially trained and equipped Philippine Army.” (Biennial Report of the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, July 1, 1941 to June 30, 1943 to the Secretary of War.)

The defenders were greatly outnumbered by the enemy. After some four months of constant fighting, short rations, disease, lack of medicine and sheer physical exhaustion, Bataan surrendered on April 9, followed by Corregidor on May 6. Some 3,000 American soldiers and 20,000 Filipino soldiers died.

“The effects of the desperate resistance offered by the Philippine Army and United States forces in Bataan,” says General Marshall in his biennial report cited above, “holding as they did a sizable portion of Japanese strength, were now being felt. During the delay thus gained men and materials were dispatched to Australia, New Caledonia and other Pacific islands.”

Further in the report General Marshall declares” “The major miscalculation of the Japanese was the apparent expectation that the Russian Army would collapse under the German grand assault then underway against Moscow which ended in the first winter-fiasco. Also unanticipated was the prolonged defense of the Philippine Islands which upset their timetable for other offensive operations in the southwest Pacific, including Australia.”

DECEMBER 28, 1941. – In a proclamation to the people of the Philippines, President Roosevelt declared:

I give to the people of the Philippine my solemn pledge that their freedom will be redeemed and their independence established and protected. The entire resources in men and materials of the United States stand behind that pledge.

DECEMBER 30, 1941. – President Quezon and Vice President Osmeña, who had been reelected November 11, 1941, began their second term. They were sworn into office by Chief Justice Jon Abad Santos while Corregidor was being subjected to bombardment by the enemy. Witness to the simple ceremonies included United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, Francis B. Sayre, and his family, General Douglas McArthur and his family, United States Army officers and nurses, and other officials representing both governments.

On this occasion the President of the United States declared: “It is a source of pride and satisfaction to all American who are familiar with the history of Philippine-American relations to show that in times of crisis such as now comments this Government, the Filipino people are ready and eager to stand shoulder to shoulder with the American people in the common defense. For more than 40 years American and Filipino statesmen have labored unceasingly for a better understanding of Philippine-American relations. No better evidence that their labors have not been in vain could be found than the manner in which the Filipino people have, in the present emergency, made common cause with the people of the United States.”

MAY 13, 1942. – With the arrival of President Quezon and his official staff in Washington, the President of the Philippines established the Philippine Government’s headquarters in the capital of the United States.

JUNE 14, 1942. – The Philippines became one of the United Nations when President Quezon, on behalf of his country, signed the Declaration by the United Nations.

JUNE 17, 1942. – The Philippines was represented for the first time in the Pacific War Council by President Quezon.

FEBRUARY 20, 1943. – President Quezon, in a broadcast to the Philippines, declared:

President Roosevelt has, in effect, already given the Philippines recognition as an independent nation.

On my arrival in Washington, he rendered me honors due only to the heads of independent government.....

He has recognized our right to take part in the Pacific War Council, with Great Britain, China, the Netherlands, and the self-governing Dominions of Canada, Australia, and New Zealand.....

In the name of the Philippines, I am a signatory to the Atlantic Charter. We are one of the United Nations. And whether the war is over before or after July 4, 1946, the date fixed for the establishment of the Philippine Republic, I am certain that we shall have our own representation in the Peace Conference.

... Our independence is already a reality since the President of the United States, by his several official acts enumerated above, has given recognition to the Philippines as possessed of the attributes of full nationhood. The only thing lacking is the formal establishment of the Philippine Republic.

As regards postwar plans, President Quezon declares:

With the help of the United States, we shall rebuild our ravaged land, and make of it a prosperous member of the family of free nations.

President Roosevelt and I have already agreed that studies be made now for the economic rehabilitation of the Philippines, so that we shall be ready to proceed with the gigantic task of rebuilding our country as soon as the enemy is expelled.

President Roosevelt has authorized the State Department to discuss with me the question of our future security and of the safeguarding forever the mutual interests of the United States and the Philippines in the Pacific area.

In concluding President Quezon said, "Above all, you must continue to have faith in America, which has kept faith with every nation, and especially with us."

The text of this broadcast was previously approved by President Roosevelt.

AUGUST 13, 1943. – President Roosevelt, in broadcast to the Philippines, declares that the United States; in practice, regards the lawful Government of the Philippines in Washington, D.C., "as having the same status as the governments of other independent nations." He further declared:

The Philippine Government is a signatory of the Declaration by the United Nations, along with thirty one other nations. President Quezon and Vice-President Osmeña attend the meetings of the Pacific War Council, where the war in the Pacific is charted and planned. Your Government has participated fully and equally in the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture, and a Philippine representative is a member of the Interim Commission created by that Conference. And, of course the Philippine Government will have its rightful place in the conferences which will follow the defeat of Japan.

These are attributes of complete and respected nationhood for the Philippines, not a promise but a fact.

As President Quezon himself has told you, "the only thin lacking is the formal establishment of the Philippine Republic." These words of your President were uttered to you with my prior knowledge and approval. I now repeat them to you myself. I give the Filipino people my word that the Republic of the Philippines will be established the moment the power of our Japanese enemies is destroyed.

SEPTEMBER 24, 1943. – Senator Millard E. Tydings, Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, introduced a joint resolution, providing, among other things, that "the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations with the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands for proclaiming the independence of the Philippine Islands as a separate and self-governing nation, not later than 30 days after the enactment of this resolution."

Message of United States President Franklin D. Roosevelt to the American Congress, recommending legislation advancing the date of Philippine independence, October 6, 1943

Message
of
His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt
President of the United States of America
To the American Congress, recommending legislation advancing the date of Philippine independence

[Released on October 6, 1943]

Following is United States President Franklin D. Roosevelt's message to the American Congress on October 6, 1943, recommending legislation advancing the date of Philippine independence, providing full security for the Philippines after independence, assisting in making the Philippines economically secure, and making provision for the physical and economic rehabilitation of the Philippines. Acting on this recommendation, the United States Congress passed on June 29, 1944, Joint Resolutions Nos. 93 and 94, published in the Official Gazette of April, 1945.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Since the Japanese launched their attack on the Philippine Islands, I have on several occasions addressed messages on behalf of the American people to the courageous people of the Philippines—expressing our admiration of their heroism and loyalty. I have assured them that the Government of the United States of America will see to it that their independence will be promptly established, and—still more important—that it will be protected. The resources of the United States, in men and materials, stand behind that pledge to the people of the Philippines. We shall keep that promise just as we have kept every promise which the United States has made to the Filipino people.

The Philippine Government, now in the United States, has been collaborating with the rest of the United Nations in the united task of destroying our common enemies in the east and in the west. As I stated on August 12, 1943, the United States, in practice, regards the Philippines as having now the same status as the governments of other independent nations—in fact all the attributes of complete and respected nationhood.

I am sure that the American people believe that the Filipino people have earned the right juridically to be free and independent.

The date now set by statute and by the vote of the people and legislature of the Philippine Islands for independence is July 4, 1946. It is possible, however, that the fortunes of war will permit an early consummation of this joint will of the American and Filipino people.

I, therefore, recommend legislation by the Congress giving the President the authority, after consultation with the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, to advance the date provided in existing law and to proclaim the legal independence of the Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation, as soon as feasible.

If the Congress takes this action, there are several steps which, in my opinion, are necessary to make good our pledge that the independence of the Philippines will be protected in the future, and to give them the opportunity of economic rehabilitation which is their due.

I, therefore, also recommend:

1. That the Congress make provision authorizing the President of the United States and the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands to enter into immediate negotiations and take the necessary steps to provide for full security for the Philippines, for the mutual protection of the Islands and of the United States, and for the future maintenance of peace in the Pacific.

(2) That the Congress make provisions for determining the adjustment necessary in the existing provisions of law which govern the economic relations between the United States and the Philippines, so as to assist in making the Philippines, as an independent nation, economically secure wherever possible.

(3) That the Congress make provision for the physical and economic rehabilitation of the Philippines made necessary by the ravages of war which the invaders have inflicted upon them.

All of this is due to the Filipino people in recognition of their heroic role in this war, the political ties which have bound us together and the bonds of friendship which will join us together in the future.

Such action on the part of the Congress would assure the Philippine people again of our sincerity of purpose, and of our resolution to accord them as soon as feasible the legal status of complete freedom, independence and nationhood to which, as a member of the United Nations, they are entitled.

Philippine currency committee vacancy filling, October 10, 1943

TO: GENERAL MACARTHUR

FROM: PRESIDENT QUEZON

8996 TENTH OCT 43

Send to Iloilo Currency Committee. I appoint the assistant manager Iloilo branch Philippine National Bank, Juan Buenafe, as acting manager and chairman currency committee to fill vacancy due inability Cenon Fervantes. Committee must follow strictly instructions heretofore given by me to Confesor and instructions given by General MacArthur with my approval to Peralta regarding funds for the Army. (WDGBI STRONG FOR PERALTA) Regret to learn that Confesor cannot be found. I hope there will be full cooperation between you. I expect you to see to it that instructions given by me to Confesor and those given by General MacArthur for Army expenses are strictly followed. Thanks.

Quezon to MacArthur. From Peraltas message in your unnumbered 6 October, I suspect that he and Confesor are not getting on well and I fear that Peralta is trying to get the upper hand in the printing and disposition of the currency. Please watch situation closely and give Peralta the proper advice.

Declaration of Four Nations on General Security, October 30, 1943

DECLARATION OF FOUR NATIONS ON GENERAL SECURITY

At a conference held in Moscow from the 19th to the 30th of October, 1943, the Foreign Secretaries of the United States of America, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and China adopted the following joint declaration:

The Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and China:

United in their determination, in accordance with the Declaration by the United Nations of January 1, 1942, and subsequent declarations, to continue hostilities against those Axis powers with which they respectively are at war until such powers have laid down their arms on the basis of unconditional surrender; conscious of their responsibility to secure the liberation of themselves and the peoples allied with them from the menace of aggression;

Recognizing the necessity of insuring a rapid and orderly transition from war to peace and of establishing and maintaining international peace and security with the least diversion of the world's human and economic resources armaments;

Jointly declare:

1. That their united action, pledged for the prosecution of the war against their respective enemies, will be continued for the organization and maintenance of peace and security.
2. That those of them at war with a common enemy will act together in all matters relating to the surrender and disarmament of that enemy.
3. That they will take all measures deemed by them to be necessary to provide against any violation of the terms imposed upon the enemy.
4. That they recognize the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, and open to membership of all such states, large and small, for the maintenance of international peace and security.
5. That for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security pending the reestablishment of law and order and the inauguration of a system of general security, they will consult with one another and as occasion requires with other members of the United Nations with a view to joint action on behalf of the community of nations.
6. That after the termination of hostilities they will not employ their military forces within the territories of other states except for the purposes envisaged in this declaration and after joint consultation.
7. That they will confer and coöperate with one another and with other members of the United Nations to bring about a practicable general agreement with respect to the regulation of armaments in the post-war period.

Speech of Vice President Osmeña on relinquishing his right to be President, November 11, 1943

Speech
of
Honorable Sergio Osmeña
Vice President of the Philippines
On relinquishing his right to be President

[Released on November 11, 1943]

My Countrymen:

A joint resolution was passed by Congress continuing President Quezon in office for the duration of the war. Under this resolution, which has been approved by the President of the United States, my right to succeed to the presidency on November 15, 1943, has been postponed until constitutional processes shall have been restored in the Philippines, Congress acted on this matter upon the request of the Philippine Government in exile and this action of the Philippine Government was taken on my own initiative. I owe it to my people who gave me their confidence in the last elections to state the reasons for my action.

If we were in normal times, my duty would be clear and simple: I would have to assume the presidency on the 15th of this month as a matter of right. But these are not normal times. Our country not only is at war, but also is occupied by the enemy.

Under these circumstances, our principal concern and primary consideration is to win the war, liberate our people from the invaders, and establish the independence of our country. The question naturally arises: What is the best thing to do in order to help accomplish these aims?

It is unnecessary for me to remind you that President Quezon was the head of our government at the time of the outbreak of the war and that it was his lot to lead our people by the side of the United States. Faithfully and courageously, he has complied with his duty even with his health greatly impaired. His voice continues to encourage our people to resist the enemy and to keep faith with the United States. It was he who signed for us the Declaration of the United Nations. Due to his efforts the Philippines has been given a seat in the Pacific War Council.

Moreover, those responsible for the prosecution of the war on the part of the United States have expressed to me their concern over the possible effect of the change of leadership at this time. They said that the enemy would take advantage of President Quezon's retirement from active leadership by telling the Filipinos that President Quezon had withdrawn from the fight and that he was no longer interested in this war. They added that the morale of the Filipinos still fighting the enemy in the mountains of Luzon, Visayas, and Mindanao and receiving inspiration from him might weaken if President Quezon retired. Furthermore, they told me that in their opinion, based on recent information from the front, the unity of our people in general would be better maintained and secured with the retention of President Quezon in office since that would mean that both of us would continue working together.

The presidential succession therefore ceased to be a domestic matter involving only our own interests and desires. Related, as it was, to the war, it became a matter that concerned not ourselves alone but also the United States.

With the redemption of our country uppermost in my mind and with the conviction that this objective cannot be achieved without the full support, much less without the leadership, of the United States, I prepared the letter which the Philippine Government approved and sent to Congress. In that letter, the matter of the presidential succession was placed before Congress with the request that they review the whole situation and take such action as in their wisdom will best serve the interest of the Filipino people, their constitutional government and the government of the United States during this emergency.

Congress, after thorough consideration, passed the joint resolution providing for the continuance in office of President Quezon for the duration of the war. This resolution expresses the considered judgment of the American people. I accept it without reserve and I urge every Filipino, whether in the home land, in continental United States, in Hawaii or anywhere else, to accept this congressional action which is intended to safe guard the best interests of the two peoples.

As for me, I consider it my inescapable duty to continue giving to President Quezon's leadership my utmost support and cooperation so that the Commonwealth Government now in Washington may render the greatest service to the Philippines and the Filipinos. It is my desire to assist the Commonwealth Government in its endeavor to make every Filipino, wherever he may be, feel that he is close to his government which is always solicitous of his interest and welfare.

Fellow Countrymen: These are critical days for individuals as well as nations. Our sense of responsibility as a people and the strength of our national solidarity have once more been tested. We have again proved our unity. With this action, we have shown the world that when the freedom of our country and the validity of our commitments are at stake, there are no differences among us and selfish considerations carry no weight in our decisions.

General Statement: United States President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, United Kingdom Prime Minister Winston S. Churchill, and Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on the war against Japan, November 25, 1943

General Statement of United States President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, United Kingdom Prime Minister Winston S. Churchill, and Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek: On the war against Japan

[Issued at the conclusion of a conference held in Cairo from the 22nd to the 25th of November, 1943, November 25, 1943]

GENERAL STATEMENT BY THREE GREAT ALLIES ON THE WAR AGAINST JAPAN

The several military missions have agreed upon future military operations against Japan.

The three great Allies expressed their resolve to bring unrelenting pressure against their brutal enemies by sea, land and air. This pressure is already rising.

The three great Allies are fighting this war to restrain and punish the aggression of Japan.

They covet no gain for themselves and have no thought of territorial expansion.

It is their purpose that Japan shall be stripped of all the islands in the Pacific which she has seized or occupied since the beginning of the first World War in 1914, and that all the territories Japan has stolen from the Chinese, such as Manchuria, Formosa and the Pescadores, shall be restored to the Republic of China.

Japan will also be expelled from all other territories which she has taken by violence and greed.

The aforesaid three great powers, mindful of the enslavement of the people of Korea, are determined that in due course Korea shall become free and independent.

With these objects in view, the three Allies, in harmony with those of the United Nations at war with Japan, will continue to persevere in the serious and prolonged operations necessary to procure the unconditional surrender of Japan.

Declaration of the Three Powers, December 1, 1943

DECLARATION OF THE THREE POWERS

After conversations held at Teheran from November 28 to December 1, 1943, the President of the United States of America, the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the Premier of the Soviet Union adopted the following joint declaration:

We, the President of the United States of America, the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the Premier of the Soviet Union, have met in these four days past in this capital of our ally, Teheran, and have shaped and confirmed our common policy.

We express our determination that our nations shall work together in the war and in the peace that will follow.

As to the war, our military staffs have joined in our round-table discussions, and we have concerted our plans for the destruction of the German forces. We have reached complete agreement as to the scope and timing of operations which will be undertaken from the east, west and south. The common understanding which we have here reached guarantees that victory will be ours.

And as to the peace, we are sure that our concord will make it an enduring peace. We recognize fully the supreme responsibility resting upon us and all the United Nations to make a peace which will command good will from the overwhelming masses of the peoples of the world and banish the scourge and terror of war for many generations.

With our diplomatic advisers we have surveyed the problems of the future. We shall seek the cooperation and active participation of all nations, large and small, whose peoples in heart and in mind are dedicated, as are our own peoples, to the elimination of tyranny and slavery, oppression and intolerance. We will welcome them as they may choose to come in to the world family of democratic nations.

No power on earth can prevent our destroying the German armies by land, their U-boats by sea, and their war plants from the air. Our attacks will be relentless and increasing.

Emerging from these friendly conferences we look with confidence to the day when all the peoples of the world may live free lives untouched by tyranny and according to their varying desires and their own consciences.

We came here with hope and determination. We leave here friends in fact, in spirit and in purpose.

Signed at Teheran, December 1, 1943.

JOINT ARMY-NAVY RELEASE

The factual and official story of how the Japanese tortured, starved to death and sometimes wantonly murdered American and Filipino soldiers who had been taken prisoner on Bataan and Corregidor was jointly released last night the Army and Navy.

The facts were taken from reports made by Commander Melvyn H. McCoy, United States Navy, of 1126 LaSalle Street, Indianapolis, Indiana; Lieutenant Colonel S. M. Mellnik, Coast Artillery Corps, of Dunmore, Pennsylvania, and Lieutenant S. M. Mellnik, Coast Artillery Corps, of Dunmore, Pennsylvania, and Lieutenant Colonel (then Captain) William E. Dyess, Air Corps, of Albany, Texas, all of whom escaped from the Philippine after almost a year as Japanese prisoners. Their sworn statements included no hearsay whatever, but only facts which the officers related from their own personal experience and observations. The statements have been verified from other sources. After he made his statement to the War Department, Colonel Dyess was killed in a crash of his fighter plane at Burbank, California, while he was preparing to go back and fight the Japanese who had tortured him. Colonel Mellnik is now on duty with General Mac Arthur, Commander McCoy is on duty in this country.

The three officers stated that several times as many American prisoners of war have died, mostly of starvation, forced hard labor, and general brutality, as the Japanese have ever reported. At one prison camp, Camp O'Donnell, about 2,200 American prisoners died in April and May 1942. In the camp at Cabanatuan, about 3,000 Americans had died up to the end of October 1942. Still heavier mortality occurred among the Filipino prisoners of war at Camp O'Donnell.

While this report deals exclusively with the records of Commander McCoy, Colonel Mellnick and Colonel Dyess, other Americans known to have escaped from Japanese prison camps in the Philippine include Major Michiel Dobervitch of Ironton, Minnesota, Major Austin C. Shofner of Shelbyville, Tennessee, Major Jack Hawkins of Roxton, Texas, and Corporal Reid Carlos Chamberlain of El Cajone, California, all of the U.S. Marine Corps.

The calculated Japanese campaign of brutality against the battle-spent, hungry American and Filipino soldiers on Bataan began as they surrendered with what was always thereafter known among its survivors as "The March of Death." Commander McCoy and Colonel Mellnik, who were taken prisoner at Corregidor, did not take part in this, but Colonel Dyess, who did so, said:

"Though beaten, hungry and tired from the terrible last days of combat on Bataan, though further resistance was hopeless, our American soldiers and their Filipino comrades in arms would not have surrendered had they known the fate in store for them."

"The March of Death" began when thousands of prisoners were herded together at Mariveles air field on Bataan at daylight on April 10, 1942, after their surrender. Though some had food, neither Americans nor Filipinos were permitted to eat any of it by their guards. They were searched and their personal belongings taken from them. Those who had Japanese tokens or money in their possession were beheaded.

In groups of 500 to 1,000 men, the prisoners were marched along the national road off Bataan toward San Fernando, in Pampanga Province. Those marchers who still had personal "belongings were stripped of them; the Japanese slapped and beat them with sticks, as they marched along without food or water on a scorchingly hot day. Colonel Dyess, in a middle group, gave this description of "The March of Death:"

"A Japanese soldier took my canteen, gave the water to a horse, and threw the canteen away. We passed a Filipino prisoner of war who had "been bayonotted. Men recently killed were lying along the roadside, many had "been run over and flattened "by Japanese trucks. Many American prisoners were forced to act as porters for military equipment. Such treatment caused the death of a sergeant in my squadron, the 21st Pursuit. Patients "bombed out of a nearby hospital, half dazed and wandering about in pajamas and slippers, were thrown into our marching column of prisoners. What their fate was I do not know. At ten o'clock that night we were forced to retrace our march for two hours, for no apparent reason.

"At midnight we were crowded into an enclosure too narrow to lie down. An officer asked permission to get water and a Japanese guard beat him with a rifle butt. Finally a Japanese officer permitted us to drink water from a nearby carabao wallow.

"Before daylight the next morning, the eleventh, we were awakened and marched down the road. Japanese trucks speeded by. A Japanese soldier swung his rifle from one of them in passing, and knocked an American prisoner unconscious beside the road,

"Through the dust clouds and blistering heat, we marched that entire day without food. We were allowed to drink dirty water from a roadside stream at noon. Some time later three officers were taken from our marching column, thrown into an automobile and driven off. I never learned what became of them. They never arrived at any of the prison camps.

"Our guards repeatedly promised us food, but never produced it. The night of the eleventh, we again were searched and then the march resumed. Totally done in American and Filipino prisoners fell out frequently, and threw themselves moaning beside the roadside. The stronger were not permitted to help the weaker. We then would hear shots behind us.

"At three o'clock on the morning of April 12, they shooed us into a barbed-wire bull pen big enough to accommodate 200. We were 1200 inside the pen—no room to lie down, human filth and maggots were everywhere.

"Throughout the twelfth, we were introduced to a form of torture which came to be known, as the sun treatment. We were made to sit in the boiling sun all day long without cover. We had very little water; our thirst was intense. Many of us went crazy and several died. The Japanese dragged out the sick and delirious. Three Filipino and three American soldiers were buried while still alive.

"On the thirteenth, each of those who survived was given a mess kit of rice. We were given another full day of the sun treatment. At nightfall, we were forced to resume our march. We marched without water until dawn of April 14, with one two-hour interval when we were permitted to sit beside the roadside.

"The very pace of our march itself was a torture. Sometimes we had to go very fast, with the Japanese pacing us on bicycles. At other times, we were forced to shuffle along very slowly. The muscles of my legs began to draw and each step was an agony.

"Filipino civilians tried to help both Filipino and American soldiers by tossing us food and cigarettes from windows or from behind houses. Those who were caught were beaten. The Japanese had food stores along the roadside. A United States Army colonel pointed to some of the cans of salmon and asked for food for his men. A Japanese officer picked up a can and hit the colonel in the face with it, cutting his cheek wide open. Another colonel and a brave Filipino picked up three American soldiers who had collapsed “before the Japs could get to them. They placed them on a cart and started down the road toward San Fernando. The Japanese seized them as well as the soldiers, who were in a coma, and horse-whipped then fiercely.

“Along the road in the Province of Pampanga there are many wells. Half-crazed with thirst, six Filipino soldiers made a dash for one of the wells. All six were killed. As we passed Lubao we marched “by a Filipino soldier gutted and hanging over a “barbed-wire fence. Late that night of the fourteenth we were jammed into another “bull pen at San Fernando with again no room to lie down. During the night Japanese soldiers with fixed “bayonets charged into the compound to terrorize the prisoners.

“Before daylight on April 15 we were marched out and 115 of us were packed into a small narrow-gauge “box car. The doors were closed and locked. Movement was impossible. Many of the prisoners were suffering from diarrhea and dysentery. The heat and stench were unbearable. We all wondered if we would get out of the box car alive. At Capiz Tarlac we were taken out and given the sun treatment for three hours. Then we were marched to Camp O’Donnell, a prison camp under construction, surrounded with barbed wire and high towers, with separate inner compounds of wire. On this last leg of the journey the Japanese permitted the stronger to carry the weaker.

“I made that march of about 85 miles in six days on one mess kit of rice. Other Americans made ‘The March of Death’ in twelve days, without any food whatever. Much of the time, of course, they were given the sun treatment along the way.”

The prisoners taken at Corregidor, among whom were Commander McCoy and Colonel Mellnik, had no experience quite like the death march. But after the surrender, the 7,000 Americans and 5,000 Filipinos were concentrated in a former balloon station known as the Kindley Field Garage area—by that time only a square of concrete about 100 yards to the side, with one side extending into the water of the bay. The 12,000 prisoners, including all the wounded who were able to walk, were kept on this concrete floor without food for a week. There was only one water spigot for the 12,000 men and a twelve-hour wait to fill a canteen was the usual rule. After seven days the men received their first rations—one mess kit of rice and a can of sardines.

The Corregidor prisoners were forced to march through Manila on May 23, 1942, having previously been forced to jump out of the barges which brought them over from the island while they were still a hundred yards from the beach. Thus, said Colonel Mellnik, “we were marched through Manila presenting the worst appearance possible—wet, bedraggled, hungry, thirsty, and many so weak from illness they could hardly stand.” Commander McCoy added, however, that the Japanese purpose of making this a triumphal victory parade was frustrated by the friendliness of Filipino civilians.

“All during the march-through Manila,” said Commander McCoy, “the heat was terrific. The weaker ones in our ranks began to stumble during the first mile. These were cuffed back into the line and made to march until they dropped. If no guards were in the immediate vicinity, the Filipinos along the route tried to revive the prisoners with ices, water and fruit. These Filipinos were severely beaten if caught by the guards.”

Colonel Dyess’ sworn statement declared that the Japanese officer commanding Camp O’Donnell, where the survivors of the Bataan death march were imprisoned, delivered a speech to the American and Filipino soldiers telling them that they were not prisoners of war and would not be treated as such, but were captives without rights or privileges.

There were virtually no water facilities at Camp O’Donnell. Prisoners stood in line for six to ten hours to get a drink. They wore the same clothing without change for a month and a half. Colonel Dyess waited 35 days for his first bath, and then had one gallon of water for it.

The principal food at Camp O’Donnell was rice. The prisoners received meat twice in two months, and then not enough to give as many as a quarter of them a piece an inch square. A few times the prisoners had comoties, an inferior type of sweet potato. Many were rotten and had to be thrown away. Prisoners themselves had to post guards to prevent the starving from eating the rotten potatoes. The intermittent ration of potato was one spoonful per man. Once or twice the prisoners received a few mango beans, a type of cow pea, a little flour to make a paste gravy for the rice, and a spoonful each of coconut lard. Colonel Dyess' diet for the entire 361 days he was a prisoner of the Japanese, with the exception of some American and British Red Cross food he received, was a sort of watery juice with a little paste and rice. Some Japanese operated a black market and sold those prisoners who had money a small can of fish for five dollars.

After the prisoners had been at Camp O'Donnell for one week, the death rate American soldiers was 20 a day, and among Filipino soldiers 150 a day. After two weeks the death rate had increased to 50 a day among Americans and 500 a day among Filipinos. To find men strong enough to dig graves was a problem, Shallow trenches were dug to hold ten bodies each.

"The actual conditions I find impossible to describe," Colonel Dyess' statement reads. "It is impossible from a description to visualize how horrible they really were."

One dilapidated building was set aside and called a hospital. Hundreds of men lay naked on the bare floor without covering of any kind. There was no medicine of any kind. The doctors had not even water to wash human waste from their patients. Some afflicted with dysentery remained out in the weather near the latrines until they died, Men shrank from 200 pounds to 90. They had no buttocks. They were human skeletons.

"It was plain and simple starvation," Colonel Dyess' statement reads. "It was difficult to look at a man lying still and determine whether he was dead or alive."

The Japanese promised medicines, but never produced them. Once the Japanese allowed the Red Cross at Manila to bring in quinine. How much, the prisoners never found out. The Japanese did not issue enough to cure ten cases of malaria and there were thousands.

The sick as well as those merely starving were forced into labor details by the Japanese. Many times men did not return from work. By May 1, 1942, only about 20 out of every company of 200 were able to go on work details. Many died in the barracks overnight. Frequently, for no apparent reason, the prisoners were forced to line up and stand in the sun for hours.

Around June 1, the American prisoners at Camp O'Donnell were separated from their Filipino comrades in arms and moved to Cabanatuan Concentration Camp in Luzon. There Colonel Dyess joined Colonel Mellnik and Commander McCoy, Conditions at Cabanatuan were slightly improved—there was adequate drinking water and muddy seepage wells provided water for bathing. Japanese brutality continued, however:

"I had been at Cabanatuan one day," Colonel Dyess' statement reads, "when a Jap came through the barracks looting. He found a watch hidden in some equipment of a man not present. As I was sitting nearby, he punched me severely to show his feeling at the idea of a prisoner still having a watch."

Rice remained the principal diet at Cabanatuan. On one occasion the Japanese gave the American prisoners three chickens for 500 men, and on another occasion 50 eggs for 500 men. As a result, their propaganda later told the world that American prisoners in the Philippines were being fed on chickens and eggs.

Officers were not forced to work at Cabanatuan, but could volunteer to take out work details. Colonel Dyess so volunteered.

"The Japs frequently mistreated Americans working for them," his statement reads. "Once when a frail American private was not digging a ditch to suit his guard, the guard grabbed the shovel from him and beat him across the hack with it. The boy had to be sent to the hospital. One Jap carried a golf club and beat the men working for him the way one wouldn't "beat a horse. When two Americans were caught getting food from a Filipino, they were "beaten unmercifully on the face and "body. After a doctor dressed their wounds, the Japs took sticks and beat them again."

Men were literally worked to death. It was not unusual for 20 per cent of a work detail to be worked to death. In one instance, 75 per cent were killed that way.

Commander McCoy reported that two American Army officers and a Navy officer attempted to escape from Cabanatuan, which was thickly ringed with barbed wire, and had machine gun emplacements and towers outside the wire. The officers were caught moving down a drain ditch to get under the wire.

Their Japanese captors beat them about the feet and legs till they could no longer stand, then kicked the officers and jumped on them. The next morning the three Americans stripped to their waists, were taken out on the road in full view of the camp, their hands were tied behind them, and they were pulled up by ropes from an overhead pulley, so that they had to remain standing, but bent forward to ease the pressure on their arms.

They were kept in this position in the blazing sun for two full days. Periodically the Japanese beat them with a two-by-four, and any Filipino unlucky enough to pass that way was compelled to beat them too. If he failed to beat them hard enough, the Japanese beat him. After two days of this, one of the officers was beheaded and the other two were shot.

The Japanese made every effort to humiliate their prisoners of war. They would force them to stand and call them vile names. When one older American colonel turned away from a Japanese reviling him, he was knocked unconscious with a blackjack. American flags were habitually and designedly used as rags in the Japanese kitchens.

The death rate at Cabanatuan for June and July, 1942, was 30 Americans a day, according to the sworn statements of the three officers. The rate for August, 1942, was more than 20 a day. The rate for September, 15 a day—because by that time most of the weaker men were already dead. During October, 1942, the rate ranged upward from 16 a day to 19 a day and was increasing when Colonel Dyess, Colonel Mellnik, and Commander McCoy left on October 26, 1942.

By that date, 3,000 of the 12,200 Army, Navy and Marine Corps prisoners at Cabanatuan had died. There were 2,500 in the hospitals, and the American doctors doubted that any of them would live.

The chief cause of death was starvation. This was definitely established by autopsies performed by both American and Japanese doctors. After it was determined that the men were starving to death, the Japanese answer was that there was no food available. There was a great abundance of food available in the Philippines at the time.

Other diseases caused indirectly by starvation were wet beri beri (in which the feet, ankles and head swell to twice their size), dry beri beri, dysentery, diarrhea, malaria, scurvy, blindness, diphtheria, yellow jaundice, and dengue fever. Several men went completely blind.

The Japanese eventually permitted the Red Cross in Manila to send medical supplies, but after they arrived they were not unpacked for many days and during this period many died. Colonel Dyess had dengue had dengue fever, yellow jaundice and later scurvy sores. His weight shrank from 175 to 130 pounds, and he was given no medicine. At 130 pounds, he was considered a fat man in the camp.

High Japanese officers regularly inspected the camp and knew of conditions. During inspections, prisoners were forced to wear their best clothes, which were rags—some men had no shirts, only trousers, and many had no shoes.

One inspection, said Colonel Mellnik, was conducted by a Japanese general. An American lieutenant colonel was called out to accompany the general's group pointed out that many officers and enlisted men were too weak to stand in the banks.

"We have many sick here," he said courageously. The Japanese general, who spoke excellent English, asked:

"Why?"

The mess "barracks" was nearby. The American lieutenant colonel pointed to a meal of white rice and thin carrot-top soup.

"Here is why," he said, "We are all starving."

"That will be enough," snapped the Japanese general. "Your men are not starving. They need more exercise."

The lieutenant colonel tried to say more, but Japanese guards quickly stepped in and restrained him. The Japanese general curtly turned on his heel and continued his inspection with an air of boredom and indifference.

The Japanese took 400 prisoners who were technical men, gave them a physical examination, issued clothes to them, and sent them to Japan to work in factories. Another shipment of 1,000 technical men for Japan was being arranged when Colonel Dyess, Colonel Mellnik, and Commander McCoy left Cabanatuan on October 26, 1942. These three officers and 966 other American officers and enlisted men had been crowded into the hold of a 7,000-ton British-built freighter at Manila for shipment to Davao on the island of Mindanao, with stops at Cebu and Iloilo.

The voyage took eleven days. The hold was filthy and vermin-infested. Some prisoners were lucky enough to get a place on the junk-filled, rain-swept deck. Two men died on the trip. On November 7, 1942, the Americans were unloaded at Lansang Lumber Company, near Davao Penal Colony. The sun treatment for two hours followed and then the group was forced to march more than 15 miles to the penal colony. Many were so weakened they fell by the roadside. In this instance, Japanese picked them up, threw them into trucks, and carried them along.

It developed that the Japanese commanding officer at the penal colony, which in peace times had been operated for criminals by the Philippine Bureau of Prisons, was disturbed when he saw the condition of the Americans. He had requested able-bodied laborers. Instead, he shouted, he had been sent walking corpses.

In spite of the condition of the prisoners, they were without exception put to hard labor—chaplains, officers, and enlisted men alike. Colonel Dyess, barefooted for a month and a half, was forced to clear jungle and plow every day.

During Colonel Dyess' 361 days as a prisoner of war, he received $10 in pay from the Japanese. To get the $10 he was forced to sign a statement paying that he had received more than $250, with clothes, food, and lodging. No clothes were issued until American and British Red Cross supplies began to arrive at Davao, an event Colonel Dyess' statement describes as "The salvation of the American prisoners of war."

Food was slightly better at Davao. In addition to rice, the prisoners received once a day a small portion of mango beans, and some camotes, green papayas, casavas, or cooking bananas. However, most of the prisoners already were suffering from beri beri and the food was not sufficient to prevent the disease from progressing. Although oranges and lemons were abundant in the vicinity, the Japanese would not allow prisoners to have them. The brutality of Japanese officers continued. One lieutenant habitually beat prisoners. According to the statement of Colonel Mellnik, this lieutenant had done most of his fighting at the rear when in action, and had been assigned to prison duty as a punishment. He avenged himself on the prisoners.

The camp commandant made a speech to the prisoners shortly after their arrival.

“You have been used to a soft, easy life since your capture,” he said, “All that will be different here. You will learn about hard labor. Every prisoner will continue to work until he is actually hospitalized. Punishment for malingering will be severe.”

These orders were rigidly enforced. When Colonel Dyess, Colonel Mellnik, and Commander McCoy escaped from Davao in April, 1943, only 1,100 of the 2,000 prisoners there were able to work.

The arrival of two Red Cross boxes for each prisoner early in 1943 caused joy beyond description among the prisoners, according to the statements of the three officers. The boxes contained chocolate bars, cheese, tinned meats and sardines, cigarettes, a portion each of tea, cocoa, salt, pepper, and sugar. Most important of all, quinine and sulfa drugs were included.

The Red Cross supplies had been received aboard a diplomatic ship in Japan in June, 1942. The prisoners never learned why it took then seven months to reach Davao.

A few days before Commander McCoy, Colonel Mellnik, Colonel Dyess escaped from Davao on April 4, 1943, one of the American prisoners, a hospital orderly, was wantonly murdered by a Japanese sentry.

The orderly was digging camotes, Colonel Mellnik reported, outside the hospital stockade and directly beneath a watch tower. It was an extremely hot day. He called to a fellow prisoner to toss him a canteen from the stockade. As the orderly was about to drink from the canteen, the Japanese sentry in the tower shouted at him angrily.

To show that the canteen contained only water, the orderly took it from his mouth and poured a little on the ground. Apparently because he did this, the sentry trained his rifle on him and fired. The bullet entered at the neck and shoulder and came out at the hip.

The orderly cried out: “Don’t shoot me again.”

The sentry fired two more bullets into the man’s body. He then emptied his clip at the man inside the hospital stockade, who ran for his life and was not hit.

Letter of Major General Sutherland to President Quezon on the relief of Whitney and Hayden, February 15, 1944

Letter
of
R. K. Sutherland
Major General of the U.S. Army
To President Quezon on the relief of Whitney and Hayden

[Written on February 15, 1944]

PERSONAL

15 February 1944

Dear Mr. President:

Following my last conversation with you in Washington I took up with General MacArthur the question of the relief of Whitney and Hayden. Due to certain local considerations and to the fact that they are not in a position to do any harm, the General did not feel that he could relieve them at that time. I shall reopen the question immediately upon my return by giving to the General your letter of February 11th. You may be sure that in this case as always the General will give the greatest weight to your opinion. In order to allay your uneasiness to the extent possible, I can assure that neither of these men is in a position to affect in the slightest degree any policies regarding the Philippines. Both of them are engaged in detailed work-important matters of execution but without significance in policy. Even if these men are not eliminated immediately it is our intention to relieve them from their present positions prior to our return to the Philippines. Let me repeat that they are not now nor ever will be in a position to influence policy. You can rest assured that General MacArthur has not in any way modified the convictions that he has so long expressed and which have so long guided his actions. He is a true friend of yours and of the Filipino people. He will not be influenced an iota by the opinions of imperialists like Whitney.

I have talked on the telephone with Mike Elizalde and will arrange a conference with him to discuss fully any matters that you may want me to present to the General.

I had hoped that I would have an opportunity to talk to you but it does not now appear possible to do so. If I should be delayed here longer than I now expect, the opportunity may present itself, in which case I shall get in touch with you to inquire whether it would be convenient.

Mrs. Quezon has told me that you are benefiting markedly from the complete rest you are getting in Florida. We are all delighted to hear it.

Most sincerely,

R. K. SUTHERLAND,
Major General, U.S. Army

Speech of President Laurel on the occasion of the oath taking of Messrs. Gaudencio Garcia and Pastor M. Endencia as Judges, and Gregorio Narvasa and Arturo M. Tolentino as Special Prosecutors under Ordinance No. 7, March 9, 1944 ‘In These Crucial Days’

Speech on the occasion of the oath taking of Messrs. Gaudencio Garcia and Pastor M. Endencia as Judges, and Gregorio Narvasa and Arturo M. Tolentino as Special Prosecutors under Ordinance No. 7, March 9, 1944.

Gentlemen:

I have appointed you to these positions of great importance upon the recommendation of the Minister of State for Justice because we have great confidence not only in your experience and your ability but also in your honesty and in your willingness and determination to serve our people in these crucial days.

The administration of justice is especially important in connection with the restoration of peace and order. In order that the independence of the Philippines may be real it is necessary that justice be done and our laws enforced. The primordial problem of the country is its survival. The policy that I have announced is that no Filipino who is rich should endeavor to grow richer at the expense of the masses of our people and that Filipino who is poor should not be reduced to further poverty. This is a service, which you and the Minister of State for Justice of the Republic and I must carry into effect without fear, with the single purpose in mind of helping our people love the Philippines and making her independence real, if it is unreal.

In connection with the special reorganization, upon the recommendation of the Minister of State for Justice, who is one of the few men who is helping us in these crucial days, I am also authorized to recognize the Bureau of Information into a Ministry of Information. That will depend upon his recommendation. If necessary it will be composed of 300 or 500 men who will go after those people who are aggravating the suffering of the masses. They will cooperate with you in prosecuting these people and see that in the performance of their duties the judges will deal with these people in accordance with the law and exigencies of the situation.

I think I voice the wish of the Minister of State for Justice in extending our heartfelt congratulations to you in the hope that you will not fail us in this great hour of our country's history.

Message of President Laurel to the Institute of Pensionados to Japan at its opening exercises, March 30, 1944

‘A Filipino, First and Last’

Message to the Institute of Pensionados to Japan at its opening exercises, Manila, March 30, 1944 read by Honorable Arsenio N. Luz, Chairman, Board of Information.

I wish to congratulate you upon your selection as Philippine pensionados to Japan by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Yours is an opportunity not given to every Filipino young man today, and I trust that you will exert your best efforts to be worthy not only of the privilege but of your country on whose behalf you are going to study in Japan to become the better servants of your people.

As you start your preliminary training I hope you will take every possible advantage of the facilities that you will have here in order to reinforce your equipment as Philippine pensionados abroad. We live in an age that is very much accelerated in the tempo of its progress and for this reason we have neither time nor energy to waste. Our rating as potential leaders of our country in its greatest period of reconstruction will depend on how efficiently and effectively we make use of our opportunities in our preparation for service.

In your period of preliminary preparation and even in your period of study abroad, I hope you will completely impress on your minds that you have one supreme loyalty, whether in the hour of danger or trouble or in the hour of greatest success, and that is, your motherland. I would have you remember at all times that you are the receivers of a priceless heritage, the rich tradition of heroism and service to the motherland, and that it is your primary duty to be worthy of your heritage as you prepare yourselves for the continuation of the great work started by our fathers.

In this connection, I would have you review our national history as far back as you can and trace faithfully the line and development of this heroic tradition in order to deepen your understanding and appreciation and provide yourselves a lasting inspiration to guide and enrich all your future endeavors.

Here, as well as abroad, I would have you keep ever fresh the sense of mental adventure, guarding ever against preconceptions, ready to welcome truths when they have proved their title despite the havoc that they may work with old and cherished beliefs.

Now and ever afterwards, I would have you enforce in your everyday activities the most intelligent discipline that knows how to subordinate petty and personal interests to the larger causes that are vital to the community and nation to which you belong.

I would likewise have you bear in mind at all times the philosophy of the new order is committed to the establishment and perpetuation of the rule of moral justice in which every opportunity will be given to all to fulfill their highest creative instinct in service not for their personal advantage but for the welfare and well-being of the entire community. All your preparations will mean nothing to yourselves as individuals and to your people as a nation unless you are completely and absolutely animated by this philosophy of service. Nothing short of the supreme sacrifice may be expected of you to live up to this ideal, and I dare say that you will find your greatest joy and gratification in succeeding to come up to the measure of this ideal.

You will, therefore, carry with you here, as well as abroad, the principle that you are a Filipino first and last and that as a Filipino you will be ready to serve to the extent of sacrificing yourselves in order to insure the happiness of your community of free nations not only in East Asia but in the entire world.

Message of President Laurel before the Convention of Provincial Governors, Constabulary Inspectors, Municipal Mayors and Kalibapi leaders of the Visayan provinces, April 13, 1944

‘Let Us All Be One’

Message of His Excellency, read by Commissioner for the Visayas, Paulino Gullas before the Convention of Provincial Governors, Constabulary Inspectors, Municipal Mayors and Kalibapi leaders of the Visayan provinces held in the City of Cebu, April 13, 1944.

Today the Republic is faced with the recurrent problem of peace and order and the problem of food. Foodstuffs we must produce if we are to save our people from possible starvation, if we want our Republic to survive its severest test of fitness. Every piece of land must be cultivated. We have enough land to make us self-sufficient. Our salvation lies in our ability to produce. Determined as the Filipino people are to survive as a nation, I have no doubt that our countrymen will not fail their fatherland in the supreme hour of need.

As Head of the Republic, I appeal to every Filipino worthy of his race to exert his utmost to make his soil productive, to render himself useful to the community. Let us all stick together as one people happen what may. That is the true Filipino spirit—the spirit that animates us all today. It is the spirit that wills to succeed whatever be the obstacle—the spirit that rises superior to every adversity.

Another important problem is unification. A house divided against itself cannot long stand. After having fought so long for independence, freely shedding the blood of heroes and martyrs, the Filipino people should stand united now that we are independent. Both duty and loyalty demand that we work for the uplift of our people and devote everything to the up building of a strong, great, progressive and enduring Republic. Before we can be true to others we must be true to ourselves. I ask each and all members of the convention and those under them to help their Government in uniting our people, in restoring peace and order, and in producing all foodstuffs our country needs. Let us all be one in our national aspiration and endeavor whatever political differences we may have had or now have.

‘May Two-fold Purpose’	They	Fulfill	their
-----------------------------------	-------------	----------------	--------------

Gentlemen:

The purpose of this mission is two-fold: First, to express to His August Majesty the Emperor of Japan as well as to the Government of His August Majesty and to the great people of Japan, the undying gratitude of 18 million Filipinos for everything that Japan has done for the Philippines—particularly for the grant of the coveted boon of political freedom, which had been the supreme aspiration of the Filipinos for centuries. Second, to enable the Filipinos, through this mission, to get in closer contact with the Japanese Government and people, through their leaders. By getting together and developing mutual understanding, the people of Greater East Asia can make of the Hemispheric Bloc an enduring instrument of world peace and progress.

And so, in the presence of the great leaders of the Japanese Imperial Forces—the Army and the Navy—I bid the members of the Philippine Gratitude Mission God speed. May they perform the functions assigned to them with honor. May they fulfill their two-fold purpose.

And now, gentlemen, may I ask you to rise and drink to the everlasting friendship between the people of Japan and the people of the Philippines; and for the success, pleasant voyage, and early return of the members of the Philippine Gratitude Mission.

I thank you.

Message of President Laurel to the Labor Institute of the Kalibapi at the opening of its sixth term, April 19, 1944

‘No Substitute for Work’

Message of His Excellency, read by Honorable Arsenio N. Luz, Chairman of the Board of Information, to the Labor Institute of the Kalibapi at the opening of its sixth term, Manila, April 19, 1944.

I appreciate this opportunity to greet the Labor Institute upon the opening of its sixth term. The enthusiasm with which the work of the Labor Institute was carried on in the last five terms was a positive indication of the good service that the Kalibapi, through the Institute, is rendering for the rejuvenation of the people of Manila.

I am sure that the Labor Institute will pursue with even greater interest the great service that has so far been effectively and efficiently rendered to such groups of working men and women as have come under its beneficent instruction and guidance.

For the delegates just registered to go through a period of reorientation during this sixth term, this should be an excellent opportunity to understand and appreciate those fundamental principles necessary to enable them to find their own true place under the New Order. The New Order is committed to the principle that the welfare of the community is superior to the welfare of the individual and, for this reason, the individual should find his greatest happiness in working for the welfare of all. The understanding of this principle is basic to our survival as a people. We can ill afford to neglect it if we believe in ourselves as Filipinos, and if we believe that we have a glorious destiny ahead of us.

As workers, you might think it superfluous to be reminded that we need to work harder than ever if we are to go through these difficult times and if we are to lay the foundations of a republic designed to endure. At all times and in all places and under any circumstances, there is no substitute for work in order to promote the health, happiness and security of the community of which we are an intimate part. But we must remember that there is a way of work that is exceedingly wasteful of energy, time and resources. This is especially true when we do not have the necessary skill and discipline and when the essential objectives are not clearly established in our minds.

Under the Kalibapi, you will have an excellent opportunity to learn something of these basic objectives and something of the urgent necessity of consecrating ourselves anew to those ideals that testify to the glory of our national tradition, of our great heritage which previous generations of heroes and martyrs have left to us in order that we may find life richer and more satisfying. I trust that this period of training which you will undergo will perfect the basis of this new consecration so that you may go back to your respective responsibilities and positions deeply renewed and strengthened and with a much deeper faith in your individual selves and in your own people.

To His Excellency Manuel L. Quezon
President of the Philippines
On Recommendations and Plans

[Released on May 21, 1944]

His Manuel
President of the Philippines

L.

Excellency
Quezon

The following plan is submitted to the consideration of Your Excellency in the hope that in its exposition we have been able to crystallize your views and wishes on the subject and that it will deserve the corresponding executive directives:

- (a) Division of Civil Affairs of the Philippine Army in the Department of National Defense;
- (b) Committee on Relief Purchases;
- (c) Currency Committee

DISCUSSION:

Charged with the responsibility of government and experienced in its exercise, Your Excellency has visualized the difficult situations in the matter of administration that will arise when the campaign for the liberation of the Philippines should commence. We know that this problem is uppermost in your thoughts and that fundamental policies on the subject will be concerted by Your Excellency with the Government of the United States. We also know that it is the wish of Your Excellency that as soon as the first beachhead should be established on Philippine soil your Government be adequately prepared to exercise as much of the functions of government, which will be increased progressively, competitive with and in the wake of successful military operations.

We share your feelings, Mr. President, that our Government to the full extent of its resources, must prepare now to fulfill its responsibility of providing our people upon the first landing with the means of elementary governmental organization and much needed and long awaited relief up to the time normalcy should have been attained. In this connection, we understand the immediate requirements on our Government to be both to establish and secure order in the liberated communities, and to provide the urgent necessities for food, medicine and clothing.

The study of the program of Great Britain and the Netherlands in the Pacific is pertinent. Allied policy in the Pacific provide that a civil government representing that of the recognized Allied pre-war power, rather than on interim form of Allied government, is to be established immediately upon liberation of territory from the enemy. In preparation for this responsibility, the Commission for the Netherlands Indies, under the direct supervision of the Minister for Overseas Territories, opened a civil service school in Melbourne to train the men who would follow the troops of liberation and establish government. The Netherland Government has a working arrangement to this effect with General MacArthur and we understand that the same arrangement is now in the process of negotiation with Admiral Lord Mountbatten.

Your Excellency is aware of the agreements signed on May 16th last between Britain and the United States, on the one hand, and the exiled Governments of Norway, the Netherland and Belgium, on the other governing control of civil affairs in those countries during the period of liberation. These agreements are identical to the signed on the same date by Norway and Soviet Union. "These agreements", the State Department said, "are intended to essentially temporary and practical in character. They are designed to facilitate the task of the Supreme Allied Commander and the further the common purpose of the Governments concerned, namely the speedy expulsion of the Germans from Allied territory and final victory of the Allies over Germany.” According to these agreements, it will be the undertaking of General Dwight D. Eisenhower, allied Supreme Commander, to turn power to each Government in turn, “as the military situation permits”.

When military operations should be conducted in the Philippines, military government will be inevitable for as long a time as the Military Commander in that theater of operations would deem necessary to the success of his operational task. Our information as that General MacArthur plans to allow complete Filipino civil government as soon as the circumstances of his military operations should permit it. On the subject of military government, our attention have been called to War Department Circular No. 136, dated April 8, 1944. This circular details the program for “preparing officers for civil affairs duties in the Far East”. It calls for the training of 2,750 Army officers during a period of eleven months (May 1, 1944 to March, 1945). Since all territory recaptured is returned to its former sovereignty and all the islands invaded in the Pacific by the Navy are being governed by the Civil Affairs Department of the United States Navy, it can be presumed that a part of the Army officers receiving instruction in Far Eastern Civil Affairs are intended for service in the Philippines. We know of some Army Officers who have been given this assignments purely on the strength of their knowledge and interest in the Philippines.

If circumstances should force the exercise of military government, through a brief period, it would be best that Filipino officers intervene in the administration of their own country to the fullest extent possible. But even if civilian government were possible immediately, it would be necessarily of a temporary character and the need of the proper liaison of Filipino officers between the American military and Filipino civilian authorities, in a country where military operations would provoke countless difficulties in the way of ascertaining the dividing line of authority, would be practically necessary.

After the epic defense of their right to free government by the Filipino people, as has so eloquently been repeatedly acknowledge in behalf of the American nation by President Roosevelt, it would be a grave reflection on our Government if the United States Army undertook entirely the administration of the Philippines territory and the relief of our people during the military campaign because of the failure on our part to provide necessary personnel to set up the required organization.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1 – Civil Affairs:

The creation in the Department of National Defense of the Division of Civil Affairs of the Philippine Army is to respectfully recommended.

The organization, functioning under direct orders of the President of the Philippines, would be attached to the General Headquarters of the Southwest Pacific in Australia. Its objectives would be the following:

(A) To represent the President of the Philippines in that Command and to carry out his orders in respect to whatever plans he may have agreed upon for the government of Philippines territory during military operations and before normal civil government can be established.

(B) To effect the necessary liaison between the Presidents of the Philippines, the Commander-in-Chief of the Southwest Pacific Area and the people of the Philippines during military operations and before normal civil government can be established in the Philippines.

(C) To plan for the relief of the people of the Philippines immediately upon the landing of the military forces of the United States and to arrange for its transportation and distribution of relief supplies in the Philippine territory with the United States Army and such other agencies as may be dedicated to the relief of the inhabitants of the Philippines.

These objectives would include the duties, among others, of affecting the directives of the President of the Philippines with respect to his relations with the guerillas; with the loyal officials of the Commonwealth Government and with the people in general, achieving the necessary liaison between the President and the United States Army in all matters dealing with the Philippines and between the military and Filipino civilian officers.

2. Relief:

The creation of a Committee on Relief Purchases is respectfully recommended.

This committee could be charged with the following functions:

(A) To coordinate the supply plans and requirements of the Division of Civil Affairs of the Philippine Army and to cooperate with other agencies, official and private, dedicated to the task of providing for the relief of the people of the Philippines.

(B) On the basis of a coordinated national progress to urgently purchase or commit to purchase in behalf of the Philippine Government, the supplies of food, medicine, clothing and other necessities for the relief of the inhabitants of the Philippines; to make pertinent arrangements with the War Department for their transportation, to the effect that they will be available for a planned distribution immediately upon the landing in the Philippines of the military forces of the United States.

(Addends No. of this memorandum deals with the urgent food requirements of the Philippines, and Addends No. 2 with the clothing requirements).

3. Currency:

It is respectfully recommended that a Currency Committee be created, with the subject of implanting the program of the President in the matter of the control of the currency of the Philippines.

As Your Excellency is well aware, the proper control of the currency is vital to the stabilization of the post-war economy of the Philippines, and the monetary problems of reoccupation will be very difficult.

The Currency Committee could proceed and confer immediately with representatives of the Department of Interior, of State, of War, and of the Treasury, and arrange to secure the printing of Philippine Treasury Certificates and the immediate minting of subsidiary coins, in accordance with studies of the monetary problems already made at your directions which we believe have met with your approval. This Committee could work in conjunction with the Division of Civil Affairs of the Philippine Army, as to the best manner of implementing its recommended program and your coordinating directives.

(Addends No. 3 to this memorandum, deals with the subject of Currency).

ORGANIZATION

It would seem that this Division, being a part of the Philippine Army, would in propriety be headed or placed under the immediate administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary of National Defense, The Chief of Staff of the Philippine Army.

Should this plan merit the approval of Your Excellency, we anticipate your desire that this organization and the Committee proceed immediately in full accordance with your pertinent directives embodied in your executive orders to negotiate for the purchase of the necessary food stuffs, medicine and clothing, as well as the printing and minting of the necessary amounts of money, so as to have the shipments decided upon available as soon as the campaign for the liberation of the Philippines should be initiated.

If it is possible, immediately upon the invasion of the Philippines, to provide its inhabitants with their immediate and urgent necessities of life, and the problems of administration attended, Your Excellency's wishes and those of your Government will have been accomplished.

Very respectfully submitted

Statement: President Roosevelt upon signing S. J. Resolutions Nos. 93 and 94, June 29, 1944

Statement of President Franklin D. Roosevelt:
Upon signing S. J. Resolutions Nos. 93 and 94

[Released on June 29, 1944]

I have signed today two Joint Resolutions of Congress respecting the Philippines. The first of these resolutions lays down a policy for the granting of independence and for the acquisition of bases adequate to provide for the mutual protection of the United States and the Philippine Islands.

In that resolution it is declared to be the policy of the Congress "that the United States shall drive the treacherous, invading Japanese from the Philippine Islands, restore as quickly as possible the orderly, free democratic processes of government to the Filipino people and thereupon establish the complete independence of the Philippine Islands as a separate self-governing nation." The measure makes it possible to proclaim independence as soon as practicable after constitutional processes and normal functions of government have been restored in the Philippines.

It is contemplated that as soon as conditions warrant, civil government will be set up under constitutional officers. It will be their duty forthwith to take emergency measures to alleviate the physical and economic hardships of the Philippine people, and to prepare the Commonwealth to receive and exercise the independence which we have promised them. The latter includes two tasks of great importance: Those who have collaborated with the enemy must be removed from authority and influence over the political and economic life of the country, and the democratic form of government guaranteed in the constitution of the Philippines must be restored for the benefit of the people of the Islands.

On the problem of bases, the present Organic Act permitted acquisition only of naval bases and fueling stations, a situation wholly inadequate to meet the conditions of modern warfare. The measure approved today will permit the acquisition of air and land bases in addition to naval bases and fueling stations. I have been informed that this action is most welcome to Commonwealth authorities, and that they will gladly cooperate in the establishment and maintenance of bases both as a restored Commonwealth and as an independent nation. By this we shall have an outstanding example of cooperation designed to prevent a recurrence of armed aggression and to assure the peaceful use of a great ocean by those in pursuit of peaceful ends.

The second Joint Resolution signed today brings into effect the Joint Economic Commission first organized in the present Organic Act, and enlarges its scope to include consideration of proposals for the economic and financial rehabilitation of the Philippines.

We are ever mindful of the heroic rôle of the Philippines and their people in the present conflict. Theirs is the only substantial area and theirs the only substantial population under the American flag to suffer lengthy invasion by the enemy. History will attest the heroic resistance of the combined armies of the United States and the Philippines in Luzon, Cebu, Iloilo, and other islands of the archipelago. Our character as a nation will be judged for years to come by the human understanding and the physical efficiency with which we help in the immense task of rehabilitating the Philippines. The Resolution creates the Philippine Rehabilitation Commission whose functions shall be to study all aspects of the problem and after due investigation report its recommendations to the President of the United States and the Congress, and to the President and the Congress of the Philippines.

COMMONWEALTH OF THE PHILIPPINES

July 5, 1944

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Manuel L. Quezon, President of the Philippines issued the following statement for broadcast to the Philippines on July 4:

“My fellow countrymen:

Fourth of July this year has a special meaning to us in the Philippines. We have celebrated it in the past as a milestone in the history of the United States. It marks the day of American Independence from an alien rule.

A few days ago, President Roosevelt signed Senate Joint Resolution No. 93 advancing Philippine independence prior to July 4, 1946. This year's July Fourth, therefore takes on a new significance. Freedom is indivisible and America shows the world that its belief in freedom is so strong it does not deny it to others. It gives the American soldier, wherever he may be in this global war, an epitome of what he is fighting for: Freedom not only for himself but for other peoples as well.

General MacArthur continues pressing forward in his steady advance in the Southwest Pacific. His victories in Hollandia and recently in Biak bring him and the army of liberation under his command nearer to Philippine shores. The forces under Admiral Nimitz are also staging a series of spectacular victories. A staggering blow was recently dealt the Japanese fleet off the Philippine sea.

The forces of freedom and democracy are marching onward irresistibly. As we commemorate today's American Independence Day, let us take renewed strength in the confident expectation that soon our own Fourth of July from Japanese oppression will dawn for us. It will not take long now.

MANUEL L. QUEZON.”

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

President Manuel L. Quezon of the Philippines sent the following message to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on the eighth anniversary of China's resistance against Japan (July 7):

"As China enters its eighth year of unwavering resistance against Japan the world must not forget that it is the Chinese people who seven years ago pioneered in the fight for democracy against totalitarianism. Your courage and determination have made up for what you lacked in armed power and yours is a struggle for human freedom that will go down in history as one of the noblest exemplifications of a nation's unbending will against tyranny and oppression. As the forces of liberation continue advancing everywhere it is my hope, and I am sure that of all lovers of freedom, that your arms may soon achieve that victory which the brave Chinese people so richly deserve."

DEPARTMENT OF INFORMATION AND PUBLIC RELATIONS
COMMONWEALTH OF THE PHILIPPINES

July 21, 1944

RELEASE FOR SUNDAY PAPERS, JULY 23:

SARANAC LAKE, N.Y. July 23 — The following is a statement issued by President Manuel L. Quezon of the Philippines on the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission which will meet for the first time tomorrow noon, Monday, July 24, in Room 357, Senate Office Building:

“I desire to avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate the United States Senate for the designation of Senator Millard E. Tydings as Chairman of the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission on the part of the American government, I know that the Filipino people welcome such a happy choice because they see in his selection as the head of the American group an earnest that their interests will be properly safeguarded. Senator Tydings has shown himself to be our true and loyal friend and we are confident that as in the past he will be guided by the sincere desire to help us establish a free and independent government.

“As provided in Public Law 381 — 78th Congress (S. J. Res. 94), the purposes of the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission are as follows:

(b) The Commission shall investigate all matters affecting post-war economy, trade, finance, economic stability, and rehabilitation of the Philippine Islands, including the matter of damages to public and private property and to persons occasioned by enemy attack and occupation.

(c) To formulate recommendations based upon such investigations and for future trade relations between the United States and the independent Philippine Republic when established and to consider the extension of the present or heretofore agreed upon trade relations or otherwise for a period of years to make adjustments for the period of occupancy by the Japanese in order to reestablish trade relations as provided for in the original Independence Act.

It is needless for me to dwell on what is clearly outlined in the foregoing, nor is it necessary to stress how urgent it is that the Commission should undertake to formulate a program of rehabilitation adequate to meet the needs of a people whose country has been ravaged and destroyed by the invader. I can only say that if the enemy has wrought terrible destruction on the Philippines as he has advanced victoriously, it is not difficult to foresee tint when he is defeated, his fury and savagery will be inconceivable, and his retreat will be marked by such havoc as I fear will be unrelenting and total.

“The Commonwealth Government-in-Exile has been engaged in the study and preparation of plans for the relief and rehabilitation of the Filipino people as soon as the reconquest of the Philippines is started. With our knowledge of our country and our people and with an understanding of their needs after more than two years under Japanese occupation, we made and completed certain studies and researches. On the basis of this, we formulated a program of immediate relief and rehabilitation. We place this program at the disposal of the Commission for whatever use it may deem fit to make of it.

“It is obvious that the task of this Filipino Rehabilitation Commission is vastly more difficult than that contemplated in the original Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act and the 1939 amendment thereto. The original act and the amending act approved August 7, 1939, provided for the establishment of a conference of representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands 'for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between the United States and the independent Philippine Republics,' The Tydings-McDuffie Act and the amending act of 1939 were passed at a time when this present war was not anticipated, and the task contemplated for the conference of representatives provided thereunder was to make adjustments in the trade relations between the Philippines and the United States which became necessary only because of the independence of the Philippines, under the normal conditions of peace.

"The present war has not only caused widespread destruction of property and completely disrupted the internal economic conditions of the Philippines, and all other enemy-occupies countries, but it has also disrupted and dislocated the economy and trade of the world as a whole. In formulating recommendation for future trade relations between the United States and the Philippines, therefore, the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission I hope will take into account not only conditions as they existed before the war, but the vastly more difficult and complicated condition existing in the world today. Therefore, the studies and recommendations of the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission will help determine the entire economic future of the Philippines.

"The Filipino Rehabilitation Commission also has the tasks, not contemplated in the original act and the amending act of 'Considering and recommending measures for the payment for the damage caused to public and private property and to individuals as the result of enemy attack and occupation. It must also consider the need of the Philippine Government for financial assistance, and the extent and manner in which such assistance should be given, the monetary assistance required by Philippine banks, and the rehabilitation of the Philippine merchant marine and aerial and other transportation system,

"With the establishment of this commission, we enter a new era in Philippine-American relations. Philippine independence is a settled question and now we enter the second phase envisaged by President Roosevelt when on December 28, 1941, he solemnly pledged to the Filipino people 'your independence will be established and protected.' The protection of that independence and the establishment of a firm and durable relationship between the Philippines and the United States looking toward the preservation of peace in the Far East will depend to a great extent on the findings and recommendations to be made by the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission.

"When Senator Tydings and Congressman Bell introduced S. J. Res. No. 94, I made a statement to the press in which I called the resolution 'an act of statesmanship of the first magnitude.' I reiterate it now, I am confident that the members of the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission will be guided by the highest sense of responsibility and good will, cognizant of the fact that in their hands lies in a large measure the destiny of a people that has shown unmistakably its loyalty to America and to the principles of freedom and democracy without counting the cost."

Statement: Agreements reached at the Bretton Woods Monetary Conference, July 22, 1944

Statement:

Agreements reached at the Bretton Woods Monetary Conference

[Released on July 22, 1944]

BRETTON WOODS MONETARY CONFERENCE

This Conference at Bretton Woods, representing nearly all the peoples of the world, has considered matters of international money and finance which are important for peace and prosperity. The Conference has agreed on problems needing attention, measures which should be taken, and the forms of international cooperation or organization which are required.

Agreement was reached on these large and complex matters without precedent in the history of international economic relations.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND: Since trade affects the standard of life of every people, all countries have a vital interest in a system of exchange of national currencies and the regulations and conditions which govern its working. Because these monetary transactions are international exchanges, the nations must agree on the basic rules which govern the exchanges if the system is to work smoothly.

When they disagree and when single nations or small groups of nations attempt by special different regulations of foreign exchanges to gain trade advantages, the result is instability, a reduced volume of foreign trade, and damage to national economies.

This course of action is likely to lead to economic warfare and to endanger the world's peace.

The Conference, therefore, agreed on the broad international action necessary to maintain an international monetary system which will promote foreign trade. The nations should consult and agree on international monetary changes which affect each other. They should outlaw practices which are agreed to be harmful to world prosperity and should assist each other to overcome short-term exchange difficulties.

The Conference agreed that the nations here represented should establish for these purposes a permanent international body, an international monetary fund with the powers and resources adequate to perform the tasks assigned to it.

Agreement has been reached concerning these powers and resources and the additional obligations which the member countries should undertake. Draft articles of agreement on these points have been prepared.

It is in the interests of all nations that postwar reconstruction should be rapid. Likewise the development of resources of particular regions are in the general economic interest. Programs of reconstruction development will speed economic progress everywhere and will aid political stability.

The Conference agreed that expanded international investment is essential to provide a portion of the capital needed for reconstruction development.

The Conference further agreed that the nations should cooperate to increase the volume of foreign investment for these purposes made through normal business channels. It is especially important that the nations should cooperate to share the risks of such foreign investment since the benefits are general.

INTERNATIONAL BANK: The Conference agreed that the nations should establish a permanent international body to perform these functions to be called the Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It has been agreed that the Bank should assist in providing capital through normal channels at reasonable rates of interest and for long periods for projects which will raise the productivity of the borrowing country.

There is agreement that the Bank should guarantee loans made by others and that through their subscriptions and capital all countries should share with the borrowing country in guaranteeing such loans. The Conference has agreed on the powers and resources which the Bank must have, the obligations which the member countries must assume, and has prepared draft articles of agreement accordingly.

The Conference has recommended that in carrying out the policies of the institution here proposed, special consideration should be given to the needs of countries which have suffered from enemy occupation and hostilities.

The proposals formulated at the Conference for the establishment of the fund and bank are now submitted, in accordance with the terms of the invitation, for consideration by the governments and people of the countries represented.

The Conference adopted the above statement after it was submitted by the Coordinating Committee of which Fred M. Vinson, Vice Chairman of the United States delegation and Director of the Office of Economic Stabilization, was Chairman. Other members of the Committee were delegates from Brazil, China, France, Mexico, Russia and Britain.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

SARANAC LAKE, N.Y., July 28—With plans rapidly moving ahead for the early rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Philippines, President Manuel L. Quezon is organizing his staff for this tremendous task. Today he appointed Colonel Alejandro Melchor as Under-Secretary of National Defense. Major-General Basilio J. Valdes, Chief of Staff of the Philippine Army, is Secretary.

President Quezon also recalled to active duty Sebastian Ugarte, legal advisor to Resident Commissioner Elizalde, with the rank of Major in the Philippine Army.

Colonel Melchor, former head of the Department of Engineering at the Philippine Military Academy, was sent to the United States in 1940 for graduate studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Following this he spent months at Jost Point and Annapolis as an official observer. A regular officer of the Philippine Army, Col. Melchor has been rendering service to the U. S. Army on the staff of the Engineer Board at Fort Belvoir. His work has been described as “an invaluable contribution to the advancement of science and the defeat of a common foe.” It was at the recommendation of President Quezon that Secretary of War Stimson ordered Colonel Melchor to Fort Belvoir.

Major Ugarte has been appointed Executive Officer in the Department of National Defense. He came to the United States in 1939 to serve as legal advisor to the Resident Commissioner. He enlisted in the Philippine Army shortly after war broke out, and attended the School of Infantry at Fort Benning, Georgia. On graduation he returned to serve the Philippine Government. Called to active duty as of August 1, Major Ugarte will continue serving the Resident Commissioner in a legal capacity as well as assuming his duties in the Department of National Defense.
